This cell is used quite extensively for experimental purposes where a constant potential is required. The zinc is usually amalgamated (covered with mercury) to prevent the wasting away of the zinc when not actually producing a current in the external circuit. Commercial zinc dissolves in sulphuric acid even when the external circuit is open because the zinc is impure. Local action is set up between these impurities and the zinc so that a number of small internal batteries are formed. This results in the zinc being consumed without any available voltage at the terminals. To prevent this action the zinc is cleaned and covered with a layer of mercury, which process is known as amalgamating. The cell to prevent deterioration should be disassembled when not in use.

Gravity cell—The principle of this cell is the same as that of the Daniell cell but instead of the porous cup to separate the liquids the difference in gravity of the copper sulphate and the zinc sulphate causes them to remain separate. This cell is much used in telegraph and signal work as it must be kept on a closed circuit to operate successfully.

The copper electrode is placed at the bottom of the container and covered with copper sulphate crystals. The zinc electrode is suspended from the top edge of the container and the jar filled with dilute zinc sulphate or dilute sulphuric acid.

When first set up the internal resistance of this cell is quite high, but when short circuited for some time, this resistance decreases due to the formation zinc sulphate. To prevent evaporation the surface of the liquid is covered with a mineral oil.

When the battery is working properly the line of separation between the copper and zinc sulphates or the "blue line" should be about halfway between the two electrodes.

Leclanche cell—This cell is a single fluid cell using a solution of sal-ammoniac with electrodes of zinc and carbon. The carbon is enclosed in a porous cup and surrounded with manganese dioxide and broken carbon. The sal-ammoniac diffuses thru the porous cup to the carbon and forms the conducting medium between the two electrodes.

The initial e. m. f. of this battery is about 1.5 volts. This falls off more or less when the current flows, as the hydrogen around the carbon electrode is not oxidized as rapidly as formed. The cell recovers however when left on open circuit and is suitable for intermittent duty, as signal bells and telephone work, and need not be disassembled when not in use.

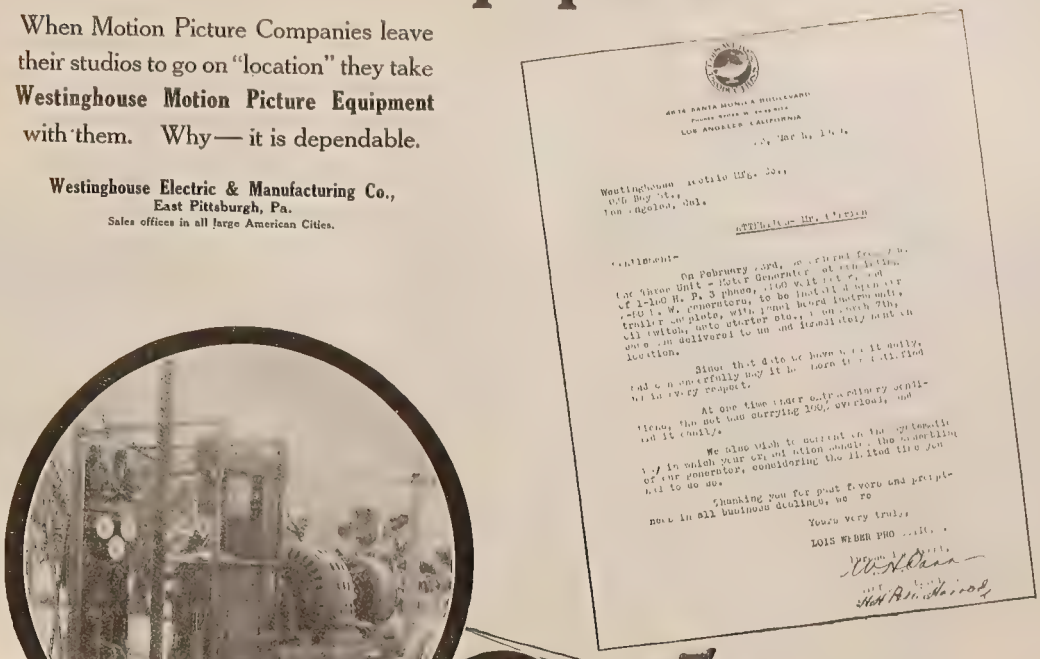
Dry Battery—The dry battery is quite similiar to the Leclanche cell with regard to its make up and chemical action. This cell is a modification of a liquid cell in which only enough electrolyte is used to moisten the absorbent material between the two electrodes. This material may be pulp wood, blotting paper, or similar material. The positive pole is a carbon rod which may be of any convenient shape, and the negative pole which acts as a container is a zinc cylinder about 6" high and 2½" in diameter, the bottom of the container also being of zinc.

The absorbent material is saturated with sal-ammoniac and zinc chloride, the zinc chloride being used to prevent rapid deterioration which would otherwise take place on open circuit. The space between the absorbent material and the carbon electrode is filled with granulated carbon and manganese peroxide, the latter being a depolarizer. The top of the battery is sealed with a pitch composition to prevent evaporation of the electrolyte.

The e. m. f. of new cells is between 1.5 and 1.6 volts, the decrease with age on open circuit being very small. An open circuit voltage of less than 1.5 is an indication of serious deterioration. Due to the relatively rapid polarization and increase of internal resistance with use, the average terminal voltage, during the life of the cell, is about 1. volt. The internal resistance of a dry battery when new is about 0.1 ohm.

A measure of the value of a cell may be determined to a certain extent by a short circuit current test, i. e. the current produced thru an ammeter having a relatively small resistance connected directly between the terminals of the battery. This test should be made at a normal temperature or about 60 degrees F.

The value of the short circuit current should be between 16 and 25 amperes. A battery giving a reading of more than 25 amperes is liable to polarize rapidly, and a reading of less than 18 is an indication that the battery has been made a long time or that cheap material has been used.



The shelf-life of a dry battery is the time which the cell may stand stored on open circuit without the short circuit current falling below 10 or 12 amperes. This current is about half the short circuit current of the cell when new.

An ordinary painted muslin sheet presents a surface which is quite diffuse, that is, a light beam thrown upon it, will be spread in practically all directions; with a reflecting type screen, the light beam is thrown to a greater or less degree directly back in much the same way that a mirror throws back the light striking upon it.

If a house were only a few feet in width and the audience were directly in front of the screen, i. e. in line with the projection machine, a large mirror, slightly frosted, would serve fairly well for a screen. To spread the picture out, however, over a wide house means roughening the surface of the screen considerably, so that the light rays will be scattered instead of coming directly back.

A combination therefore, of a mirror surface and a scattering or diffuse surface is the most desirable, and is found in the prepared screens.

The matter of a projection lens is of equal importance. When the picture is taken, the camera lens used is, the very best obtainable, costing perhaps six or eight times that of the ordinary projection lens. A film, then, taken with a good lens, and projected with a poor one, will never give a first-class picture. A few extra dollars in lenses, means in the long run, money in the exhibitor's pocket.

With the Mazda lamp and the prismatic condenser, a No. 2 lens gives additional light on the screen. The following table shows the increase:

Diameter of Lens	Percent Light
(No. 1 lens) 1¾"	100%
(No. 2 lens) 2½"	204%
3"	319%

(Lens used in this test were 5½" focus.)

If, to refer to our analogy again of a stream of water, we were to place two drinking cups (one 1½" in diameter, the other 2½" in diameter) under a faucet which was giving out water spread thru a considerable angle, we would probably catch much more water in the 2½" diameter cup. The same reasoning applies to the diameter of projection lenses.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

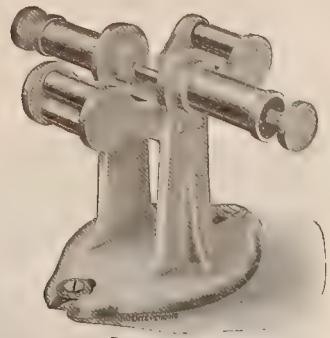
Discussion of General Advantages of the White Flame Lamps for Photography

THE following ten points repeat a few of the advantages of the flame lamps for photographic artists; the greatest efficiency; best color duplicating daylight; instant response when the current is turned on; less unsteadiness from fluctuating line voltage; wearing part of smallest cost per unit; most rugged to all kinds of mechanical and electrical abuse and to adverse weather conditions; lowest cost of installation and operation; can be used for spot lighting or with screen for diffuse lighting or with reflector for indirect lighting; largest candlepower per single unit and maximum portability in proportion to candlepower.

Special Lighting Effects

In considering the lighting of moving picture studios, we will consider first overhead lighting and then side lighting. In regard to overhead lighting there are two classes—diffused and concentrated. The diffuse lighting is often obtained in the glass studios by use of overhead flame arcs which occupy only a small area and allow considerable of daylight to enter the scene. The concentrated overhead lighting is secured by mounting in a large reflector a score of flame lamps or by the use of very powerful spot light or flame searchlight. In overhead lighting with flame arcs for the Edison studio is shown in Fig. 18, and for the Vitagraph studio in Fig. 20 and 21. In Fig. 19 there is shown overhead lighting with the blue bulb daylight incandescent lights in the Edison studio. Other modes of lighting are shown in Figs. 22, 24, 25 and 26.

For side lighting powerful flame lamps on stands with wheels are universally used. A well known illumination expert for motion pictures, Mr. Mayer of Wohl & Co., states that the best lighting for moving picture stage is ordinarily given by using 50 per cent more side lighting than top lighting, and that the so-called L arrangement (Fig. 23) is generally more effective for lighting than the box arrangement. The side lighting should have contrast to give the proper perspective. The angular sweep of the camera is usually such that the distance from camera divided by two gives the width of the operating field (close-ups of 4 feet cover an approximate width of 2 feet).



The diagram, Fig. 23, illustrates roughly, the L arrangement. In this arrangement there are shown the long wall of the scene to the short wall with the camera opposite the short wall and a number of side lights. The overhead lighting is not shown. Small reflectors are used with the side lamps to give slant light coming back toward the camera, but of course not into it. This gives a good reflection on surface sidewise to the light because the light is reflected so obliquely that a large amount is carried to the camera from sidesurfaces, and this arrangement gives the much desired line and Rembrandt effects, or as better known to the motion picture artist as molding and modelling effects. The working area of such a stage is therefore bounded by the long wall and short wall and the camera line, outside of which the lights must be. The distance outside should be sufficient to avoid harsh changes due to inverse square law.

The use of real scenery in place of painted scenery gives, of course, the best results. Real scenery should be lighted from the side. Painted scenery should be lighted directly from the front with the light striking nearly perpendicular. If the scene is set up with painted scenery, two sets of lighting should be used, one for the foreground and the other for the painted scenery.

4. Astigmatism is an aberration that is inherent to all oblique bundles of rays passing through a lens. If we consider such a bundle coming from a point passing through the lens at an angle of, say, 20°, the bundle does not meet in a point as one expects it would, but in two distinct lines at right angles to one another, and considerably separated. This aberration increases with the angularity of the bundles, and is the main cause of falling off of definition in the corner of the plate. You all must know the characteristic effect of Astigmatism—two distinct image places for vertical and horizontal gratings.

The new glasses that have been evolved, Dense Barium Crown glasses in particular, have been the means of enabling the designers to combat this aberration, and as a result no anastigmat exists today which has not some Dense Barium Crown lenses in its composition.

5. Coma is also an aberration affecting oblique bundles of rays, and can be explained more readily as spherical aberration of oblique bundles. Here the aperture of the lens is mainly responsible in causing coma to be of such order as to make sharp definition in the weights, suspended by 1¼ inch pipe measures 34 inches in length. The ball and weights aggregate 150 pounds. To facilitate carrying, the ball has a cross pipe through it to serve as handles. With camera loaded the complete outfit weighs about 250 pounds. The tripod legs corner of the plate impossible. The drawing will show the character of the coma aberration.

For central and axis-parallel rays, the image falls as before in O_1. If we imagine a photographic plate in this place, it is clearly seen what a fearful image the lens has made of a point in the object which it was supposed to reproduce as a point. In fact, there is no image at all, and unless this aberration is carefully attended to, it may completely spoil the best astigmatical correction. Coma follows in its development the same tendency as the astigmatism. It increases rapidly from the center of the plate outward.

Novel Camera Device for Marine Photography

Designed to overcome the effect of the camera's tilting while taking motion pictures on a ship's deck at sea, which makes the skyline appear to rise and fall, a device patterned after the marine gimbal has been constructed under the direction of C. E. Shurtleff, president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., now filming a series of Jack London novels at the Metro studios in Hollywood, for release by Metro.

The camera, resting on aluminum gimbals and equipped with ball bearings, may be turned completely around without moving the tripod. The legs are made of 1⅜ inch steel tubing, the lower ends being fitted with adjustable pointed tips. The pendulum, an iron ball, with auxiliary can be adjusted to give the camera an elevation of ten feet.

The gimbals were manufactured in New York from Mr. Shurtleff's plans and embody several new ideas. A severe test that included exposing several hundred feet of film, while the camera was vigorously rocked, proved the device a success. Mr. Shurtleff has taken steps to secure patents covering the most important improvements embodied.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

Will try and write a few lines from the moonshine state.

Now, because our State is famous for moonshine, doesn't make us all drink moonshine. However, I get a lot of moonshine on my way home nights. It seems to me that everyone is trying to place the blame on the other fellow in regards to punch hole signals.

I know of only one remedy for this and that is to put a secret service man on the trail. A man who knows the profession from A to Z can tell the moment he looks into the Projectors Booth where any damage is being done to the film—just by the appearance of the booth. Some one suggested a smaller label to put on the bands instead of the box.. Take a look at the ones enclosed which I recently had printed at very little cost (I had to omit the league cut because I didn't have it).

This town at present is 100% N. A. M. L.

Those were mighty fine, neat looking and well designed labels you enclosed with your letter. From the many letters we get advising the use of a smaller label there is no doubt but that we will have to have all future ones made according to the general wish.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

(Goldwyn-Bray Strip—One Reel)

STOP motion is used apain in the first part of this strip, and illustrates very well the opening of buds into full-blooming flowers. These are all close-ups and tinted, and an audience will find real interest in them. For they are unique and educational without being in the least bit boresome. Dr. Simon Flexon, head of the Rockefeller Institute, has been "shot" for the section of the reel dealing with "Master Minds of America." He is seen at work in his laboratory, and we are given a few views of germ culture and some analytic experiments. The cartoon, the third portion of the strip, is of the "polite" type, being satirical drawings on the change of dress and mannerisms during the past forty years. It is entertaining, but aims to be clever rather than laugh-provoking. It is also relentlessly clean. The strip on the whole contains considerable interest for any class of audience.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Nothing But Girls"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One Reel—Fox)

MUTT AND JEFF invade a young ladies' seminary in this latest comic. Jeff disguises himself as the physical training professor and proceeds to give the girls a lesson. He proves very proficient in archery, only Mutt is hiding behind the target and the results are disastrous. There is hardly enough new stuff in the reel to make it more than average pleasing. The best bit is when Jeff and the aged professor drink a little too much together and enact a drunk scene. This is, however, entirely inoffensive, as is the entire reel.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes"

(Selznick)

IF you don't mind the coincidental twin sister idea and the double exposure, with its necessarily stilted action, you will have a good picture in this latest Elaine Hammerstein vehicle. The star is chiefly responsible for the good impression that this picture leaves. Despite the fact that she is almost identical in make-up and dress in both roles (for the twins are both modern New York girls) Miss Hammerstein has seen to it that the audience never mistakes the young lady of the chorus for her more conventional sister, and vice versa.

The story is just what you have learned to expect of a dual role drama. Rosalie is a lovable, true young wife, her twin is an adventuress with a shady past, and twin number one is blamed, of course, for all her sister's escapades. Her husband learns his error in the end and the two are united. The author has gone back to war days for the setting of the story, and the opening scenes are in an army cantonment. Only one brief flash of the trenches is shown, and then the action shifts to America after the war.

It would seem that this picture would have held much more interest had it come a year sooner. Hasty marriages just before the soldier-husband sailed for overseas, the regret of his apparent mistake, and then the happy reunion after the war—all this would have been far more timely and interesting when the transports were bringing home the troops. The director has managed to inject several real thrills in the scene where the star is alone in the house with the body of the man, who is thought to have been murdered. To do this, however, he was obliged to omit what might have been a dramatic scene of the husband's return. A sub-title preserves the continuity, but does not entirely satisfy.

The production is very elaborate. Some excellent interior shots are worked in. The entire cast is up to the mark, and the star ought to win new admirers in this picture. She shows up well in the emotional scenes and displays distinct personalities in the two different roles.

Mutt and Jeff Cartoon

(Fox—One Reel; "The Bowling Alley")

WE believe this one-reel animated cartoon is better than its immediate predecessors. It will please more in big cities and smaller ones where bowling is indulged in, for to the fraternity of alley fans, it will be a scream. In the rural districts, or among an audience where the game is as little known as cricket, some of the comedy is lost. Jeff is to play the champion bowler for the championship, but upon accidently being knocked out by Mutt, is unable to bowl. So the little fellow takes his place and after making the balls do some clever tricks wins the game. The reel is full of such stunts as Mutt tieing a knot in his neck to register curiosity. We believe that more comedy could be obtained by cleverly drawn facial expressions, rather than forcing our two friends into absurd physical deformities.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Gingham Girl"

(Two-Reel Mack Sennett Comedy—Released by Famous Players-Lasky)

"THE Gingham Girl" is quite an improvement on the late program releases from the Sennett studios not that in plot or business provided there is so much that is really new but because the so-called "old stuff" has been given a new twist and for the reason that the action is good throughout. A white duck figures in the first part of the offering which together with a fox terrier also contributes in lifting the picture from the plane of ordinary slap stick.

The story told is of the usual low comedy vintage, the girl, who has a fortune with all the males in the cast trying to marry her. The last part of the picture contains some trick camera stuff which registers as exceptional.

Length 2 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Hope of Adventure"

(Bruce Scenic—Educational—One Reel)

ROBERT BRUCE has traveled around enough to appreciate the comforts and discomforts of a hobo's life. He has been a "knight of the open road" ever since he took up the cause of the camera. But he is trespassing further on a hobo's "property" by using the top of a moving train to capture some of his typical scenes. "The Hope of Adventure" as his latest issue is titled, is a novelty. As far as we are able to remember it is the first time that he has ever placed the tripod on the roof of a passenger coach. The little train is moving slowly from Skagway—its journey being over the White Pass to the Yukon region. It's a narrow gauge railroad which is presented here in the open spaces of Alaska.

It curves and winds itself about the mountains always climbing until the White Pass is reached then the journey becomes easy. A little speed is gathered when Bennett Lake is visible and the ride alongside the shore is quite enchanting. The train has glided through tunnel after tunnel and when it is in the open, wide vistas of Nature's art make a feast for the eye. The Yukon is reached and the photographers and explorers are safely launched in a small flat-boat. They are still searching for adventure. Yet they cannot deny that riding on the roof of a train as it glides along in a snake-like course is not adventurous. It looks like a hazardous feat to use. The offering is highly picturesque and measures up to the Bruce standard.—LAURENCE REID.

"School Days"

(Larry Semon Special Comedy—Produced by Vitagraph)

"SCHOOL DAYS," with Larry Semon as chief funmaker, sets a fast and furious pace in a burlesque of "kid" events in the school room for the first half, while the last half presents the same character "grown up" in an equally funny series of scenes where trick photography, fake brick walls, chases and all the orthodox slapstick material is presented in a hetrogeneous bunch, excusable in low comedy and especially so since this is Semon's dream as he sleeps in the school room.

With the exception of a scene or two where some of the characters wallow around in mud holes, the offering is exceptional. Length, 2 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON

"MRS. TEMPLE'S TELEGRAM"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Bryant Washburn Is Fairly Successful in Adapted Farce

TWENTY years or more have gone by since "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" first appeared on the stage a long enough time for the present generation to be entirely ignorant of the fact that it once made their parents and grandparents rock with laughter. The original farce carried such a full quota of humorous situations and dialogue that it sort of established itself as a model of its kind. The piece set such a rapid pace for itself that its screen version was bound to be brought into comparison and naturally the celluloid treatment suffers. The crisp and sparkling dialogue is missing, although the subtitles are the funniest thing about the picture.

The theme itself, which is based upon the idea of curing a young bride of foolish jealousy, has become hoary with age since it has formed the background of nearly every farcical film. So interest falls upon the interpretation, and it must be said that Bryant Washburn has appeared to better advantage in several instances. True it is a well-made picture, the continuity flowing along easily and spontaneously, and with a fair amount of humor generated. But one expects greater things from a farce which was originally a knock-out. In all fairness the figures in the plot are not well caricatured, with the exception of the role played by Walter Hiers. Most of them have failed in shading their parts or getting the full humorous values.

Were it not for the captions the piece would disclose very few comic highlights. We noticed that the Rialto audience laughed more at the word pictures than at any situation or climax. The 'telegram" of the title comes in when the suspicious wife endeavors to call her husband's bluff and the latter involving himself deeper in a fabric of lies as well as some innocent parties. The conclusion shows that the "complications" engineered by the other woman (the wife's best friend, incidentally) are simply for the purpose of curing the latter's jealous disposition. Even in a farce truth must be presented even though it is exaggerated. Here the wife is shown as considerable of a dunce when she seemed to be gifted with a remarkable intuition. A fair picture which might have been funnier had not so much been expected from it.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

A comedy which long endured on the stage as one of the most humorous pieces ever written has been transferred to the screen. The name of it is "Mrs. Temple's Telegram." Containing as it does picture possibilities it is certain to meet with responsive enthusiasm by patrons of the ———— theatre when it comes on ———— with Bryant Washburn as the star. "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" is ideally suited to his buoyant personality. It sparkles with rare comedy throughout its sixty minutes. It concerns a young married couple, the wife being extremely jealous of her husband. He becomes the victim of an innocent flirtation which keeps him out all night. Of course he knows his wife will never believe his story so he invents another one which in reality is putting the "frying pan into the fire."

Mrs. Temple suspects his tale is false and so sends the fatal telegram to his friend who is involved. Complications ensue rapidly with identities mixed up and romance finding expression in various ways. In the end Mr. Temple is given a clean bill of health and all is serene in the household. The picture is a lively piece of entertainment which doesn't carry a dull moment—the mix-up of husbands and wives contributing chiefly to the mirth. Mr. Washburn is assisted by the pretty Wanda Hawley and others. James Cruze is the director.

PROGRAM READER

Take a jealous wife; a husband who is unacquainted with members of the feminine sex, but who is eager to indulge in flirtations—and the result is either trouble or a highly amusing series of events such as occur in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," which comes to the ———— very shortly. As a stage farce the offering has amused millions and it is certainly destined for a long life (and a happy one) on the screen. Mr. Washburn fits the role of the husband who becomes involved with other men's wives and his own spouse's telegram, like a glove. And giving him adequate support is the delectable Wanda Hawley. Sixty minutes of solid laughter will greet this delicious comedy. It uncovers a variety of complications which are as sure as the tide.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a stage success to exploit in bringing the values of this picture before your public. The fact that it was considered one of the funniest comedies ever written and which has been seen by millions is something to be told in emphatic terms. Bring out that it fits Bryant Washburn like a glove. Your patrons are doubtless aware of the fact that this star is truly fortunate with his screen fare and his latest picture is entitled to rank with his other good productions. You can exploit this picture through teasers, catch lines and newspaper copy. Treat all your copy in a humorous fashion. Send out fake telegrams to your feminine patrons in the characteristic style used in the play. Play it up as a domestic comedy which measures out hilarious laughter.

"THE DARK MIRROR"
(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

Fairly Interesting Crook Melodrama with Dorothy Dalton

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE delves into psycho-analysis or the sub-conscious mind for the basic idea behind "The Dark Mirror," which in its screen form furnishes Dorothy Dalton with her latest expression. It surely makes a complicated picture– one too highly involved for the average spectator since he must concentrate his attention upon the idea as well as upon the wealth of melodramatic incident. "The Dark Mirror" is not easy to follow and there are times when its continuity becomes jumpy, due probably to faulty cutting. Psychic phenomena is difficult to understand even when sponsored by a Freud and offered in cold print. It becomes even more complex when used as the basis of dramatic conflict.

There has been some discussion by scientists of late who would have us believe that twins are guided by sub-conscious influence—that what one feels is also felt by the other. So it devolves upon Dorothy Dalton as a good twin to develop the same processes of mind of the bad twin—also enacted by the star. It never enters Mr. Vance's head to have the latter unconsciously influenced by the disciple of righteousness. Which is natural, because there would be no melodrama. The bad sister is a member of a vicious gang of the underworld. And during the good twin's sleeping moments she goes through the identical experiences—even to the extent of calling off the right names of the criminals. And so the good doctor, her fiance, elects to unearth the mystery in her life. And it is mystery—make no mistake about it.

The action is truly mystifying and burdened with highfalutin crook melodrama. When it becomes discernible at times it strikes the observer as not only improbable but impossible. The picture carries too much incident, although this element has its reward in the full measure of suspense. Only through the convincing quality of Miss Dalton's impersonation does the feature offer any sustaining interest. As the bad twin she seems to have nine lives and the contrast between the two characters is sharply differentiated. The conclusion brings out the relationship after the evil one is murdered. The romantic interest is a negligible factor. This picture may please those who revel in scientific theory. The majority may say—"what's it all about?"—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Dalton, the gifted star of the screen and stage, will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her latest photoplay entitled "The Dark Mirror." In this offering the actress plays a dual role which again establishes her versatility. The story itself is declared to be most unusual and absorbing in theme. It was adapted from Louis Joseph Vance's novel of the same name. One may define it as a thrilling romance of New York society and the underworld, with the star interpreting two vividly contrasted types

As Priscilla Maine, a society girl, she admires Dr. Fosdick, a young physician. To him she relates a series of dreams which have possessed her during slumber. In them she sees herself as a girl of the underworld who has several unusual adventures. She can even recall the names of the people in the visions. Later the doctor reads the account of a murder and recognizes the participants involved as those described by Priscilla. Mistaken for a girl of the slums, Priscilla is kidnapped and falls into some thrilling adventures that finally result happily. The picture is equal to the demands of Miss Dalton's talents, it giving her one of the strongest photoplays in months. Others who render good assistance are Huntley Gordon, Pedro de Cordoba and Walter Neeland. Charles Giblyn directed the feature from a scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton.

PROGRAM READER

Louis Joseph Vance knows how to write an entertaining story. Many of our patrons are doubtless familiar with his fiction and whenever his tales have been translated upon the screen they have made interesting pictures. "The Dark Mirror" is one of his most absorbing novels and it presents the versatile Dorothy Dalton in a dual role—a fascinating girl of New York's society and a product of the underworld. It may best be described as a tense romantic drama of the upper and lower stratas of New York life. Miss Dalton takes full advantage of the opportunities offered her and makes her acting compelling in every scene and situation. A capable supporting cast renders good assistance. Charles Giblyn directed the feature from a scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton. The picture comes to the ———— on ———— next————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a combination of author and star for exploitation. Everybody who indulges in fiction reading is familiar with the name of Louis Joseph Vance. He has had several of his contributions accepted for the screen and they have furnished good entertainment. And everybody is familiar with the work of Dorothy Dalton. Exploit the picture as a romantic drama of New York's society life and the life of the underworld. Tell that it details a considerable amount of vivid and vital action and furnishes the star with the best vehicle she has had in several months. The supporting players may not mean much to your patrons. But the steady picturegoer is certainly familiar with the names of the scenarioist and director. So play them up.

"THE FORTUNE TELLER"
(Capellani-Robertson-Cole)

Story of Mother-Love Theme Is Nearly Swamped with Incident

HERE is a perfectly obvious picture with a lot of old-fashioned ingredients which has for its motif the theme of mother-love, and the fact that it generates a good-sized heart-throb is not due to any directorial ability but to the sincere and convincing portrayal of Marjorie Rambeau. The star, literally, carries the heavy burden on her shoulders and her emotional capabilities are certain to react upon the feminine portion of an audience. She is not afraid of using make-up in getting into character, the sincerity of her work being realized in her frightful appearance as a fortune teller of a one-horse circus.

The plot is a cut and dried one and takes its characters through an assortment of hectic and arbitrary scenes—with the loud pedal being used continuously on the elements of pathos and cruelty. Harrassed by her cold and scientific husband, divorced and deprived of her child, she finds refuge with a scheming villain who is her nemesis from the time he drives her into his arms until he meets a timely death. Twenty years pass by and we see her as a derelict, her sober moments expressing the ache in her heart for her boy. And he comes into her life, although she is too ashamed to reveal her relationship. The action presents scene after scene of unadulterated melodrama and coincidence does much to rob it of reality. Counterplot and counterplot come forward—showing her struggle, the boy's and the attitude of the relentless father.

In fact one must accept it as pure fiction because of the crowded incident. And crude detail hasn't been spared in emphasizing the overworked pathos. In fact there is not a ray of sunshine throughout the six reels. The boy climbs to the heights due to his mother's sound advice. The mother? She, too, finds that her self-respect must keep pace with the boy and enters into a state of spiritual exaltation. Highly theatrical is the scene in the governor's mansion when the fortune teller, who has left the circus to be near her boy, is invited to show her skill as a psychic. And finally the truth prevails. Identities are established and the mother finds solace from her heart-ache. The picture holds the attention despite its crudites. E. Fernandez as the villain over-acted. The others fitted their parts.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The potency of mother-love and the mysteries of psychic phenomena are admirably illustrated through the art of Marjorie Rambeau in the adaptation of the Broadway success, "The Fortune Teller," which comes to the ———— theatre commencing ————. This subject is from the pen of Leighton Graves Osmon and it gives the star ample opportunity to display her pantomimic art. As the name of the picture indicates, the heroine, Renee Browning, is a fortune teller. She reads what the cards say at first for her own amusement, but when the cards repeatedly fortell trouble and eventually the prophecy comes true, she becomes a professional fortune teller—a seeress.

It is while following her profession that her psychic powers are actually put to the test. How she meets the test remains for the picture to reveal, but it may be said that the revelation cannot fail to make a strong impression. Many big moments of the play hinge on psychic phenomena. But coupled with this subject is one that is deeper and easier to understand—the element of mother-love. Miss Rambeau gives a truly remarkable performance in the role of the seeress. Her assistants in the cast are tried and true film players and they contribute effective aid. The picture has been directed by Albert Capellani, who has been responsible for many fine productions.

PROGRAM READER

A picture of deep mother-love and the mysteries of psychic phenomena is "The Fortune Teller," the screen version of the Broadway success of the same name which comes to this theatre in the near future with Marjorie Rambeau. Psychic phenomena is a subject of much discussion these days and since everybody is talking about it, the screen shows itself as a timely medium for its expression. The acting of Miss Rambeau in this feature is truly marvelous. Her grasp of the import of the theme reveals pantomime at its highest. Other players who contribute to the entertainment are Raymond McKee, Frederick Burton and E. Fernandez. The picture is well fortified with action and suspense, romance and sentiment. And our patrons are assured of a most interesting hour when they come to the ———— on ———— the ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The theme of this play is based upon psychic phenomena—a subject which is being discussed throughout the length and breadth of America. Make mention that your patrons will obtain some thought on the question without having recourse to lecture accounts of scientists. The title is attractive and can be exploited in numerous ways. Tell something of the long run of the play when it appeared upon the stage. Bring out that the star is one of the best emotional actresses of the present time. Dress your lobby and the interior of the house to suggest the atmosphere. White and black color schemes would be effective. Feature the picture as a compelling drama of mystery and romance. Tell that it offers some of the strongest acting ever seen on the screen.

CATCH LINES

She was deprived of the custody of her child and forced to face the world disgraced, alone and friendless. What happened? See Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller."

Anita Stewart's Portrayal Compensates for Theatrical Story

ANITA STEWART'S ability to enact a dual role that of twin sisters, one blonde and evil, the other dark and good, is about the only point of interest in this screen version of Harold MacGrath's popular story, "The Yellow Typhoon." The director has gone to great length in presenting the power of heredity and in following this plan he has offered a prologue which drags its way interminably to the main line of action. When the plot is eventually unfolded there is revealed a sample of hectic melodrama a reminder, incidentally, of the old-time thrillers. The blonde becomes a wicked "wamp" and plays all her cards face-up on the table. Still she never fails to fascinate the sterner sex.

"Off with the old love, on with the new" seems to be her policy until she realizes that certain papers would be valuable. Then she gives up her "wampish" ways for the job of flirting with death or prison. The action takes her to Paris and the Orient and with stop-over privileges at Manila. There it is that her first husband (she is some bigamist!) comes back into her life. Ditto her sister, who has become identified with the Secret Service. What will perplex the average onlooker is her immunity from arrest and he will surely condemn the government agents as incompetent.

Finally the Secret Service party and the crooks are found together on the boat taking them to 'Frisco, the latter hiding in the steerage. Their plan of bombing the ship is frustrated and the papers are still safe when the Naval Lieutenant is locked in his hotel room. The crooks are still peering through the keyhole just as they did in Manila, and there is considerable footwork on the fire escape leading to his window. In the end their plot leads to their capture and in the melee the vamp is killed. Too much is taken for granted in the action. And coincidence is too arbitrary. Which does not do justice to the intelligence of an audience. There is incident a-plenty, once it gets started and by concentrating on the melodrama the romantic element is nearly forgotten. The backgrounds are praiseworthy and the acting up to requirements. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An adaptation of Harold MacGrath's interesting story, "The Yellow Typhoon," will appear at the ———— theatre commencing ———— with the talented and beautiful Anita Stewart as the star. The picture takes one around the world, the metropolis and fashionable watering places of Europe, the Orient and America, displaying all their strange customs, the glamour and gay lights. The star portrays the dual role of twin sisters. As one of them she is known as "The Yellow Typhoon." She kills an officer in a conspiracy against the government while the other, a secret service agent, witnesses the crime, and later aids in trapping the conspirators.

The picture abounds in swiftly moving action which is as adventurous as it is dramatic. In fact it may be said that "The Yellow Typhoon" is the most thrilling photoplay that Anita Stewart ever had. Certainly she has never been called upon before to display such histrionism as she exhibits here. The story has been adapted by Monte Katterjohn, one of the oldest scenarists in point of experience on the screen. He has taken advantage of the wealth of incident by exploiting the scenes for their full value. Miss Stewart's players are well selected for the demands of the story. Edward Jose is the director and he deserves credit for the rich production.

PROGRAM READER

Here is a picture with action in every foot of it. Our patrons who see Anita Stewart in the screen version of Harold MacGrath's story, "The Yellow Typhoon," are sure to react to its unbounded thrills. Nearly every scene carries adventure and the suspense is well sustained to the concluding scene. The star portrays a dual role of twin sisters of entirely opposite types. The story itself takes the spectator half way round the world. The romance is well flavored with pathos and a deep note of conflict runs throughout the drama. Miss Stewart's players include the reliable Joseph Kilgour, Ward Crane, Ed Brady and others. Edward Jose, as the director, invested the story with his customary atmosphere and highlights. The offering comes to the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Make a point to emphasize the melodramatic values attached to this picture. Bring out that it is written by Harold MacGrath and starring Anita Stewart. The title is attractive and should be exploited in posters and a lobby display. Tell that the star appears in the difficult assignment of a dual role. Feature the picture as a tense drama which is punctuated with action throughout its length. Make a bid to get the patronage of those who glory in stories with a punch. There is nothing you could link up with unless it is the name of the author and some of his novels. Your bookdealer will probably co-operate with you in bringing out this book and others from the pen of the author. Use a color scheme in your lobby and throughout the house—yellow for the background and blue for the trimmings. Use Oriental atmosphere.

"EVERYTHING BUT THE TRUTH"
(Universal)

Bedroom Farce, Only Mildly Amusing

MIXING up two young couples, and centering the action mostly in the boudoir, will hardly make as popular a picture as it does a stage play. Even two such comedians as Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, who get in good work, cannot keep this farce up to top speed, and the laughs are not over frequent. The story, once it gets started, depends for its humor wholly upon the complications which ensue when a bride and an engaged man are locked in a room all night by a lunatic. There are no novel or fascinating comedy situations; no real comedy characterizations, and the whole idea can be safely guessed at early in the picture. There are sub-titles galore and the spicy dialogue helps the picture along.

The picture is no more suggestive than the Broadway bedroom farce and no less so. Billy Hervey has a jealous fiancee, and Jack Elton and his wife are newlyweds. Jack goes forth on business, and his bride asks Billy, who is her next door neighbor, to drive her to a chicken farm to buy some eggs for hubby's breakfast. Billy does; they go in the wrong house, and an escaped madman and two assistants lock them in the bedroom all night. They try to lie out of it all in the morning, and find themselves getting deeper into the depths with every falsehood. Then a subtitle explains all about the lunatic. Some business of Billy's oil company with its irate stockholders is worked in, but has little to do with the story.

The art editor has made the sub-titles do some novel tricks, and these will probably get as many laughs as the picture itself. Both stars will please, but Eddie Lyons certainly did not overdo his part. In fact he seems to be lacking in "pep" in some scenes. There is nothing special in sets or scenery called for. You had better know your audience before you give them so many beds and snappy sub-titles in one picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Billy Hervey.....Eddie Lyons
Jack Elton.....Lee Moran
Helen Gray.....Katherine Lewis
Annabelle Elton.....Ann Cornwall
Doctor.....Nelson McDowell
Bookkeeper.....Willis Marks
Aunt.....Elizabeth Witt

Directed by Lyons and Moran.
Story by Edgar Franklin.
Scenario by Philip Hurn.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, both inimitable comedians, are co-starred in "Everything But the Truth," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. The story is by Edgar Franklin, one of the most successful and popular writers of farce comedies in the country. His stories are everywhere noted for their zest, originality, and sparkling humor.

"Everything But the Truth" is, of course, a love story, giving the two stars ample opportunity to draw forth laugh after laugh. Eddie Lyons, who will be remembered from the excellent two-reel comedies in which he appeared several years ago, and Lee Moran, who is equally well known, form a team that has no peer in the motion picture screen.

In this, their latest Universal picture, both are very much in love. Lee Moran is a newlywed, who cannot stand being separated from his wife for one minute at a time. Eddie Lyons is engaged to be married and is just about as bad. But fate mixes the two love-sick couples up and no end of complications ensue. An escaped lunatic helps to cause the trouble, when he insists that he is a doctor and imprisons two of them in a deserted house. Of course, it all sounds very "fishy" so Eddie Lyons and his friend's wife try to lie out of it. But lying does not pay and finally after telling "everything but the truth," they discover the lunatic's keeper and both couples are re-united once more.

In the cast besides the two stars are Katherine Lewis and Anne Cornwall, both capable supports for Lyons and Moran.

PROGRAM READER

After having been fed up with emotional motion picture dramas you will welcome such a light farce as "Everything But the Truth," which will run at this theatre on ————. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are the stars and neither will need an introduction to you. Both have been long before the camera and they have earned for themselves reputations equalled by no comedian in filmdom. Teamed together they make an unbeatable combination. In this Universal picture they have a story which will not allow you to keep quiet for one minute at a time, for it is one of the most laugh-provoking farces that have ever reached the screen. Both stars are very much in love in this picture. You know the kind—they can't leave the sweeties alone for even a director's meeting. And when the two couples get mixed up and an escaped lunatic locks the wrong two in a deserted house all night—well, that's when the comedy starts, and it doesn't stop until the final fade out.

SUGGESTIONS

Boost the two stars in this picture, and also give the author, Edgar Franklin, a share in your copy. The title affords opportunity for a teaser campaign if you want one. The following line would do: "Do you tell everything but the truth? It doesn't pay, and we can show you why." Use catch lines to get over the newlywed angle of this picture.

CATCH LINES

Newlyweds, attention! Here's the picture for you. A side splitting farce comedy, with all four principal characters very much in love.

THIS feature is well up to standard and should please any audience no matter where it is played. It has what we are all looking for nowadays—a pleasing combination. This is brought about by the selection of an interesting story, which unfolds very well, careful direction both in the action, which runs smoothly throughout and the selection of sets which were lavish in many instances, together with many beautiful exteriors and a well known cast which did very commendable work.

Margarita Fisher has a likable role which is never overdone either in the lighter or heavier moments and she wears many beautiful gowns which should be of interest to the women folks.

King Baggot, who plays the leading role seems to be getting in the honor class among actors upon the screen, if we may be permitted to say this, for it is his work which is superb in every way, especially his knowledge of the tempo of the various scenes which were difficult to handle, that held the story together in many instances and gave understanding to a part that would not be convincing in the hands of a less experienced actor.

The title which may be misleading in a way, in that it might suggest a biblical story, has nothing whatever to do with that world renowned book, but rather refers to the last remaining shekel of the thirty which Judas received for the betrayal of the Master. And it is because she married a man who is wealthy and whose "hobby" is the collection of valuable coins that trouble arose. He had secured possession of the most valuable coin in the world and it was said that he loved it even more than his wife.

He kept it in a safe place and warned his wife never to open the cabinet in which it was held. But as usual, the thing she was told not to do, she did, for her suspicions were aroused. She found it—and then she lost it, and in so doing very nearly lost her husband. But then a big surprise happens which brings love and happiness to the drifting couple.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Margarita Fisher in her latest American feature for the Pathe release will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next.

This is considered Miss Fisher's best picture to date for it gives her an opportunity to portray a character in which she is justly fitted and which should impress her followers, in a way that will surely give them interesting entertainment.

She loved her husband and he loved her. But there was one thing in this world which seemed to possess his soul. And what a peculiar thing it was—an old coin. He used to lock it in the cabinet and take it out occasionally and worship it. And he told her one day never to open the closet which held his precious keepsake.

Now this remark only served to excite her curiosity and she did just what she was told "not to do." So she opened the cabinet one day, during her husband's absence, extracted the coin and might have put it back, but at that particular moment an old sweetheart called and during the conversation which followed she lost it, believing all the time that he had mischievously taken it.

Of course she had to tell her husband about it and take the chance of being discovered in her former sweetheart's rooms in an effort to recover the precious "piece of silver." But then a wonderful surprise happened to her husband, for it seems he knew all the time that the coin he possessed was not genuine. And it was in this man's rooms that he recovered the original. See "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" and let it show you the surprise that brought happiness and love back to a drifting couple.

PROGRAM READER

Margarita Fisher in her latest American feature will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

This picture has a very pretty story which should amuse and please those who have the opportunity of witnessing it, and the pretty star has a role which is appealing and satisfying in every way. And then again she wears some very beautiful gowns which will certainly attract the eye of the feminine patrons.

She married a man who loved her but not with his whole heart and soul for there was another who had taken up his attention. But this other was not of the human variety. You couldn't guess in a thousand years what it was, unless you were told. It was an old coin but said to be of great value for it was thought to be the only remaining sheckel of the thirty Judas received for the betrayal of the Master.

Her husband kept it locked in a cabinet which he told her never to open. But she did just what he told her "not to do," for her curiosity was aroused and she could not help taking just "one little peep." She found it—and then she lost it and in so doing nearly lost her husband. But then a big surprise happens which brings love and happiness to the drifting couple.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this feature, your first bet, of course, is to exploit the star. Tell your patrons that she has a role which shows her off in a way that is bound to interest them.

But then she has the story which if not of the best is one that is certainly out of the ordinary and bound to impress those who witness it. And you need not be afraid to send out letters to your patrons, telling them that you are to play a picture which should interest them, for it surely will do this.

You might also mention the cast, which is a good one and includes such well known names as King Baggot, Forest Stanley and Lillian Leighton.

CATCH LINES

She loved him but she knew that she did not possess all his love. What was it that stood in the way? See "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver."

"FORBIDDEN TRAILS"
(Fox)

Buck Jones in Good Average Western

BUCK JONES' second starring vehicle contains enough plot to make it really interesting, and the star contributes his bit by getting in some good action. He has a free and easy mannerism and a pleasing personality, and is a good enough actor to get past the emotional spots in the picture in fine style. There is nothing extra big about the production, and the star does no daredevil stunts to leave any deep impressions, but on the whole it can be classified as sufficient entertainment for an audience that delights in a western drama, with a villain-punishing hero triumphant through the might of his two fists and trusty guns.

Jones plays "Squint" Taylor, youthful owner of a western ranch. A mining partner of his is murdered, and Taylor receives death-bed instructions to care for the daughter. But the girl is under the influence of an uncle, who in turn is dominated by the "heavy" who wants to cheat her out of her share in the mine. This villain is extra heavy, physically and theatrically speaking, and it is possible that Stanton Heck may be thought to have overdone his villainy. Taylor is kept from being installed sheriff and on the oath of a "greaser" is to be arrested for the murder of his old partner. But he puts up a fight and resists arrest and finally the greaser confesses to his perjury.

This is not, of course, an unusually strong plot, but there is enough of it there to keep up the interest, and it also provides the star with ample opportunities to ride and fight. The latter is done in a realistic and vigorous fashion. Winifred Westover plays opposite the star, and the story gives her very little to do except look pretty with her golden, curly hair. The rest of the cast and the cowboy extras are all satisfying and reflect good direction.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

"Squint" Taylor	Buck Jones
Marion Harlan	Winifred Westover
William Carrington	Stanton Heck
Davis	William Elmer
Sheriff Danforth	George Kunkel
Henry Parsons	Harry Dunkinson
Larry Harlan	Fred Herzog
Judge Butterfield	Edwin Booth Tilton

Story by Charles Alden Seltzer.
Scenario and direction by Scott Dunlap.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of the West will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. "Forbidden Trails" is the title, and Buck Jones, the new Fox star, is in the leading role.

Although Buck Jones is comparatively new in stardom, he has already made himself well known to thousands of fans. He was formerly a cowboy, horse breaker, and during the war served in the United States cavalry as a trainer of horses for the Allied armies. It was while he was in France that Mr. Fox was attracted by the skill of this young man and made him a screen offer.

"Forbidden Trails" is a ranch story, and one that gives this new star plenty of opportunity to display his wonderful horsemanship. Playing opposite him is pretty Winifred Westover, and others in the cast are Stanton Heck, George Kunkel and Fred Herzog. The picture deals with corrupt politics in a small western mining town. "Squint" Taylor, played by Buck Jones, is elected sheriff, but his enemies find technical grounds for declaring the election illegal. "Squint" does not carry the case to a higher court. Instead he tells the corrupt judge and crooked politicians just what he thinks of them, and when they resent it, he illustrates how they deal with dishonest "ward-healers" in the West, by punishing them all with his fists.

Buck Jones made good progress on the way to fame in filmdom when he made his first picture, and in the latest production, he has installed himself well among the leaders in stardom.

PROGRAM READER

If you like a picture that combines plenty of two fisted action with a clean and sweet love story your place is in this theatre on ———— to see "Forbidden Trails," the latest Fox picture starring Buck Jones. Jones is new to stardom, but he has a screen personality that will soon place him among the leaders in filmdom. He has been given a part in this picture that fits him like a tailor-made suit. It gives him sufficient opportunity to thrill you with his daring horsemanship and hard-hitting, quick-moving fists. It is a story of corrupt politics in the West, and the final downfall of the plotters. Besides the star there is a capable and pleasing cast, splendid direction, and excellent photography. And in addition the picture was taken among the beautiful mountains of Arizona, giving a wonderful scenic background for this entertaining story.

SUGGESTIONS

Buck Jones seems about the best bet in this picture. There are plenty of good stills you can use, showing him at his best. He has a picturesque history as a cowboy, horse breaker, and soldier in France. Get as much in the local paper as you can about this star, and his unusual horsemanship. From the title you can get material for a teaser campaign. You can also use a sign in front of your theatre reading—"Trespassing forbidden! This is a 'forbidden trail.' Buck Jones—sheriff." Being a Western, there is plenty of material for street parades or lobby displays.

CATCH LINES

Her father chose a husband for her, and she obeyed him. But then the husband was not a French count, but Buck Jones, the Fox star in "Forbidden Trails."

A thrilling story of the West, with Buck Jones, cowboy, soldier and actor, in the leading role.

Buck was full of lead but had enough strength left to shoot back just once. And once was enough when Buck used his gun.

"THE SILVER HORDE"

Interesting, But Rather Short on Drama and Action

THE photoplay version of "The Silver Horde" is an epitome of the complete novel, which rather lessens its dramatic values and results in a production considerably below that of most of Mr. Beach's stories, especially its immediate predecessor, "The Girl from Outside."

The principal fault of "The Silver Horde" lies in the fact that "it doesn't stay anywhere." The story begins in Alaska, jumps to New York and then goes back to its starting place, with a stop over at Seattle. Incidents that happened in the lives of its principal characters extending over at least a year are told in short and ever changing sequences. The action and the "punch," and the fine contrast of characters for which the Beach pictures are famous, is missing. There is some action, of course, but it is incidental and not vital.

Nevertheless the offering is a lot better than the average picture of today. There may not be much drama in viewing thousands of salmon departing from their native element through the ingenuity of man or in watching what happens to them before they reach the 'canned" stage, but the process is interesting. The feature boasts many very fine scenic backgrounds. Some of the snow shots are truly beautiful. The cast which interprets the various roles is universally good, but none are given an opportunity to impress exceptionally, including the ubiquitous Robert McKim as the bad, bar villain. Even "Cherry Mallotte," famous in the famous "The Spoilers," is a very ordinary person in "The Silver Horde." Truly the best parts provided are those given the salmon. Length, 6 reels. J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Wayne Wayland	R. D. MacLean
March	Robert McKim
Constantine	Hector Sarno
Swanson	Bull Durham
Thug	M. B. Flynn
Snowbird	Neola Mae
Thug	E. J. Denecke
Cherry Malotté	Myrtle Stedman
Big George Bolt	Frederick Stanton
Alton Clyde	Carl Gerard
Boyd Emerson	Curtis Cooksey
Mildren Wayland	Betty Blythe
Richard Jones	Murdock MacQuarrie

Scenario by Larry Trimble and J. E. Nash.
Directed by Frank Lloyd.
Photographed by William C. Foster.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Rex Beach's most famous story of Alaskan life "The Silver Horde" has been adapted to the photoplay as another of the Goldwyn special productions and will be the attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning ————.

For those who have seen the other Beach-Goldwyn pictures, "The Barrier," "The Girl From Outside," "The Silver Horde," will need no recommendation. Mr. Beach knows his Alaska and in his word painting of life in that land no one has ever reached him in the faithfulness of his portrayals. "The Silver Horde" is a melodramatic story woven about the salmon industry of Alaska and the capture of these fish for the cannery's plays no small part in the picture.

Like all of the Rex Beach stories as produced by Goldwyn, there is no particular star in "The Silver Horde," although the cast has been specially selected from the best talent in the country. The engagement of the picture at the ———— theatre is a notable event in local theatricals.

PROGRAM READER

For those who have enjoyed the pictures adapted from Rex Beach's stories, notable of which have been "The Spoilers," "The Brand," "The Girl From Outside," etc., the booking of "The Silver Horde" for a ———— days showing at this theatre beginning ———— will be an event not to be missed. "The Silver Horde" contains those rare dramatic qualities which have characterized Mr. Beach's former contributions to the screen. It is a story of the salmon canning industry of Alaska, the manner of capturing the great fishes and much that is beautiful scenically forming a pleasing background for the interesting and dramatic story. The cast which has been selected for the various roles is all star as has been Mr. Beach's custom in producing pictures from his novels. The picture is a fitting running mate for the big specials of the year shown at the ———— and is a guaranteed attraction. We have booked it firmly convinced that it will be hailed as the greatest feature of the season. Such has been the verdict of the patrons of such theatres as the Capitol, New York; the California, Los Angeles; the Imperial, San Francisco, where the production had pre-release showings.

SUGGESTIONS

The way to advertise "The Silver Horde" or any Rex Beach picture is to promise action and a melodramatic well developed story, in all publicity. For newspaper display use stills showing the big moments of the picture and explain the action by colorful selling talk even to the point of extravagance. Remind your patrons of the other Rex Beach pictures promising another feature of like quality.

Mention the hordes of salmon and the salmon canning industry which is a background for the production. Promise some beautiful locations as there are many people who care more for scenic shots than they do for the dramatic qualities of a picture. Opportunity for window display tie-ups are presented by the fact that the salmon industry is presented in the picture. A window of canned salmon and your advertising matter for the feature including stills which show the fish being captured and placed in the tins would be attractive. The 24-sheet stand is always effective in an Alaskan or Western picture, especially a Rex Beach production, as his name means something to every person. Use plenty of paper for this reason.

For stage settings we suggest inspection of a photograph to be found in the Service Bureau section. The same idea may be carried out for lobby display.

"THE GARTER GIRL"
(Vitagraph)

Good Combination Makes a Very Pleasing Picture

DON'T be afraid of this one Mr. Exhibitor. It may not be what is sometimes called a "world beater," but for real entertainment, the kind that holds your attention from beginning to end and takes your mind away from the cares and worries of the world and leaves you in a pleasant state of mind, this picture couldn't be beaten.

The story is by O. Henry and contains the usual surprises, suspense, humor and love interest that have made this wonderful story writer famous.

And right here we're going to give credit to the scenario writers, Lucien Hubbard and William B. Courtney, for the beautiful way they have handled the continuity and the many other things that go to make a story successful in scenario form. As far as we could see there wasn't a slipup in the detailed arrangement of the scenes as they followed one another, thus giving the story the required amount of balance and at the same time allowing the picture to tell its story in a quiet and understandable way.

The scenes are laid in the big city and the small town, the latter ones showing some beautiful snow shots which are a pleasure to behold.

The star is a splendid type in the role for which she is cast and knows how to portray the vaudeville dancer who has become discouraged with her lot and has sought refuge in the small town, in a way that gives conviction. In the opening scenes, as the dancer, she gives a splendid impersonation of what a vaudeville headliner would do on and off the stage, and in the small town stuff she is simple and convincing.

And let us not forget to mention Edward Griffith, who directed the feature, for he has taken great pains in bringing out the points of the story and has told it as it was written, in a quiet subdued manner.

Earle Metcalfe gives a splendid characterization of the "vaudeville partner," and Rod La Rocque is a typical "small town" minister.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Rosalie Ray ..... Corinne Griffith
Lynette ..... Sallie Crute
Brad. Mortimer ..... Earl Metcalf
Arthur Lyle ..... Rod La Rocque

Story by O. Henry.
Scenario by Lucien Hubbard and Wm. B. Courtney.
Directed by Edward Griffith.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Corinne Griffith in her latest Vitagraph feature, "The Garter Girl," will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is an O. Henry story and contains the surprises, suspense, humor and love interest peculiar to this wonderful story writer. And it affords Miss Griffith a diversity of action and characterization that tax her talents to the utmost.

The story tells of the life of Rosalie Ray, a vaudeville actress, who every afternoon and evening swings over the audience and kicks a garter from her shapely leg.

This kind of work does not appeal to the young performer, for her finer nature rebelled against this kind of work—and then again it disgusted her to see the way the young men and old fought for possession of this memento. Still it was in her act but she only did it as a means of making her livelihood. And then again the advances made by men in her profession and by her manager, Brad. Mortimer, bring her to a decision to give up the business.

We next see her in a small hamlet where she has sought seclusion and has become a soloist in a church choir. And it is here that she believes that she has found true happiness and love in the form of the minister with whom she has become engaged.

But, alas, things do not turn out as she had hoped to have them, for one day by accident she opens a treasure box and what she sees there convinces her that all men are alike.

And then she returns to her old life—and to Brad Mortimer.

PROGRAM READER

Corinne Griffith will appear in this theatre in her latest Vitagraph feature, "The Garter Girl," on ———— of next ————.

The story is by O. Henry and is said to contain all the elements of success, which have made this wonderful writer of American life popular.

And Miss Griffith is said to have a role which affords her great diversity of action and characterization and one that will surely appeal to those who admire the little star's work.

She was a headliner in vaudeville and had everything her heart desired. But she did not like her act, at least the part in it where she swung over the audience and kicked a garter from her shapely leg. And then again the men disgusted her by the way they fought for this particular memento. She gave up this life with its vanities and went to live in the small town where she could get closer to nature and real people. Then she met the man, in the shape of a minister, whom she believed to be her ideal and she became engaged to him. But she received a rude awakening. He did not turn out to be the man she believed him to be—and then she returned to her old life.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a typical O. Henry story which is told in a very pretty way and should give the patrons good satisfaction.

Bill it up as strong as you care to without exaggeration and you need not be afraid of having any disappointed patrons.

Give O. Henry a big spot in your advertising and run a little story on his life, giving at the same time the names of some of his books and let your people know that they are read as much to-day as they were years ago. Of course you know of the usual tie-up with the book store. If you can arrange it, however, it is a splendid opportunity for increasing your patronage.

Then again the title affords splendid opportunities for exploitation and there are so many ways of "losing a garter" and "finding one" that they are too numerous to mention.

"THE DEVIL'S CLAIM"
(Haworth-Robertson-Cole)

Japanese Star in Fantastic, Involved Story

THE "story within a story" idea is resurrected in this latest Hayakawa picture. The star is a Persian author, and the greater part of the picture is a picturization of a serial which he is supposed to be writing for a popular magazine. And perhaps this fact—that we are only witnessing a magazine story—will serve as an excuse for the fact that it is not true to life, and becomes so extremely involved and improbable at times that it is almost reminiscent of a serial.

And it is for this reason that, despite the star's good work and that of his supporting cast, we believe the picture will not be taken seriously. It starts off well enough in the Latin quarter of New York, with the Persian scribe seeking inspiration for further fiction, having broken a girl's heart to get the atmosphere for his first novel. A second young lady—a sociological student—proceeds to inspire him. And she inspires such things as a stolen talisman, a sect of devil worshippers, blind-folded marriages, Egyptian sorceresses, and reincarnated evil spirits. The final absurdity is a knockout. In order to duplicate the fingerprint of the unseen wife, the thumb of one girl is in some unexplainable fashion grafted on to that of a second woman.

Of course all this unreal, unaccounted for, exaggerated melodrama is half apologized for by falling back upon the story within a story theme. It ends happily when the final installment is inspired, and the author returns to his heartbroken little Persian lady, who chants bits of Omar Khayyam. The same characters play in both stories, and Colleen Moore makes a pleasing and soulful Oriental. Rhea Mitchell also satisfies. There are good exteriors and quite successfully created Oriental atmosphere. The author even wears an Oriental turban in the streets of New York. It is hardly possible that an audience will have much praise for it, but the sudden thrills and the mystic and supernatural element injected may carry the picture across.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa, the talented Japanese actor, is the star in "The Devil's Claim," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Hayakawa is far too versatile to confine his work to the portrayal of Japanese roles only, and in this latest picture is seen as a Persian author, whose novels have brought him fame and success in America, and made him the idol of all Greenwich village.

But this author is one who draws his inspiration from real life.. He experiments with the hearts of women in order that he may gain material for his books. And Indora, the little Persian girl, who, illtreated as she was, still loves this "mental vampire," prays that he will return to her. But Akbar Khan, the author, is to write another novel, and again seeks inspiration.

This he does and as we see the tale unrolled on the screen before us, we see a story of Oriental intrigue and treachery. The setting is Paris, and the characters all belong to a mysterious cult of "devil worshippers" who are seeking the return of the talisman which has been stolen from their long lost temple in Egypt. It is a story that is filled with action, thrills, and clever characterizations. The picture will make you think of that strange far-off country—Egypt, and the mysteries of the occult sciences.

The star is supported by pretty Colleen Moore, and Rhea Mitchell, both of whom are well known to followers of the screen as clever and attractive actresses.

PROGRAM READER

Once more we can announce the arrival of that popular star, Sessue Hayakawa, who has made for himself a name that may be envied by any other screen star in America. This time he plays the part of a Persian author, in a story that will thrill and please you. You can't help liking Hayakawa, and you will feel the same way about Rhea Mitchell and Colleen Moore, who support him in this picture.

The story is one of the Orient, woven into a second laid in the Latin Quarter of New York. It is a love story intermingled with one of Hindu intrigue and mysticism, and one that you cannot allow yourself to miss.

SUGGESTIONS

Tell your Hayakawa fans that this is a picture that gives their favorite every opportunity to please and thrill them. If you have played "The Beggar Prince," "The Tong Man," "The Dragon Painter" or the "Brand of Lopez," recall all these. Insist that it is a departure from his usual role. Play up the supernatural and mystical element of the story. Arouse the interest in your copy by telling a little about the "transmigration of souls." The atmosphere lends itself to stunt exploitation if you want to go in for it. The Hindu costumes on men will make an impressive appearance, and if you do not want a parade, use one or two good types in your lobby.

CATCH LINES

Hayakawa, the Japanese star, in a picture that will thrill, amaze and satisfy you.
The most entrancing and mysterious people in the world are the Hindus. Come see this picture that will show you their secret intrigue and thrilling romances.

And don't forget to exploit your star in a big way for she is typical in the part both in acting and action.

CATCH LINES

Why did she leave the stage where she had attained success and go to the small town where everything was different? See Corinne Griffith in "The Garter Girl."

Do You Want Honest Reviews?

¶ The truth of the review situation as it affects trade papers is an important matter to every exhibitor and producer.

¶ The exhibitor knows its importance to him in his daily business.

¶ The producer should appreciate its importance when he realizes that the only trade paper that is of value to him is the trade paper that is believed—that is honored and followed because of its intelligent editing and courageous upholding of its convictions.

¶ Turn to William A. Johnston's editorial in this issue and learn—the truth.

JUST AS AUDIENCES crowded your theatre to see Cecil B. De Mille's "Why Change Your Wife?" they will crowd it to see "Old Wives for New."

When this epoch-making production was released there were fewer theatres and fewer theatre-goers.

It is the first of De Mille's series on married happiness, that marvelous series which, culminating in "Why Change Your Wife?", established new standards for the motion picture.

Those who saw it then want to see it now. Those who didn't see it always wished they had. Show it to them!

New prints and a complete new line of accessories ready.

in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

"REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM" is a never-to-be-forgotten masterpiece, a picture that still stands as the best Mary Pickford has ever made.

Many people have seen it, and to them it is a wonderful, living memory. But many others have not.

Show it to them now! They all want to see it—those who saw it then and those who wish they had!

New prints and a complete new line of accessories ready.

From the play by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson. Scenario by Frances Marion.

HUGE!

A PICTURE that has laid hold of the public imagination by reason of the hugeness of its canvas. Great deserts across which slow moving caravans wend their way—where the Black Horse Troop swoops down to levy tribute—where the Virgin, raging at their head, storms the gates of Buskra to save her American soldier lover from the doom of Achmet Hamid. A stupendous photo-drama that fills the mind with emotions as huge as its wondrous pictures. Just exactly the kind of a super-cinema for which the cinema was invented.

"Another Drama Triumph"
— Wid

Says WID in his criticism; "If you played 'BLIND HUSBANDS', your people are well aware of what Von Stroheim can do. So well aware in fact that they will flock to see his second picture when his name is displayed. Don't make any mistake about this director: He's there. Besides being strong for effects, he knows his drama and knows how to work up strong dramatic sequences on the screen. Give him all that he's worth. Remember 'BLIND HUSBANDS'—then go to it with this."

HAVE just read synopsis and seen stills of your production of "Dollars and the Woman." Regard this as one of the greatest present-day themes, and urge you to special efforts to push this production. Photoplay is playing it up. Fictionized version strong as one of its best editorial features. It is a great domestic sermon that should show the way to happiness in these days when the living problem brings despair, misunderstanding and consequent unhappiness into thousands of homes.

"Dollars And The Woman"

TIMELINESS—

ALICE JOYCE has the play of the hour in "Dollars and the Woman." With the high cost of living rampant and incomes unreasonably inflated, the theme of this extraordinary play, by Albert Payson Terhune, dealing with extravagance when money is plenty, not alone is a delight to lovers of good pictures, but is pertinent to the present-day mode of living.

As Madge Hillyer, Miss Joyce, through extravagance, so well learns the misery of poverty that when wealth comes again she is not capable of enjoying it. The story is new—up to the minute.

ALICE JOYCE

"Dollars And The Woman"

THIS inspiring, human photoplay is a segment of American life that might have been plucked from your own neighborhood. Madge and Dan Hillyer with all of their joys and sorrows, their faith and their follies, may be living right around the corner from you, in the next block, or just across the street.

For Madge and Dan were just of ordinary clay. But they were good clay. Two men loved Madge. She turned her back on the golden apples that one offered her and was content to munch a daily crust with the other. She gambled on the futures of Fate and she willingly changed herself from a gay peacock to a little drab wren to show her faith in Life and Love. And the gods gave her metal more than the acid test. Into a home where the bluebird of happiness held forth came the dragon of despair and jealousy. Invisible but torturing fires consumed the souls of Madge and Dan, but when they had burned down, the gold was there.

You will say to your people when you see this splendid photoplay, "Come and let us look at ourselves." And when they come and probe into the hearts of Madge and Dan they will be sure to find there many ringing echoes of their own

MASTERPIECE OF MOTION PICTURES

"Courage of Marge O'Doone" Leaves Lasting Impression on All Who See It.

TELLS THRILLING STORY

It is seldom that a motion picture is produced that will leave the impression that James Oliver Curwood's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" leaves upon audiences. It is truly a picture in a thousand and one that will long be remembered. The scenic beauty of the landscapes, the cleverness of the players, the intenseness of the story, the faithfulness of the director and the introduction of animals in strong roles are some of the things that make "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" different from the average picture.

Every member of the cast, which includes Niles Welch, Pauline Starke, George Stanley, Jack Curtis, William Dyer, Boris Karloff, Billie Bennett and James O'Neill, is indeed an all-star organization. Each player is an artist in his or her line and works in harmony with the others. The production moves like clock work, and even Tara, the trained bear, and Baree, the outlaw dog, seem to know what is expected of them. These dumb animals feel the importance of their roles and attack each piece of difficult business with all the cunning known to the animal kingdom.

If Director David Smith went after realism, he certainly got it and the atmosphere of the north as well. The picture was taken a few miles out from Truckee in the Rockies during a severe blizzard. The players withstood all of the hardships of a life far away from civilization in order to produce genuine color and the result obtained is worthy of all the sacrifices made. The savage dogs, the bear fight, the thrilling escape from "The Nest," the meeting of David and Marge, the death of Tavish and the scene on the mountains just as the dawn is breaking on a new day are some of the big situations that grip the spectator and are recalled long after the picture has fadded from the screen. It is a big production, handled in a big way and presented with all of the splendor and magnificence known to screen art. It is a travelogue as well as one of the most thrilling and interesting stories ever filmed.

TWO STANDARDS

Above are given the exact dimensions of the two Film Standards

THE PROFESSIONAL STANDARD

SAFETY STANDARD

THE one on the right is the PROFESSIONAL STANDARD and is used where the law demands and specifies the required protection. Concrete—masonry—and other protective measures.

THE one on the left is the SAFETY STANDARD used before small audiences in Home, Church, Lodge and places where protection must be in the film, because from the very nature of the case large concrete rooms cannot be built and the pictures must be operated by movable and portable projectors.

THESE are the audiences which breed picture fans. They hasten the growth of our "Potential Audience" and hence help the growth of the industry both for the Theatre Man and the Producer.

That's why it broke records in New York, the critics say:

RECORDS ARE BROKEN

"An excellent drawing card. Straight melodrama of the purely sensational type with the element of suspense well developed and thrills plentiful. Fast action and skilful handling. Plot interesting. Love romance, perilous adventure and exciting situations combine to please all lovers of high tension melodrama. Anita Stewart plays a dual role with alluring charm in one instance and a subtle sense of suggested evil in the other. Her admirers will mark this as her best screen performance. Supporting cast admirable. Tell your patrons that this great picture broke records at the Strand theatre, New York. Play it up heavily as presenting Anita Stewart in a decidedly new role."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

GOOD AUDIENCE PICTURE

"A good audience picture. Miss Stewart in a dual role has succeeded in portraying the two distinct characters in a splendid way. Appeals to a lover of thrills. Lavish sets depicting a gambling house in the Orient."—Wids.

INTRIGUE AND QUICK ACTION

"Replete with intrigue and quick action. The production is a worthy one and evinces marked craftmanship on the part of the directors. The effects are colorful and vivid. As the scene of action shifts from America to the Orient and from the Orient to the Philippines, there is a scrupulous regard for atmospheric details and incidents, that increases the spectator's interest. Anita Stewart doubles in a clever adaptation of Harold MacGrath's story. Excellent photography aids in making the picture a success."—Moving Picture World.

MISS STEWART QUITE STRIKING

"Anita Stewart gives a thoughtful portrayal as twin sisters and is quite striking as the blonde Berta."—New York Morning Telegraph.

TENSE DRAMATIC ACTION

"There is incident aplenty. The backgrounds are praiseworthy. Make a point to emphasize the melodramatic values. Feature the picture as a tense drama that is punctured with action throughout its length."—Motion Picture News.

ROMANCE AND ADVENTURE

"Anita Stewart again demonstrates her claim to the title of star in Harold MacGrath's bizarre story of romance and adventure. Contains an excellent double characterization by the star. Some fine locations and sets finely photographed, a complex plot and considerable action."—Exhibitors Herald.

Getting It Over

GEMS of wisdom written in chinese characters would be utterly unintelligible to most people. RITCHEY posters, like all really great art, are always simply phrased, in a manner most readily understood by the great masses of men. By the same token they are always so strong in their realistic delineation, and so positive, and sincere, and accurate in their depictions as to carry a sure conviction.

The same characteristics that denote a great work of art, likewise denote a RITCHEY poster. The fact that the RITCHEY poster serves a commercial purpose simply classifies it as a work of advertising art. It has to make a monetary appeal, but it is an alluring appeal, an appeal that piques the curiosity—and it invariably gets over!

It is pregnant with a subtle power of suggestion, and though the casual observer may not know it, it is that subtle power that puts it over. That is the reason it produces the maximum box-office results,—

It has the quality of GETTING OVER!

VOL. XXI MAY 29, 1920 No. XXII

Blunt—Square—Facts

The Question At Issue

DO exhibitors want reviews?

Do they want independent reviews—unbiased, impartial, independent of advertising?

Is a trade paper competent to review pictures for the exhibitor?

Has a trade paper a right to carry its own reviews of pictures advertised in its pages?

Do exhibitors simply use reviews to hammer down prices, break contracts, etc.?

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has placed these questions before the exhibitors of the country.

Their reply is a spirited and unanimous "Yes!" to the first four questions; to the last a caustic "No!"

Letters have been received from the owners and managers of over a thousand theatres; and more are still coming in. Never before, on any subject has there been such an outpouring of exhibitor expression; nor such strength, definiteness and unity of opinion.

The letters come from all points of the country, from big cities and little towns, from first and late run houses, from single and chain theatres.

Their similarity is remarkable. But one letter disagrees with the rest. Summed up they say: "We want reviews—or nothing."

Practically every letter should be reproduced in full. We regret that we have not the space, that we can give only excerpts from comparatively a few. These prove the case: but every letter is worth reading.

A Plain Statement

THE issue—involving the above questions—was raised with MOTION PICTURE NEWS by the Selznick organization.

We,—in common with other trade papers—were informed, several months ago, that reviews of Selznick pictures were not desired by that organization.

Later, and immediately following our review of a certain Selznick release, Selznick advertising was summarily withdrawn from the columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

We were informed, however, that the issue was not raised over this particular review but was a general one. In other words, Selznick pictures were not to be reviewed (Select and Republic pictures included) by MOTION PICTURE NEWS or by any other trade paper; any publication defying this rule would lose Selznick advertising.

We were told that reviews were out of date; that a trade paper had no right to give its own opinion of goods advertised in its pages and to differ with the advertising claims made; that exhibitors did not want reviews except to use them in lowering rentals and causing trouble in general.

Our reply was that we would continue to review all Selznick releases, as a service demanded by our readers, independently and to the best of our ability, as we have always reviewed all pictures since the paper was founded.

What of the Others?

WE were distinctly informed by the Selznick organization that their edict applied to all trade papers. The other trade papers, however, are still carrying Selznick advertising. Perhaps they will care to explain why. Our columns are also open to the Selznick organization for any fair and fact statement they may desire to make.

This is a vital issue.

It is vital to the trade press. If we are not to carry the reviews our readers demand, or only reviews acceptable to our advertisers, or if the paper is to be run by the advertiser, then we cease to exist. A camouflaged house-organ is not countenanced by the United States postal laws nor by any reputable trade, nor is its circulation worth a nickel.

It is vital to the advertiser. If you sell your goodwill to any one advertiser you have no value left to sell to any other advertiser.

It is vital to the industry at large, to possess a trade press free to offer constructive criticism on the pictures artistic and economic development, untied by any interlocking commercial interests, unbribed and so able to express the truth as it sees it.

But above all the issue is vital to the exhibitor. He won't be deluded long by a camouflaged house-organ. He'll spot it quick and quit it cold. But when he is deprived of an independent and impartial service on pictures, when he is compelled to book and advertise in the dark how on earth is he to hold and increase and keep faith with his public?

What is to become of selective booking? Or is the term a travesty?

What is to become of the exhibitors' independence?

Independence or Blind Submission?

WE hear a good deal these days about the independent exhibitor. A good many producers and distributors seem earnestly to desire this independence. They urge the exhibitor to stay independent.

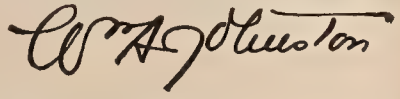
But—when you ask the exhibitor to take your pictures blindly, to advertise them blindly, you rob him of all independence. You tie him to yourself, to your fortunes. You force him to accept the risks of production. You use him to force your goods on the public—a very dangerous end which you have no right to ask him to share. A fairer way is to buy his theatre and take the risk yourself—the very ownership you so earnestly oppose.

Eighty percent of the exhibitors of this country are unable to see pictures before they book them—and therefore unable to select pictures for their particular clientele and to know how and how strong to advertise them. The balance are too busy to screen all the pictures offered them. Exhibitors cannot succeed without an impartial review and advertising service. They will get it—somehow.

Our Position Frankly Stated

OUR answer to the Selznick organization is this: Tell the exhibitor the truth, the whole truth about your pictures. Inform him thoroughly and candidly. Give him an impartial appraisal just as we try to do. Substitute this for your present advertising and we'll gladly stop reviewing your pictures. Such service to our readers won't then be necessary.

We sincerely regret the raising of this issue. We did not seek it. We have hoped for another way out.



We are an organ of the trade—all parts of it, all factors in it. We aim to advance the best interests of all.

Our pages are devoted primarily to the exhibitor—to give him service, to help him market his goods. Our editorials are our own. No factor in the trade owns them.

We have given much service—at no saving of effort or expense. No trade paper in any field gives more. This service has helped the sales of worth while pictures a great deal. As for our reviews we never claimed that they were infallible. Nor does the dealer take them as infallible. If we underrate some pictures we overrate others. No conscientious producer has been hurt by our reviews. All in all they have helped. Our only claim is that they are on the level; as for their value, their batting average is good.

We make mistakes. But our columns are always open, we are always eager, to correct any. We will revise our own opinion gladly and quickly if the other fellow proves we are wrong.

From the beginning this paper has been clean, constructive, independent. No one will say otherwise. We expect to remain so—or quit. And we wish to say this: that while we have had our struggles and disagreements we have met from our advertisers with mighty few exceptions the fairest kind of spirit—a spirit which is founded broadly upon a belief in the solidity of the industry and the wholesome, genuine value of an independent trade press.

The Exhibitor and Reviews

SAENGER AMUSEMENT CO., INC. NEW ORLEANS, LA.

"Our opinion is that exhibitors will be with you 100 per cent. as long as you continue to hold your editorial department above business office influences. And in the stand you've taken you find us with you all of that 100 per cent.

"Reviews are not the least of the service you render exhibitors. In fact, our publicity department holds that it is one of the most important. Reference is made in our publicity department to a card index file which gives us at a glance the consensus of all criticisms on any picture we have booked. And as our publicity men seek to advertise and exploit pictures honestly, the reviews are of great assistance, provided they are honest. We try, of course, to get a preview on the major attractions, but we must ofttimes be guided by trade reviews.

"We have found MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be fair, and we believe your staff competent. As a matter of fact WE HAVE PLACED FAITH IN CRITICISMS PUBLISHED IN YOUR PAPER."

E. V. Richards, Jr.,
General Manager,
Saenger Amusement Co., Inc.

NEWMAN THEATRE KANSAS CITY, MO.

"Regarding reviews, we want them absolutely. We feel that they are one of the greatest necessities of the modern theatre manager despite the fact that an exhibitor has contracted for certain pictures and that his competition has contracted for the pictures reviewed, it is only good business for him to know his competitor's line as well as his own.

"While we are in a position to screen nearly every important production that is released in this territory, we find it very helpful to compare our personal opinions with those of the reviewer. Very often, important points, either for or against a production, have been brought to our attention by the critic. A great many times, when we were undecided about the particular value of a certain picture, the reviewers' remarks have cleared up many of the points in question. Again, in this day of "near" open booking and independent releases, combined with presentations, what better method is there for an exhibitor to find just the type of attraction he desires to give diversity to his programs or to fill in a particular type of feature having a particular type of presentation.

"For illustration, in the past four weeks, we have been searching the release columns of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and other trade papers for a picture of merit that would particularly suit a Fashion Show presentation. We have located an attraction that suits our requirements to the letter in the columns of the reviewers."

Milton H. Feld,
Manager.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—Motion Picture News put the issue of reviews up to its exhibitor readers in square and straight fashion. No pointed questions were asked, no praise solicited. Our cards were on the table and we stated frankly that we were willing to rest our decision in the hands of the exhibitors. With a unanimity and spontaniety that is remarkable the replies have poured in—and to say that in the face of such a tribute of confidence and faith we are more than ever inspired in our labors is to express the obvious and leave untold the deep feelings stirred. Space limitations make impossible the publication of all the letters, or of even a portion of them in their entirety, but beginning this week, we will present to the trade excerpts from as many of the letters as possible. The NEWS' fight in this case is the industry's fight and on the face of the advertising facts. The NEWS is fighting it alone among trade papers.]

WILLIAM FOX WASHINGTON THEATRE DETROIT, MICH.

"Do I want reviews? YOU CAN USE THIS WITH RED INKS I SHOULD SAY I DO. If it were not for the intelligent reviews of pictures that are published in your paper, how would I, 1,000 miles away from where they are first shown, be able to plan an advertising campaign? How would I be in a position to judge what the good pictures are? How would I know anything worth knowing about that picture if it were not for the review in your paper?

"Your service has been splendid. The MOTION PICTURE NEWS is a monument to the growth of the Motion Picture Industry. The exceptional service, the completeness of your publication, the unfailing fairness with which you conduct its pages, have made a friend and admirer of your paper out of yours truly."

Louis K. Sidney.

CLAUDE E. CADY, OPERATIVE GLADMER AND COLONIAL THEATRES LANSING, MICH.

"While I do not wholly rely upon the reviews of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, because of screening most of all my shows myself and again because frequently by the time your review comes to me the picture has been run in one or the other of my houses, I assure you that I watch these reviews carefully and find that they are fair and the exhibitor in the smaller town who does not run pictures so close to release dates could very well afford to PLACE HIMSELF IN YOUR HANDS and rely entirely upon the judgment of your critics. In conclusion, I thoroughly endorse the stand you have taken in this matter and wish you the success that is due a trade paper that is honestly trying to serve the exhibitor."

Claude E. Cady.

LINWOOD THEATRE TARKIO, MO.

"DO WE WANT REVIEWS? YE GODS, YES! And in order to run a business as we run ours, we must absolutely have expert, reliable and impartial reports on each and every picture we put on our screen from the five hundred to the ten thousand feet lengths. We were asked the other day whether or not we would buy on our own judgment providing that they would screen a certain subject. On our answering that our system was based on the collective judgment of the critics in the trade journals we were charged with having no confidence in our own intelligence. And our reply was that we did not have time to view all the subjects that we offered to place our patronage and yet we never offered them anything but the cream of the market. That we did have time to read, copy and file reviews on all subjects that came on the market and consequently could intelligently buy only the good and turn down the weak sisters. We are conversant with each and every producer's product and are salesman-bull proof. We buy selective or on one picture cancellation. We sometimes offend by what we will not pay for a picture; at other times we are proclaimed as a gentleman, scholar and general good fellow for what we are willing to pay for some other picture. Stars names are not essential to our success. National advertising will not fill our house. But our personal reputation for high ideals, our record for one successful program right after another, is rapidly giving us a place in estimation of our people that is a real joy to occupy.

"And the solution—Independent buying with a knowledge created by truthful, impartial and fearless reviews of the pictures that are being offered on the market.

"WE HAVE BEEN USING THE REVIEWS OFFERED BY THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS FOR OVER TWO YEARS. In that time, we have never seen any signs of partiality in your reviews and have rather used you as the court of last resort in case critics differed. We don't care for the critic that yells "Rotten! Rotten!" all the time. But the soft-soap artist is just as useless. And exhibitors are not fools even if they do have their weak moments.

"Do we want your reviews? THAT IS WHY WE BUY YOUR MAGAZINE. The reviews and the "Exhibitor Comment" are the main reasons why over fifty copies of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS are resting comfortably on top of our desk at this moment.

"You are the connecting link between exhibitor and producer. The safety valve of the industry. How can we fellers here in the bushes tell whether or not a picture is suited for our audience without your reviews? How do we know that it is the style of picture that will not only bring business but better still—Satisfaction? How? Certainly not from the press books that the producers hand out with their hokem about Lucy Asthama's pet poodle eating radishes."

"I have found a number of film men that make claims that their particular product is not given a fair showing by some reviewers, but on comparing with the reviews and other film men's views find this is not borne out. "We would not like to see the reviews discontinued, and it is our belief that in the very near future the reviews are going to be even more critical than they have in the past whenever criticism is due.

"The exhibitor must, and will, back any paper that will give him unbiased opinions on the releases of all producers. Without the support of the exhibitor, without the circulation among the exhibitors, THE ADVERTISING IN YOUR PAPER WOULD NOT BE OF VALUE. It is the confidence placed in your magazine by the exhibitor, that makes it the valued paper that it is.

"But it is perfectly natural that your reviewer at all times in reviewing pictures will have in his mind that the producer is one of your advertisers or a prospective one, which after all is said and done is your bread and butter, and naturally said reviewer in writing his opinion has to be guided thereby so as not to offend the producer. Different reviewers claim that regardless of whether the producer is an advertiser or not they write their opinion as they see the picture only, but we are all human, reviewers as well, and are going to take cognizance of the situation and we as exhibitors when reading your reviews naturally have to make due allowance for same."

Call a spade a spade regardless of whom it hits and any producer who seeks to induce you to speak highly of his picture when it has no merit should be barred from your columns on general principles.

"I believe your staff is thoroughly competent, and I am of the opinion that you all wish to be fair and useful to the exhibitors. I would consider it a calamity to discontinue reviewing pictures by the various trade papers. At the same time it is your duty, as well as every other publisher's, to pan a picture if it isn't there. I have requested all our daily papers in Toledo to do likewise. In other words to not boost a weak or mediocre picture. That is selling the wrong stuff to the public. However, when we do have a picture that is worthy of lots of publicity to give it to us without the asking."

"The review service of the NEWS I can testify to as an exhibitor has been invaluable to me, as a worthy and constructive means of suggesting the true value of the films reviewed. I have used the word "suggesting"—that is just what the NEWS' review service epitomizes. It suggests what is good and bad in a film, and the rest remains with the exhibitor to determine for himself, that is to say, whether the particular film under review would appeal to his class of patrons, taking into consideration the type of audience, the locality of the theatre and the price of admission. Needless to say, there can be no doubt as to the honesty of purpose of your reviewers in setting forth their sincere opinions of a film."

"Personally I feel under obligation to any publisher of a trade paper when I have reason to feel that the pictures reviewed are not written up with one eye on the picture and the other on the producer's advertising contract. My practise has always been to look at reviews first. Judging from the hours I have wasted looking at poor pictures which have not been reviewed which I might have spent to better advantage had I read an honest criticism first, the reviews must, in the course of time, have made my job a great deal easier.

As all exhibitors are aware, certain trade papers when ordered to review pictures favorable to the producer under threat of losing advertisement in nine cases out of ten do as directed, and I am of the opinion that your example will tend to encourage other papers to take a like stand, thereby giving the exhibitors a fifty-fifty break.

Factions Menace Harmony of the Exhibitors' Get-Together

Reports Issued by the Rival Organizations Presage Discord at Cleveland

WITH the coming of the national conventions of the exhibitors of the United States on June 8, 9, 10 and 11, each faction is lining up its forces for the advance on Cleveland. It would seem as if harmony was not likely to prevail when the theatre-owners get together on the appointed dates. The Independent Exhibitors of America, under the leadership of Frank Rembusch, and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which Sydney Cohen is temporary chairman, have both issued official calls to the exhibitors of the country to meet next month on the same days at Cleveland. The Independent Exhibitors contingent are to gather at the Hotel Cleveland, according to the announcements received, while the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have sent out notices that they will meet at the Hotel Winton. Prominent figures associated with both organizations have issued statements which are reproduced below in part.

Frank Rembusch, president of the Independent Exhibitors, has sent the following statement:

"At the recent Chicago Convention the Chair did not make an effort to keep the convention from going to Cleveland. We encouraged it because we favor one convention, one organization. After the convention we hunted up Mr. Bullock and give him every opportunity to advise us just how we were to be taken care of, but not a single detail was told us.

"We had a committee from our organization go to Cleveland, and we were assured that everything was all right, but no details were forthcoming.

"To-day I took stock of the following facts:

"We formed a permanent organization at Chicago, with officers and directors.

"The sub-committee called upon the producers at New York City last week, and so far eleven producers have agreed to not go into the theatre business; three more will make it unanimous.

"The larger committee meets at Hotel Astor, New York City, June 3-4 to receive the final decisions of all producers, and we are to report to the Cleveland Convention. Where?

"We have waited two weeks, and then sent another representative to Cleveland and insist that our organizers must have a written contract for a meeting place somewhere. To-day our representative sent a wire that no such a contract was available, but that we could secure the Hotel Cleveland for convention halls and rooms, if we accepted at once. We then wired the Hotel Cleveland and contracted for the convention June 8, 9, 10 and 11 for the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America.

"We have a national organization, and I take it for granted that the members would consider it poor leadership if we had no meeting place when we arrived in Cleveland.

"The Chair also begs to confess that we doubt very much the sincerity of those who would have us go into a meeting in which we have no standing. We are taking no chances. We are organized and at work, the only really active national organization to-day. Certain developments and alignments that have formed since are such that we cannot afford to be anything but sure. We hope that every exhibitor will appreciate our stand. This action in no way impairs the good possible. It will, however, be a means to clarify the situation."

Addressing the exhibitors on the subject of what has already been accomplished, the Independent Exhibitors has the following to say:

"Your sub-committee called on the executives of eleven larger producers and distributors and advised them that the new national exhibitors' organization, formed at Chicago April 26-27, have agreed to make a stand as follows:

"First—Insist that all producers get out of or not go into the theatre business.

"Second—That we buy our film service exclusively from film companies who agree to this in writing."

In the list of those producers who are reported to have agreed to the Independent Exhibitors provisions, as stated above, are Universal Film Company, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Robertson-Cole, Vitagraph, Pathé, Selznick Companies, the United Artists, the American Film and the "Big Six."

M. Van Praag, secretary of the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association and a member of the committee recently appointed at the Patterson conference in Chicago to prepare a report to the Cleveland Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on the attitude of producers in regard to theatre buying, states that after the convention a sub-committee was formed consisting of H. W. Kress, H. C. Farley and M. Van Praag, which was to go to Cleveland and find out what arrangements had been made for the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Regarding the transactions of this committee Mr. Van Praag has issued the following statement:

"This sub committee met at the Hotel Statler in the city of Cleveland on the 5th day of May and had a conference with Henry Lustig and Samuel Bullock, the latter being the temporary secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Both these gentlemen gave the members of the sub-committee a detailed account of the arrangements that had been made for the convention, and the members of the sub-committee unanimously agreed in their report to the chairman of the full committee that the arrangements made for the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were entirely satisfactory.

"The report of the sub-committee had been made verbally to Chairman Rembusch, and he had been informed that the sub-committee had unanimously endorsed the arrangements made for the convention called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the Hotel Winton, City of Cleveland, June 8th to 11th.

"Under these circumstances I am unable to understand the attitude of the chairman, Mr. Rembusch, in not only disregarding the report of the sub-committee, but in usurping the power of the directing committee and telling the exhibitors of the country by means of circulars that he has called a convention of his own at a different hotel, claiming to act by the authority of the temporary conference at Chicago."

Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has also issued a statement on

Goldwyn Buys Interest in Capitol Theatre

PRESIDENT MESSMORE KENDALL of the Capitol theatre announces the consummation of negotiations by which Goldwyn Pictures Corporation acquires a substantial interest in the new Capitol theatre at 51st Street and Broadway, and the Capitol theatre interests become associated with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, which will be prominently identified with the management thereof. Edward Bowes, manager of the theatre, is to enter a larger field as a director and executive of Goldwyn.

The board of directors of the Capitol theatre will, in addition to the present members, include the following: F. J. Godsol, Samuel Goldwyn, Eugene Du Pont, Lee Shubert, Edgar Selwyn and others of the Goldwyn board. Messmore Kendall will continue as president.

"By this affiliation Goldwyn has secured an interest in one of the most spacious and magnificent theatres in the world. The Capitol theatre has a seating capacity of 5,400, 2,700 of which are on the orchestra floor and an almost equal number in the balcony. Numerous Goldwyn Pictures have already been presented at the Capitol, notably Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside," and another Rex Beach Goldwyn feature, "The Silver Horde," has been the attraction during the past week.

Canadian Distributors in First Annual Meeting

The first annual meeting of the Canadian Moving Picture Distributors' Association was held in the St. Charles Hotel in Toronto, recently. The meeting took the form of a banquet, and representatives of the following companies were present: Monarch Film Co., Ltd., Famous Players Film Service, Ltd.; Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd.,; Fox Film Corporation, Ltd.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd.; Regal Films, Ltd.; Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, Ltd.; Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd.; Specialty Film Import, Ltd.; Davis Amusement Enterprises; Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange.

Clair Hague, general manager, Canadian Universal Film Company, was re-elected president and J. McCabe, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation for Canada, was elected vice-president. J. O'Laughlin, general manager of Pathe for Canada, was made secretary-treasurer, while Phil Kauffman and L. Rosenfeld were elected directors.

Employes Now Operate Minneapolis Theatre

Theatre patrons in Minneapolis are showing keen interest in a new motion picture house venture in this city—a house co-operatively managed by its employes. The house is the Minneapolis Auditorium, until recently under direction of the United Artists' corporation.

Having no further pictures ready for release within 30 days the United Artists withdrew from their control. Thirty-eight members of the Symphony orchestra under the direction of Richard Long then proposed that the theatre be operated as a co-operative enterprise. They asked that they be allowed to continue with the orchestra all summer and take their share of the receipts. They also offered to take out stock in the enterprise if the management desired.

At the same time managers of three large film distributing companies notified Mr. Branham that they would furnish films to the house to be rented solely on the percentage basis.

French Ban Against Raw Film Importation Only

The French decree against the importation of motion picture films from America will not be "a restriction against laughter and enjoyment" as some of the Parisians thought. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been informed by its Washington representative, Jack S. Connolly, that the Department of Commerce has received a cablegram from its Paris office to the effect that the ban is only against the raw stock. The order will in no way affect the exportation of American made pictures.

Mayflower-Tucker Suit Settled Amicably

THE Mayflower-Tucker suit, regarded as one of the most important pieces of motion picture legislation now pending, is about to be settled out of court, and George Loane Tucker will complete his contract with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. This announcement was made today by Benjamin A. Prager, president of Mayflower, following a conference with Alfred Beekman, attorney for the Mayflower organization.

The terms of the settlement were not stated, but it is understood that Mr. Tucker is to resume work for Mayflower immediately and that a new arrangement as to the distribution of profits on his future productions has been effected.

Mr. Tucker, according to present plans, will continue to work on the Coast. He will finish the titling and cutting of "Ladies Must Live," his second production under the Mayflower contract, and will then arrange plans for four more Mayflower pictures, which will complete the contract. The settlement of the Tucker suit represents the first big official act of Benjamin A. Prager since becoming head of the Mayflower organization.

Capt. Kimberley Reaches America from England

Captain Paul Kimberley, C. B. E., vice-chairman of the Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association of Great Britain, is a recent arrival in this country, having sailed from England on May 8th. His third trip to America is in the interests of the Hepworth Picture Plays, Ltd., of which he is a director and general manager.

Captain Kimberley is one of the best known figures in the British film industry. For some years he exploited the brand of films known as "Imp," which he made exceedingly popular in England. He also made an excellent record in the sale of "Ivanhoe," which was produced in 1913. More recently he secured the European agency for Tannhauser Films and made a big success in England with "The Million Dollar Mystery."

During the war Captain Kimberly founded a scheme for the training of disabled soldiers and sailors as cinematograph operators and for other positions in the film industry.

S. L. Rothapfel Entertains Milwaukee Press

A dinner was tendered by S. L. Rothapfel to the representatives of Milwaukee newspaperdom Friday, May 7th, at the Hotel Wisconsin. Mr. Rothapfel, who takes charge of the opening of the Merrill theatre for the Goldwyn and Ascher Brothers' interests announced the dinner as an opportunity to get together with the newspaper writers of Milwaukee. A brief outline of the new Merrill policy in advertising and publicity work was given by Mr. Rothapfel.

Films Classified with Press by U. S. Senate

The United States Senate has supported the contentions of the Censorship Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that so far as censorship or any other form of regulations is concerned motion picture films should be classified the same as newspapers, magazines, books or printed pictures. The Senate by unanimous vote has passed the bill introduced by Congressman Walsh of Massachusetts which prohibits the transmission by mail or otherwise in interstate commerce of indecent films. The bill has already passed the House of Representatives but will be sent back there for concurrence in an amendment to correct a technical error and will go to the President for his signature within a short time.

Fox Perfects Plans for International Convention

For the first time in the history of the Fox organization representatives of the firm from all parts of the world will meet at the sixth annual convention of the Fox Film Corporation, beginning on May 24th. Furthermore, this is said to be the first time in the history of the industry that such an international convention has been held.

Plans for the reception of the convening representatives have been perfected by William Fox and an elaborate program of business meetings and entertainments has been arranged. The entire party of branch and district managers will be on hand at the formal opening of the Fox studios on May 24th. One announcement made on the eve of the convention is that each of the Fox exchanges located in the principal cities of the world will be equipped shortly to maintain an efficient exploitation department for the benefit of exhibitors.

First British Serial Is Started in England

For the first time in its history, the Broadwest company, a British producing organization, is to make a serial. It will be called "In the Blood," and will be a typical English story. No attempt at impossible or unreal stunts will be attempted and each episode will be a complete story. Walter West will supervise the production.

Hagenbeck Menagerie Is Still Active

In a recent editorial in the Motion Picture News, headed "Watch the Germans," mention was made that the Hagenbeck menageries in Hamburg had been taken over by a producing company. This statement is now discovered to be incorrect. A motion picture company has taken over only part of the company's grounds, and the firm of Carl Hagenbeck Sons is still doing business.

Goldwyn Plans for an Extensive Foreign Production

Announces That Pictures Will Be Made Both in France and England

SAMUEL GOLDWYN returns from Europe with a most interesting statement on international film conditions and how they will affect the interests of American producers in the years to come. While abroad Mr. Goldwyn spent considerable time in both England and France, and he has studied intensively both the character of the European as well as the character of the motion picture industry on the other side.

Mr. Goldwyn's accomplishments and observations in Europe have resulted in two things: a crystallization of Goldwyn plans and activities; and a definite perspective on the future of American production throughout the world.

"We have consummated the formation of Goldwyn, Ltd., and have solidly launched our distributing enterprise in England," said Mr. Goldwyn. "We have laid the cornerstone for one of the most active distributing centers in the United Kingdom, and we look forward to big accomplishments in European sales. Our office abroad has an English character, an English atmosphere, and admirably fits into the English method of business transaction. We have made friends on the other side, and friendship is a lasting foundation for success in ventures where capital and product are up to the mark.

"More than that, we have launched our distributing center in France—the Société Anonyme Cinematagraphique Goldwyn-Osso. Within the next few months there will be an energetic branching out of Goldwyn activity on French continental soil with branch offices in Paris, Lille, Bordeaux, Nancy, Marseilles, Lyons, Geneva and Brussels and all the larger French cities.

"Nowhere does one remark on the growth of the picture so much as in France, where the lid that was clapped on during the war has been suddenly let go. The result is an energy and progress that is undreamed of, even in progressive America. There are to date some 1,200 cinema theatres in France. One cannot say how many there will be two years from now.

"While the Europeans are pleased with American pictures and recognize the technical merit of American production as well as the artistry of our photoplay creators, they are not wholly satisfied with anything that does not spring from their own soil. The cry of 'production at home' has been uttered and heard, and for Americans to continue to hold foreign markets means a revivifying ingenuity, and a recognition that our productions treating of foreign characters must ring true to life. The international note in the picture is about to be felt more forcibly than ever before, and we at Goldwyn are not only going to spread ourselves to make our pictures acceptable in any land, but we are going to stage them on the soil where they are supposed to be.

"In short, production abroad has ceased to be merely an idea. It is now a necessity and about to become a fact. England and France will soon hear the ring of hammerblows that mean new production studios. English pictures for the English, French pictures for the French is the keynote.

"While in England I had the pleasure of discussing cinema matters with some of Britain's best known authors, including Sir Hall Caine, E. Phillips Oppenheim and Cynthia Stockley, and I am tremendously pleased and hopeful over their interest in developing the photoplay.

"During the war American naturally incurred little competition on foreign soil. While there has been little change to date in actual business done, there is a determination on the part of our friends across the water to show their hand in a creative way along cinema lines. I do not disparage this; in fact I encourage it, as I would encourage any effort to make the photoplay a more international and a more artistic achievement."

"I believe absolutely in international pictures. Where foreign characters have crept into the action of the average American film they have too often been utilized for the purpose of provoking a laugh or presenting some ridiculous situation. The time has come when we ought to present the foreign character in a serious role, allow him to demonstrate the traits and mannerisms of his race in a genuine way, and, moreover, to furnish him with a setting that accords fully with the spirit and content of the story in which he is cast."

Mr. Goldwyn also spoke highly of the influence that the American pictures were wielding abroad, and expressed his belief in the screen as the greatest popular agency for the promotion of feelings of good fellowship between this country and England and France. The spirit of rivalry between the different countries for supremacy in the picture field was strong, Mr. Goldwyn declared, and both England and France were anxious to overcome the lead at present enjoyed by the American producers. In response to the people's demand for more and better pictures, the construction of theatres is being carried out as rapidly as conditions and available material will permit. Mr. Goldwyn described how in several instances he saw the interiors of houses demolished and removed so that the houses might be remodeled and converted into motion picture theatres, even though the ultimate seating capacity was very limited.

In concluding the interview, Mr. Goldwyn referred for a moment to the production program for the coming season. "By the middle of next month," said Mr. Goldwyn, "we will have twenty negatives completed and ready for the market for the coming season, beginning September."

Theatre Building Reports from West Coast

MESSRS. RICHARDS and Nace, of Phoenix, Arizona, have leased the property at the corner of Western and Sixth streets, Los Angeles, for a 1,900-seat suburban theatre. They also broke ground last week on the new Rialto theatre in Phoenix, which will seat 1,200.

Sol Lesser, A. and M. Gore, and three owners of present Hollywood theatres have formed a $500,000 corporation to take over the Hollywood theatre, the Windsor theatre and the Apollo theatre and to construct in addition a 2,500-seat house to cost $300,000 at the corner of Hollywood boulevard and Ivar street. This will give four runs to all First National releases in Hollywood. There will be a mid-week change for the big theatre and a daily change for the three smaller ones.

A lease for a big theatre site in Los Angeles has been purchased by an organization formed by Sol Lesser and composed of Messrs. Mark, of New York; Von Herberg, of Seattle; Liebler, of Indianapolis; Gordon, of Boston; Williams, of New York; Schwabe, of Philadelphia, and Finklestein, of Minneapolis, who will build a house with 3,000 seats. No announcement of location has been made as yet, but it is generally believed that they have secured the Mercantile Place site, consisting of 160 feet on Broadway, between Fifth and Sixth streets, and extending through to Spring street. This lease was recently secured by the Board of Education by Adolph Remish, who was formerly identified with Ackerman and Harris, owners of the Hippodrome circuit affiliated with Marcus Loew.

A. E. F. Pictures Will Be Run on Memorial Day

Governor Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts, preparing for the observation of Memorial Day, May 30th, in the Bay State, has requested that all motion picture theatres arrange for a showing on Memorial Day of the pictures of the graves of the American Soldiers who were killed in France. The plan was proposed by Myron T. Herrick, former American ambassador to France, to Governor Coolidge.

Managers of the Boston playhouses are preparing to co-operate with the Governor, and will show some time during each performance, not only the pictures of the graves, but films depicting the work of the men in the trenches.

Screen Advertisers Will Meet at Indianapolis

The value of the screen as an advertising medium of the best kind will be emphasized at the meeting of the Screen Advertisers' Association of the World to be held in Indianapolis, June 7 and 8, coincident with the convention of the Associated Advertising Club of the World.

Persons interested in screen advertising from all parts of the world are expected to attend the sessions of the screen advertisers' association and the general sessions of the convention. One of the most forceful programs ever arranged has been prepared by Harry Levey, president Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Mr. Levey, who is largely responsible for the present development of the industrial and educational motion picture, will make the principal addresses before the screen men. The sessions will be called to order Monday afternoon, June 7. Mr. Levey, who also is the manager of the industrial and educational departments of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will speak on "A Dream Realized."

A general discussion will follow Mr. Levey's address. Tim Thrift, advertising manager of the American Multigraph Sales Company, and chairman of the motion picture committee of the National Advertisers' Association, will deliver an address on "What I Have Learned About the Motion Picture Medium."

Another important speaker at the opening session will be John Leitch, author of "Man to Man," who will speak on "The True Mission of the Motion Picture."

Irving T. McDonald to Manage Foley Houses

Irving T. McDonald, for several years connected with the Fox circuit, lately as manager of the local playhouse in Springfield, Mass., has resigned to assume management of the T. L. Foley motion picture houses of Cleveland, O. He expects to remain in this city until about June 1. According to announcement, he will be in direct charge of the three Foley houses located in the Cleveland's theatrical and business section. His place is assumed by George V. Halloway, who comes to Springfield from the New York Academy of Music.

Spokane Exhibitors Correct Recent Statement

According to a telegram received from Messrs. Clemmer and Lamach, the Spokane, Washington, exhibitors, the article concerning them in the May 15th issue of the News was incorrect. The item was headed "Spokane Exhibitors Rebel at Percentage System," and was received through the regular news source of the Motion Picture News. The telegram states that it was unauthorized as well as untrue.

Chicago Exchanges Still in Serious Condition

WHILE admitting that the situation caused by the new Chicago fire ordinance, which became effective May 1, still is very serious for exchanges, managers are hopeful that sufficient time will be allowed them to find suitable new quarters before the drastic provisions of the ordinance are enforced. No steps have been taken as yet to compel the exchanges to comply with the forty-eight hour notice served by the city under the new ordinance, ordering them to cease handling and removing films from buildings now occupied, and an amendment of the ordinance deferring it for one year has been introduced in the city council and referred to the building committee.

The aldermen are said to feel that the exchanges should have been given more time, as practically no building exists in Chicago today which complies with the requirements and in which the exchanges could get space. E. G. Welsh, who is promoting the proposed Chicago film exchange building, denies the rumor that ground will be broken on June 1, but stated that prospects were now brighter than ever before, and it is hoped that construction can be started within thirty days.

"Big Six" Has No Part in Any Booking-Pool

Los Angeles, May 18.—Fred Warren announces that the Associated Producers will have no part in any booking-pool. Reports are heard on every hand here to the effect that Famous Players-Lasky and First National have formed a booking-pool. Fred Warren also announces that the Associated Producers have leased buildings in all exchange cities west of Denver and that the exchange managers have already been engaged. This serves as a denial to the rumor circulated in the East that the "Big Six" will go through some other exchange system.

In New York no great credence is given the Los Angeles rumor concerning the reported Famous Players-Lasky and First National booking-pool. Both parties concerned refused to even discuss it.

New York Theatre Owners Appoint Delegates

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, at a largely attended meeting on Tuesday, May 18th, designated a delegation of sixty to attend the Cleveland convention. They will leave New York on the Albany night boat on June 4th, stop off at Buffalo and Niagara, and then take the boat from Buffalo to Cleveland.

This issue of the News does not carry the Box Office Reports or Advance Release departments. These will be run in future in every other issue, until the white paper situation becomes less stringent.

Stanley Acquires Three Philadelphia Houses

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, announced yesterday that this corporation has taken over from Michael Stiefel three of the largest and best known motion picture theatres in Northeast Philadelphia. The theatres are the Iris, Kensington and Allegheny avenues; the Lafayette, Kensington avenue near Cambria street; and the Star, Kensington avenue near Lehigh.

"The fact that the Stanley Company of America has secured these theatres in Northeast Philadelphia means that photoplay lovers in that vast territory will be given opportunity to see the best pictures," said Mr. Mastbaum. "It is an event of which motion picture lovers can well feel proud that this company has entered this field and entered it so thoroughly as indicated by the taking over of these three houses. These new additions to the Stanley enterprises will be improved in every way necessary to make them fit the Stanley standard of comfort and convenience for its patrons."

Equity Showing at Astor

Equity Pictures Corporation announces that arrangements have been completed for a trade showing of "For the Soul of Rafael," the latest Clara Kimball Young special, at the Hotel Astor next Wednesday, May 26. The showing will be given in the Grand Ballroom, starting at three o'clock.

Applications have been received from other branches of the industry who desire to travel along with the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Louis Blumenthal is in charge of all arrangements.

Manufacturers' Exhibit for Cleveland Meet

THE National Independent Motion-Picture Machine and Accessory Show promises to be an important event during the week of the Exhibitors' Convention at Cleveland, according to Dr. Sam Atkinson, business manager, who is also a well-known exhibitor. Dr. Atkinson states that Gray's Armory has been engaged for the exposition and that many important producers, accessory manufacturersand distributors have already reserved space for the show, taking advantage of the opportunity to bring their pictures and products before what is expected to be the largest gathering of exhibitors ever assembled at one time in America.

Arrangements have been completed for erection of seventy-two booths on the floor of the huge armory. There will also be elaborate floral decorations, and a splendid orchestra has been engaged for the occasion. According to Atkinson the presence of many independent producers and stars at the convention is assured. Pictures produced by the independents will be screened in the exposition building, and accessory makers are arranging very complete exhibits of their products.

Realart Managers in Big Get-Together

First Conference of Young Company Held in New York, Beginning May 15

THE managers of Realart Pictures Corporation held their first conference and get-together at the Hotel Astor, in New York City, last week. It was the first opportunity which the company's field force has had to become acquainted and the occasion was made a fitting one for the importance of the event.

The advance guard for the convention arrived Saturday, May 15th, when Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles manager, and Ben F. Simpson, San Francisco manager, arrived in New York from their transcontinental jaunt. Others arrived later in the day, but the majority came on Sunday and early Monday morning. A large number brought their wives and families and several made the trip by automobile.

The managers registered at the Hotel Astor on Monday morning and then went in a body to 469 Fifth Avenue, where they inspected the home offices in the Winfield Building and met the officials of the company. They journeyed back to the Hotel Astor for luncheon, following which the business sessions were started.

The first two sessions of the meeting were given over to a discussion of the results obtained from the company's Wanda Hawley selling campaign. The succeeding days were devoted to reports from the various managers on the conditions in the field. The men have recently returned from trips about their territories and reported on exhibitor opinion on the live subjects of the day as they encountered it at that time.

On Monday evening the field men attended a performance of "Irene" at the Vanderbilt theatre. Wednesday evening they attended "The Gold Diggers" at the Lyceum, and on Friday night, after a dinner at the Astor, they saw a performance of "The Midnight Frolic." The other nights of the week were left open for the men to entertain their wives and families.

An attractive booklet was prepared for the conference. It was devoted entirely to the officials and managers of the company in a personal way and was attractively prepared. In addition to the photographs of the various officials it contained some live and personal data on the individuals that compose the organization.

Each official of the company is written up in the booklet. There is a brief history of his career in the world of business and an attractive picture showing him at work in his office. The book was printed under the direction of Mr. Fritts.

The following attended the meetings: Melville E. Maxwell, special representative; Joseph L. Marontetts, Atlanta; Walter E. Scates, Boston; Henry E. Wilkinson, Buffalo; Harry W. Willard, Chicago; Mark Goldman, Cincinnati; James B. Reilly, Cleveland; Diaz Callahan, Dallas; Bert R. Latz, Denver; Ralph B. Quive, Detroit; John N. McMeekin, Kansas City; Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles; Henry L. Hollander, Minneapolis; Lester Adler, New York City; Truly B. Wildman, New Orleans; Cornelius G. Kingsley, Omaha; J. E. Hennessy, Philadelphia; Harry E. Lotz, Pittsburgh; Ben F. Simpson, San Francisco; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; Floyd H. Lewis, St. Louis, and Louis Reichert, Washington, D. C.

The British Motion-Picture in America

Gus Schlesinger of Inter-Ocean Film Writes of Picture with International Appeal

IN a statement just issued from the office of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales of that organization, discusses the subject of the British-made picture in the American theatre and concludes with the assertion that in the future the British and the American producer must concentrate on the making of pictures that have an international appeal. Mr. Schlesinger's statement is submitted in full:

"The crop of trade rumors this spring has brought the names of England's foremost producers to the fore, coupling their producing units with many prominent American distributing organizations. To date, however, though the rumors still persist in gaining a sufficient currency to give them cause for widespread discussion in American film circles, no definite arrangements have been made for the American distribution of British productions. Or, to be more discreet, no public announcement of any such consummation has been made in the trade press.

"While, however, this would lead one to believe that British productions are of an inferior nature, or that the terms for obtaining the American distributing rights to the British product is too high, the fact remains that the agitation is the outcome of a noticeable increase in quality of the production made in British studios.

"Thus far there have been only two big British productions shown with any degree of success in this country, namely, "The Manx-Man" and "The Better 'Ole." Both offerings were brought to America by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation fully two years ago, and were released in this country by the Goldwyn organization and World Film Corporation respectively.

"That there is a big field for British productions in this country is an admitted fact, what with the recently announced policy of American producers to forego the production of a quantity of releases for the policy of "Fewer and better pictures." But British productions in order to attain to the height of popularity that is now being enjoyed by the American product must, in the final analysis, pass the critical scrutiny of the American theatre-going public.

"In this respect, I believe that American tastes are similar, generally speaking, to British tastes. The same elements that make for a good picture in America are the very fundamentals which make the British cinema offering a success in the United Kingdom. Of course, we all have our little perversions, and at times hold entirely different views on matters pertaining to the screen. Withal we agree on the following formula for a successful production; a good story, interpreted by a good cast, and visualized by a skillful director.

"In making pictures in the future, England and America must concentrate on the prodution of pictures containing an International appeal. The film markets of the world are reopening, new markets are being discovered, and the demand for films is greater now than at any other period. Motion pictures are becoming recognized everywhere as the standard form of amusement. There is room for every country's films everywhere—provided of course the pictures in question are patterned after the successful prototype in picture productions."

Error in Printing Booking Receipts

A TYPOGRAPHICAL error in the advertisement of the Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., in the issue of May 22nd of THE NEWS made the bookings on "Back to God's Country" equal four million dollars. It should have read $400,000.

Noted Educator Wants Films in Schools

Dr. Charles Eliot of Harvard Advocates Education Through the Medium of the Screen

DR. CHARLES W. ELIOT, president emeritus of Harvard University, who was the principal speaker at one of the sessions of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers at the Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, last week, strongly advocated the utilization of moving pictures in schools throughout the country as a means of education.

"We are trying from the kindergarten through the professional schools at this moment, to utilize all means of education through the eye," Dr. Eliot said. "We have been accustomed to depend upon the ear very largely to begin with.

"The whole lecture business, for instance, in schools, colleges and universities, professional schools included, has been through the ear. It is a very inferior method to education through the eye. I learned that rather early in life, because I wanted to be a chemist and I found when I began to study chemistry really that that was very largely a work of the eye.

"You have got to see the experiment you try and its results," said the eminent educator, "and its operations must be guided by the eye. And then when I became familiar with medical education I discovered that the lecture method was practically of no use except as affording a rapid sketch of some process that the teacher wished the pupil to conduct; that everything depended really on educating the senses of the medical student, and chiefly the eye. That is coming in, I rejoice to say, from the elementary school and kindergarten all the way up through medical education. And this use of moving pictures has even within one year only attained its first chance, its first use in American popular education."

The urging of Dr. Eliot for the use of moving pictures in schools throughout the New England district and the entire country is not the first inaugurated in Boston. Educational films have been shown in the schools throughout the city through the coöperation of the motion-picture distributors of this district.

Fire Commissioner John R. Murphy of the City of Boston has adopted a plan for the use of moving pictures in his school for officers of the fire department and the members of the Bureau of Fire Prevention. Members of the Wire Division of the Hub's fire-fighting force will photograph scenes of interest throughout Greater Boston for the illustrating of the lectures in the Officers' School.

Methods of fire-fighting along the waterfront, to be known as "Marine Fire-fighting and Large Streams of Water," building construction, for wall fire-fighting, reservoirs and residential sections, together with methods of fighting chemical fires, will be flashed upon a screen to the veteran officers of the department in their school at the fire headquarters on Bristol street, Boston.

Commissioner Murphy knows the value of the motion picture as a means of education and for attaining interest in the classes of the school. Members of the Class of Government at Harvard University will be the guests of the Fire Commissioner at the drill school yard of the department, when sixteen recruits of the fire-fighting force will go through drill evolutions before the "movie" men of the Wire Division. It is understood that the films will be used as educational films for the schools of the districts throughout the Boston fire district.

Cleveland Convention

the coming Cleveland gathering. The statement follows:

"The motion picture theatre owners of the country are keenly alive to the dangers threatening them from the producer-exhibitor. They will under no circumstances and by no manouvres whatever be diverted from organizing themselves into a powerful national body. They are not afraid of a fight in the open with the interests arrayed against them.

"In fact, they are ready for a fight. The exploiting interests evidently do not want to fight us in the open. Neither their objects nor their methods can stand the light of publicity. A vigorous exhibitors' organization means an end of all the illegitimate drives for the exhibitors' money; it means an end to the invasion of the exhibiting field by the producer; it means an end of extortion by way of deposits; it means an end to the craftily matured percentage plans; it means an end to the million dollars of graft the producers are collecting from improper advertising on our screens.

"Unable or unwilling to fight us in the open; fearful of the just resentment of the organized independent exhibitors of the country, the interests have resorted to the employment of a staff of accomplished smoke-screen artists to either prevent the convention or make a desperate attempt to break it up. In this way they hope to deal the exhibitors who are anxious to unite and organize another blow from which they may not recover for years to come. They are directly or indirectly hiring notorious but irresponsible agitators and common scolds to whom the publicity agents of these interests supply the ammunition they are to "shoot" at Cleveland. Fifteen thousand postal cards have been furnished by one large producing company to circularize the exhibitors of the country for a so-called second "convention" at a different hotel in the same city and at the same time selected by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"These men are trying to stage another affair like the gathering at St. Louis where a well known opponent of the deposit system and former president of a national exhibitors body, was excluded from the privileges of the floor because he attempted to speak on the evils of the deposit system. The man who drove him from the floor at that time is today at the head of a large producing company, and was then known for his affiliations with producing interests.

"The intention of the smokescreen artists is to create confusion in the minds of the independent exhibitors of the country. They are trying to stage a producer-distributor-exhibitor convention at another hotel in Cleveland at the same time for which the convention of the 32 states has been called.

California Association Starts Fourth Year

The Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California will begin the fourth year of its organization on May 20, when newly elected officers will be installed at a luncheon.

The officers elected at the association's recent meeting, early this week, are H. J. Seiler, Gale theatre, Whittier, president; F. O. Adler, Victory, San Pedro, vice-president; J. S. Lustig, Starland, Los Angeles, second vice-president; J. M. Young, Hollywood theatre, Hollywood, treasurer; Glen Harper, Apollo theatre, Los Angeles, secretary; Pearl Merrill, City theatre, Culver City, sergeant-at-arms; with H. H. Bosley, Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles; B. F. Van Derlip, Huntington theatre, Huntington Park, and S. A. Grant, Windsor theatre, Los Angeles, directors.

Upper Broadway Theatre Has New Manager

The Standard theatre, at 90th street and Broadway, New York City, has changed hands. It passes into the managerial control of B. F. Kimberg, who has purchased John Cort's entire interest in the house. The Standard has been run as a combination house, and the present bookings will continue for several weeks, after which motion pictures with musical features will be run for the Summer months.

"It is a story of unscrupulous scheming and desperate daring. These producing interests and their tools have thrown down a challenge to the motion picture theatre owners of America. The next few weeks will show whether these men and these interests can get away with it. It all depends on us, on the men who own and operate motion picture theatres for a livelihood.

"In conclusion let me repeat that the call to the Cleveland Convention at the Hotel Winton, comes from independent exhibitors prominent in organization work in 32 states. They decided upon Cleveland as the place and upon the 8th to the 11th of June after careful deliberation for the time of their big meeting. They will gather at the Hotel Winton.

"The straightforward exhibitors of the country are in no mood for trifling. The smokescreen artists and the professional disturbers may not know it but they are labelled like a trunk that has made several trips around the world."

Exhibitors of Southwest Greet First National

Three hundred independent exhibitors of the Southwest have accepted the aid offered by First National to remedy existing conditions. The committee representing them, who interviewed First National executives at Dallas, Tex., consisted of J. A. Horton, of Little Rock; Tom Boland, of Oklahoma City; Walter Fairman, of Bryan, Tex.; E. T. Peters, of Dallas; Ben Lewis, of El Paso; H. S. Cole, of Ranger, Tex.; C. C. Mushelman, of Paris, Tex.; and H. S. Ford.

At the request of this exhibitor committee, J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National, agreed to return to Dallas before the end of May to complete the organization of the new First National exchange staff.

Optimism Predominates Among Theatre Owners

First National Survey Shows Exhibitors Expect a Heavy Business Soon

CHIEF among the outstanding features of the conditions existing in the motion picture exhibiting field of the United States, as disclosed by the 1920 Survey by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for which MOTION PICTURE NEWS has the exclusive publication rights, is the spirit of optimism which predominates generally among the owners and managers of theatres, the deep seated conviction that the coming season is going to be a greater one from every standpoint than any season past and the determination to take every advantage possible by providing the accessories necessary to adequately care for a greatly increased patronage. This is not an articulate expression of opinion from any one exhibitor or any group of exhibitors, but it is the inevitable conclusion which must be drawn from the amount of money which exhibitors are putting into their end of the motion picture industry to care for expected business during the coming season.

Despite the high prices, exhibitors have gone ahead with the idea that the public wants the best and will bear its share of the ever increasing costs. Improvements such as enlarged rest rooms, remodeled lobbies, interior decorations and other things which cannot be classed as necessities are scheduled in practically three-quarters of all the motion picture houses to be done during the summer months. In places where increased seating capacity has become a necessity, there has been included in the plans for the alterations enhanced facilities for the comfort of patrons.

Nowhere is this spirit of bigger and better houses exemplified more emphatically than in the middle west and western states. Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin lead in activity, and Iowa, Utah and many other states have ambitious plans, but the fact that original construction was not restricted in most of the western states permitted the building against the future, and consequently increased facilities are not yet a necessity. In the cities, however, especially the larger ones, building of motion picture houses is experiencing a boom. In Detroit, Michigan, alone contracts have been let and actual construction started on twenty-four new houses in downtown, neighborhood and suburban sections, and before the first of next year it is believed that all of them will be in full operation.

The new Allen theatre, at Woodward Avenue and Watson Street, which is to have a seating capacity of 3,500, is now well under way, and, according to plans, will be ready for opening in the fall. Charles H. Mills, who operates the Regent, Majestic, Miles and Orpheum theatre, has announced that he will build a 4,000 seat house on Grand River Avenue, to play pictures and vaudeville. The Rialto Theatre Co., present operators of the Rialto theatre, is contemplating the erection of a new house on Forest Avenue, near Concord Street. It will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and will open late in the fall.

Gus Greening, who until a month ago was managing director of the Miles theatre, has announced that he will break ground immediately on Hamilton Boulevard for the New Tuxedo theatre. Mr. Greening says it will be ready for opening on October 1st, with 1,500 seats. The La Salle, at Ferry Avenue and 14th Street, managed by Bert Williams, well known in Detroit as a vaudeville house manager, which will seat 2,000 persons, had its formal opening on May 22nd. Wetzman & Zieman opened their new Linwood theatre, at Linwood and La Salle Streets, on May 1st. This is said to be one of the most beautiful of Detroit's neighborhood houses and will seat 1,500.

John Slepski is now completing a 700 seat house, to be opened in midsummer on Grand River Avenue. Provisions have been made to care for an enlargement if necessary. M. Robbins will open the new Savoy theatre, on Oakland Avenue, about May 15th, he announces. The Knickerbocker Theatre Co. have started operations toward enlarging the Knickerbocker theatre, East Jefferson Avenue, from 900 to approximately 1,500 seats.

Besides these announcements there are unofficial rumors of the building of several other large motion picture theatres in Detroit's downtown section. One of these is to the effect that a site has been obtained at the corner of Elizabeth Street and Woodward Avenue, one block north of Detroit's famous Grand Circus Park, for the erection of a large theatre. Phil Gleichman, manager of the Broadway Strand theatre, is also said to be interested in the erection of a large theatre on North Woodward Avenue. No definite action has been taken on either of these plans, however. John H. Kunsky, who operates Detroit's two leading first run picture theatres downtown, besides a chain of the strongest neighborhood theatres, is known to have an extensive building campaign outlined for this year.

The Croswell Theatre Co., of Adrian, Mich., has purchased the Crescent theatre there in a plan to improve the entertainment facilities of the city. Both theatres have been running pictures, but the plan is to make the Crescent an up-to-date theatre and use the Croswell for vaudeville and road attractions.

Akron, Ohio, is but a little behind Detroit in building plans. The Waldor Amusement Co. has started the erection of a 1,000 seat house, with all modern conveniences and a novelty of an arcade lobby. The lobby will run through an entire block from High to Main Street, with entrances on both streets. The name of the new theatre and the opening date has not been announced. The Rialto, a 1,400 seat house, on East Market Street and Goodyear Avenue, has just had its formal opening. No modern device was left out of the structure, even including the box aisle lights. A symphony orchestra has been installed, as well as a Hope Jones Unit organ.

The new Dietz theatre, in East Akron, is nearing completion. It will seat 1,000 people and the cost is in excess of $200,000. In the downtown section of Akron ground has already been broken for the erection of an office building which will house the new Orpheum theatre, to be operated by Botzub Brothers. It will have a seating capacity of 1,000. A. T. Simons, owner of the Dome theatre, announces that he has procured a lease on a new building constructed for the housing of a motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 1,500. The new theatre will be known as the Allen. The Akron Enterprise Co. has received a building permit for the construction of a $500,000 theatre building on Main Street. No announcement has been made by the company relative to the plans for the new structure.

The Regent, a new 1800 seat house being erected by Gus Sun, is so near completion in the down town section of Springfield, Ohio, that Decoration Day has been set as the opening date. The completion of this house will change to some extent the bookings of the other Sun houses in Springfield, the Sun Vaudeville, the Fairbanks and the Alhambra. The Fairbanks will continue to book legitimate attractions and some vaudeville. The other theatres in Springfield—Colonial, Liberty, Majestic and Princess—will undergo only repairs and redecorations for next season. All of them will remain open all summer.

Hamilton, Ohio, will have a new 1,000 seat house to help accommodate the unusual patronage which developed during the season in this city. It is the Rialto, at Front and High Streets, and is being erected by the Jewel Photoplay Co. The opening will take place some time the latter part of June.

The Palace, which only opened last February, and the Lyric and Gem are the only ones of the Hamilton theatres which will not be closed for short periods during the summer for alterations or redecorations. The Jefferson, also owned by the Jewel

Educational Will Distribute Popular Christie Comedies

Contract Just Announced Calls for Two Reel Release Every Second Week

NEW evidence of the declared intention of Educational Films Corporation to gather together on its release schedule the best two-reel comedies obtainable was supplied this week with the announcement that the company has taken over the distribution of Christie Comedies, with a release every two weeks.

The contract, which has just been signed by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational, and Charles H. Christie, general manager of Christie Film Company, is said to involve the largest sum ever concerned in a two-reel comedy agreement. The amount to be spent in production alone within the next year is said to run into a sum that ranks among the largest investments of any of the producing companies.

According to the agreement, Al. Christie, who has been responsible for some of the greatest comedy successes, is to personally supervise all of the productions and actually direct as many as possible. The entire distribution for the United States and Canada is to be in the hands of Educational, the first of the pictures to be released shortly after the opening of its new exchange system which has just been announced.

Two-reel comedies only are concerned in the contract, and none but the new pictures are to be released by Educational. The product already shown will continue to be booked through the present avenues, so that each of the productions to be handled by Educational will merit the brand name, New Christie Comedies. Immediately after making the agreement with Educational here, Mr. Christie hurried back to the coast to complete enlarged plans with his brother.

Production of the first two comedies to be released by Educational are now under way and the ample facilities of the Christie studios assure that the schedule will be promptly met. With the recent additions, the Christie plant is said to be one of the most complete on the Pacific coast and the array of actors regularly on the payroll is a large one. With the large casts available and the physical facilities the greatest attention will be paid to each of these releases.

It is probable that Bobby Vernon and Fay Tincher will be featured players in the first two Educational-released offerings. The third will have an "all star" cast. As a matter of fact it has never been a practice to "star" players in the Christie comedies though probably more noted stars of today have come from the Christie "lot" than from any other organization. Some of the names appearing in recent releases evidence the character of the players who are available: Eddie Barry, Jimmie Harrison, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vera Steadman, Helen Darling, Charlotte Merriam, Earl Rodney and a number of others including a chorus of beauties that the Christie brothers promise will take all prizes when they are seen on the screen.

In a recent interview Al Christie pointed out that it has been the policy of the company to supply both stories and laughs, and it is that type of comedies that has appealed so strongly to the exhibitors generally. This will be carried out as a general plan, except that it will be the policy to have even larger casts and more elaborate sets in the future.

With this plan the addition of the Christie Comedies fits in well with the other two-reel releases of Educational the Chester Comedies, in which animals and children are largely featured, the first of which "Four Times Foiled" attracted so much attention recently at the Rialto, Rivoli and Loew theatres; the "Torchy" Comedies, taken from the famous stories by Sewell Ford and which center around the red-headed office boy; and the Mermaid Comedies, directed by Jack White of Sennett and Fox Sunshine fame, which run stronger to the slap-stick and girl ideas.

"Acquisition of the world renowned Christie Comedies," said Mr. Hammons, "should be excellent evidence of the position that Educational Films Corporation occupies in the comedy, as well as in the rest of the short subject field. We have been confident from the start that we could offer independent producers of short subjects the very best sales and distribution system, and I believe that the signature of the Christie contract will convince any doubters.

"I do not believe that I need say anything about Christie comedies except to say that I am fully advised of the plans of Messrs. Al and Charles Christie and I know that their product will be of an even higher order than before. I know of the great demand for these productions from exhibitors all over the country and we consider it a privilege to handle them. We expect to be able to give them a considerably wider distribution than before and to systematize the handling so that they can be more readily obtained by exhibitors everywhere. We will put behind them every bit of the energy and all of the resources of our company and with the additional bookings that we are already assured we are confident that new thousands will be enjoying these super-amusement products in a very short time."

Charles Christie was equally enthusiastic. "We have had a great degree of success with our two-reel comedies," he said, "and we feel proud of our record. But it remains a fact that we have not been able to obtain all the results that we desired through independent exchanges because we have not been able to follow up our product or to put organized sales effort behind it. We adopted this plan, however, because we have always refused to permit our product to be handled by companies whose chief concern was with features and have our productions treated as 'fillers.'

"So when Educational Films Corporation, met with the same difficulties, decided to establish its own exchanges, we found an ideal outlet for our product. We will now have perfect distribution and co operative effort so that the sales burden comes off our shoulders and we will be able to devote our entire attention to production.

"We have always refrained from boasting of the future, but I cannot help pointing out that the assuredly greater distribution and our opportunity to focus all our efforts on the Los Angeles studios is going to bring a series of two-reel productions, one every two weeks, that we believe will startle exhibitors."

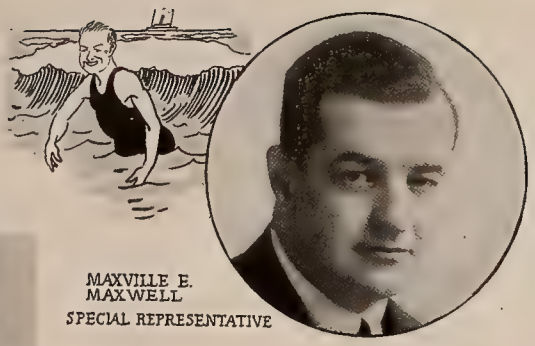
Photoplay, will be closed as soon as the Rialto is opened, to undergo extensive changes and improvements. The Grand, pictures and vaudeville, will be extensively renovated, and the Jewel and Eagle will also undergo complete renovation.



The Majestic theatre at Athens, Ohio, has just completed an alteration in a unique manner. Seating but 250, it had been crowded all winter, and architects decided that extension of the walls to the line on three sides would provide space for an additional 150 seats. The new walls were built around the old theatre without interrupting performances until they were completed. Then the house was darkened for one week while the old walls were torn down and the new seats installed and the interior redecorated.

Defiance, Ohio, will have practically a new theatre when Thomas & Henry, exhibitors of Auburn, complete remodeling the Citizens' Opera House. When remodeled the theatre will be opened under the name of the Valentine, with pictures and vaudeville. The Auditorium at Defiance will be remodeled during the summer

The First Gathering of the Organization's Members

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

C. M. Giffen, who has been in Chicago for sometime, has returned to the Pacific Coast to start work on the new series of Neal Hart five-reelers, which will be brought out by the Pinnacle Productions, of which Eddy Eckels is general manager. Pinnacle Productions have a lease on the Glendale Studios, formerly the Bachman Studios, and are contemplating extensive improvements there which will give them ample space for the ambitious program of pictures they have planned.

The Amusement Supply Company is now installed in its new offices in the Consumers Building, Chicago, and Manager Plummer is receiving congratulations of exhibitors on the splendid arrangement and commodious size of his new quarters. The increased space now available makes the showing of various articles handled by the Amusement Supply Company possible in an attractive way, and in addition to the store and office room proper, Mr. Plummer has taken over a large storage room immediately adjacent, so that sufficient supplies can be kept on hand to give customers quick service.

M. J. Mintz, special representative of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation in charge of selling "The Gumps" to territorial buyers, has returned from Detroit where he disposed of the rights for Michigan to Strand Features, Incorporated. While in Detroit he also contracted with the Detroit Free Press to publish the cartoons daily. In the transaction with the Detroit Free Press, Mr. Mintz represented the Chicago Tribune, which controls the newspaper rights to the famous Sidney Smith cartoons. Mr. Mintz is planning to leave for the west within the next few days in the interest of "The Gumps."

M. S. Slocum has joined the sales force of the Rothacker Industrial Department in New York.

Edward O. Blackburn heading a crew from the Rothacker Chicago laboratory, is hard at work in St. Louis, at present, producing the first of four industrial films which will be made in that city.

W. J. Hall, owner of the Plaza theatre at Lansing, Michigan, has purchased the Lyric, a burlesque and vaudeville house at Gary, Indiana, and will expend $50,000 on remodeling and making it into a high-class moving picture theatre. Mr. Hall has arranged to have a Photoplay Organ installed to furnish music to his patrons.

Manager Max Levy of Robertson-Cole is building up one of the strongest and most efficient sales forces in the Chicago territory and the latest addition to his staff is Steve Montgomery, who has been manager of Famous Players-Lasky Exchange at Toronto, Canada, for some time and will cover Chicago city territory for Robertson-Cole. Probably no man in the selling end of the business has a wider acquaintance than Steve and he is being given a warm welcome by his hundreds of Chicago friends. Frank Williams, popularly known as "Red," has left the Comedyart Company and will hereafter be found at the booker's desk in the Robertson-Cole Chicago office. With the star aggregation of salesmen, Manager Max Levy now has rounded up to sell Robertson-Cole productions, exhibitors better hide in their projection booth.

Ten years ago Saturday, Watterson R. Rothacker sat down at the small desk which he had rented in a small office and this marked the start of the Rothacker organization. Today the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company is one of the big factors in the world's film industry.

Work is being turned away at the Chicago laboratory. Treasurer H. J. Aldous is in Los Angeles to let contracts for the construction of Coast laboratories. Mr. Rothacker has an option on a site for another in New York and early in the summer he is scheduled to depart for Europe to start a laboratory in London and a service station in Paris.

The industrial division of the Rothacker organization has branches in New York, Buffalo, St. Louis, Los Angeles and Philadelphia and others soon are to be established in Detroit, Boston and New Orleans.

Watterson R. Rothacker has gone a long way in the short ten years since he sat at the little desk in the little office and his friends from coast to coast are congratulating him and predicting that he has only started on his career of achievement.

W. F. Seymour, personal representative for W. W. Hodkinson, who has been in Chicago for several days, has announced the appointment of Phil Dunas as Chicago manager for Hodkinson. Mr. Dunas has been traveling representative in Illinois for sometime and, according to Mr. Seymour, his promotion is in line with the Hodkinson policy of advancing men from within the organization to positions of responsibility and trust wherever they show marked ability as in the case of Mr. Dunas, who's splendid record as a salesman is recognized in his appointment as Chicago manager.

George Bromley has taken over the Garden theatre on North Marshfield avenue and after giving it a thorough overhauling and redecorating it, will operate it as a combined vaudeville and picture house.

Manager Fred Aiken of Vitagraph gave an exhibitors' showing of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" with a musical accompaniment, last Wednesday at the Playhouse and several of the "hard boiled" theatre men present were heard to remark that it was one of the big pictures of the year. Loop showings of this Vitagraph special feature will start within a few days.

The latest film exchange to move to new offices is the Special Pictures Corporation, Comedyart Productions, which are now located with the Greater Stars Productions, Incorporated, at 537 S. Dearborn street, sixth floor.

Carl Harthill, manager of the Chicago office of Reelcraft, is elated over the heavy bookings of the William Franey one-reel comedies at the Chicago, Milwaukee and Indiana offices of Reelcraft, whose books show that all records have been smashed by these popular comedies.

R. C. Cropper, president of Reelcraft, was in Chicago this week for a short visit and says the same conditions exist at other Reelcraft offices.

L. Reichart, who has been assistant manager of Realart's Chicago Exchange for some months, has been promoted to manager of the Washington office of Realart and has left Chicago to assume his new duties. Manager H. W. Willard is in New York this week attending the Realart Convention.

Sam Katz, of Belaban & Katz, has returned to Chicago after a short visit in New York.

Eddy Brislane, the slayer of William Mills, manager of the Crawford theatre, has been sentenced to hang and his accomplice, Robert Carter, must go to the penitentiary for life. The Allied Amusement Association, through its members, has raised a substantial fund for the benefit of Mrs. Mills and the children left orphans by the murder. Manager Mills was shot down in the ticket booth of the theatre without warning when Brislane and Carter attempted the theft of the day's receipts.

"Nurse Marjorie," the splendid feature running this week at the Woodlawn, Central Park and Riviera, is being booked heavily in the Chicago district, extra days being the rule rather than the exception. Realart Exchange also is doing an exceptional booking business with "Miss Hobbs," starring Wanda Hawley.

One of the interesting pre-views of the week was that of "The Fortune Teller," starring Marjorie Rambeau, which was given at the Playhouse on Thursday. A large crowd of exhibitors were present and Manager Max Levey was pleased with the favorable comments passed on the picture.

Fire in the booth of the Garden theatre, Michigan City, Indiana, destroyed seven reels of film belonging to the Fox Film Company and damaged the theatre to the extent of about $3,000, according to an estimate by Manager Ezra Rhodes.

American Film Company has added two new salesmen to its Chicago staff. They are E. P. Pickler, formerly of Des Moines, Iowa, who will cover the country territory, and B. Schraeder, who came from Indianapolis to cover the city territory.

An extensive billboard advertising campaign is being planned by the new Barbee Loop theatre and a contract has been closed to place one sheets on each of the 250 station platforms of the various Chicago Elevated Railroads. It is understood that each picture to be shown at the Barbee Loop will be given individual exploitation on these elevated billboards.

Frank T. Paul is about to open a new theatre at Carlinville, Illinois, which will be known as the Marble.

J. R. Kratz of Monticello, Illinois, has appointed W. C. Martin manager of his new Princess theatre which he expects to open about the 1st of June.

Among out-of-town exhibitors seen around the Chicago exchanges last week were: Abe Wallerstein of Wallerstein Brothers, Michigan City, Indiana; Walther G. Spoor, Academy theatre, Waukegan; B. A. Wormold, Marquette theatre, La Salle; Lewis Murphy, Majestic theatre, Spring Valley; Harry Gramp, West theatre, Galesburg, Illinois; and Maurice Less of Terre Haute, Indiana.

All the glass doors and the box office of the Home theatre at 1812 Chicago avenue, were destroyed last week by a tin lizzie which ended up in the middle of the house a ruined lady. The theatre was closed for three nights for repairs. The driver of the flivver when hauled out from the wreckage said that he had lost control of the car.

Al. Rosenthal, formerly of Rosenthal and Saperstein, was a Chicago visitor for a very few minutes last week. He came in on the Broadway Limited and left on the Century the same day. It is hinted that something of extra importance brought Al. to Chicago.

Barclay's Spring Opening Big Event in Johnstown

L. W. Barclay, manager of the Nemo theatre, Johnstown, Pa., recently staged his annual spring opening. Above are shown his exterior and interior decorations for the event. Complete details appear on the opposite page.

Barclay's Spring Opening Big Success

EVERY spring L. W. Barclay, manager of the Nemo theatre, one of the Grand Amusement Company's string in Johnston, Pa., sets aside a week for special effort which he has labeled "Spring Opening."

The event for 1920 eclipsed all previous efforts and was likewise successful in the same degree.

Special lobby decorations, an artistic stage setting, big newspaper and other advertising called attention to the "Spring Opening."

The stage setting was a work of art. Especially artistic were the lighting effects. The curtains were drawn over the side stages, closing in the paintings, while the pictures were on. When the pictures closed, the curtain over the main opening —the screen—was closed, and the overture was started by the orchestra. Lights began to fade in dimly on the side stages, starting with blue, then green, red, amber and white. As the lights grew brighter, the curtains were drawn open disclosing the paintings, and the main footlights, borders and prosceniums were brought up slowly.

As a prologue number Mr. Barclay secured two clever local youngsters who had previously appeared at private functions only and their act went over as a great hit. These two little dancers are shown in the layout on the opposite page.

"The Silver Horde" was the feature attraction which Mr. Barclay selected for his "Spring Opening."

In selecting a picture with which to inaugurate the spring season at the Nemo, the management sought a production that would make good the pledge to the public printed on the cover of a neatly arranged program covering the bills for the opening week. "To Nemo patrons," the management pledged "renewed and never-ceasing endeavors to make more entertaining, more uplifting, more ennobling, the projection and presentation of the productions offered during the seasons to come."

From the overture to the final curtain, the performance at Johnstown's "theatre beautiful" was in accord with the most approved standard of motion picture presentation.

Graveyard Stunt Wins Again

HAVING some one sleep in a graveyard, one of the stunts suggested and used considerably in the exploitation of "The Greatest Question," has been given a further o. k. by the management of the Dixie theatre, Fairmont, W. Va.

The Dixie began getting public attention by its newspaper advertising.

The points which the Dixie management emphasized were referring to the cemetery as a "graveyard" in all advertisements and presswork and the repetition of the claim that the "experiment" or "test" is "made in the interest of science." Cemeteries are not often referred to as "graveyards" and the term awakens interest. The "made in the interest of science" is taken seriously by some and as jest by some and works the same purpose in both instances.

Fairmont was much interested in this test. Want advertisements were placed in the newspapers a week in advance of the opening, offering money to man or woman, sleeping in a graveyard "in the interests of science," barring professional spiritualist mediums, returned soldiers and people not speaking English well enough to be readily understood. The first ads barred only spiritualist mediums, and the fact that the want ads were revised and returned soldiers barred made a "story," while the fact that many foreigners were anxious to accept the proposition led to their being barred—the reason advanced being that they could not be readily understood. This suggested that "interviews" in the newspapers would follow the experiment.

It was at first thought that some of those willing to accept the proposition would hesitate to be made prominent in the newspapers in that connection, but the press work was so well handled by E. E. Meredith that everyone was anxious to share in the publicity. One man seventy-eight years old was insistent on making the "experiment." The theatre management hesitated to accept his offer lest he might catch cold, as the weather was not ideal for sleeping in a graveyard on the night of April 10. A one-legged man finally was selected and the interest was maintained in the matter by having the next day's morning paper merely record that the "test" had been made and having the afternoon and morning paper of the next day declare that he "refused to talk."

Effective Presentation Idea for Orchestral Number

IN connection with the rendition of "The Forge in the Forest" by the Rivoli orchestra this week, a very novel and effective presentation idea has been put into effect. The orchestration provides for the use of the anvil and hammer to quite an extent in playing the number. With the house and pit dark except for shaded lights over the musicians' stands, a baby spot has been placed in such a position that it illuminates the outstretched hands of the Rivoli drummer who is manipulating the anvil and hammer and also casts a glow on the drapes, bringing the form of the player and his instruments in silhouette. The spot used is scarlet. The anvil is connected with an electric current that "makes and breaks" as the hammer strikes it, sending off sparks that light up the pit like flashes of lightning.

The effect is novel and pretty and adds much to the tuneful number "The Forge in the Forest" makes as an orchestration.

Uses "Cockeyed" Quartet for Sennet Comedy

The sage who said that there was nothing new under the sun should have been in Dayton, Ohio, recently during the exploitation campaign that was put over by Paul Gray for "Down on the Farm," presented at Loew's Dayton theatre, in that town, and witnessed the hilarity that was created by the use of a "cock eyed" quartette. Not only did the stunt create much talk and attract attention, but it was the means of breaking the house record for the theatre.

Here's the reasons why for the stunt. Knowing that the famous Ben Turpin of "cross eyed" fame was in "Down on the Farm," Mr. Gray sought out the best optician in the town and secured from him the names of cross eyed people. He secured four of them and had them marching through the streets every day for a week prior to the opening of the show, and, besides creating much mirth, the newspapers gave him much space on the stunt. At the opening of the picture and at each performance he had the quartette very oddly arranged on the stage with spot lights streaming on them, while the "hick" orchestra played a "Hokum" overture and the cock eyed quartette tried—tried, we say—to sing. The stunt was a scream from start to finish.

This was but one of the many unique stunts that the management put across in their campaign, they jazzing everything they did from advertising and publicity to the manner in which the overture and the picture was presented.

Lacey's Presentation of "Silver Horde" Pretentious

Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., is noted for the elaborate lobby displays he originates for the attractions booked for the Majestic and among the best of his creations in this line is one used for "The Silver Horde," a recent booking at this theatre.

On the opposite page this display is described in "pictures" more effectively than mere words could possibly accomplish it.

The man in Alaskan furs is "Alaska Jack" Genivin, the foreman of the cannery in the film production of "The Silver Horde" and one of the men who actually mined with Rex Beach in '98 on the Nome beach, and who later was one of the victims of the land grant about which "The Spoilers" centers. A cloud effect machine was used so that during the evening hours a vivid picture of the northern sun was portrayed at the back of the lobby. Four baby spots gave an effective indirect lighting to the entire lobby. A brace of Alaskan dogs cause much interest.

The top portion of the layout shown is a view of the Majestic ushers in their new spring uniforms, in which they appeared for the first time on a recent Sunday morning.

Artistic Settings Particular Forte of Tivoli Theatre

Top Cut—Stage setting and atmospheric prologue used in conjunction with the presentation of "The Idol Dancer," by Turner and Dahnken at the Tivoli opera house, San Francisco as designed by housemanager Frank Costello. The performers for the prologue included Hawaii's most famous prima donna, and a clever native hula-hula dancer. An effect of Kileau seething with burning lava was realistically achieved.

Steurle Presents Dance With "Sex"

Joseph L. Steurle, manager of the Walnut theatre, Louisville, is a live wire who knows to a certainty that it pays to exploit pictures in new and novel ways.

One of Mr. Steurle's prize stunts which set Louisville agog for a sight of the picture was his campaign for "Sex." A fifteen-minute dancing exhibition at every performance before the opening of the show was staged.

Mr. Steurle's prize stunt in a drive that set Louisville fans agog for a sight of "Sex" was a fifteen-minute dancing exhibition at every performance before the opening of the picture. Mlle. Doreen, a well-known terpsichorean artist of Cleveland, was the star of the prelude, the big feature of which was the spider dance, a skilful simulation of the dance staged by Miss Glaum in "Sex." In engaging Mlle. Doreen, Manager Steurle took a leaf out of George Schade's book of exploitation on "Sahara."

Mr. Schade, who is the enterprising manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, who put over the former Louise Glaum feature with such tremendous success with a dancing prologue in which Mlle. Doreen was the performer.

The Walnut's lobby for the week also did its part in helping to crowd the theatre. In the center was a life-size painting of Miss Glaum and surrounding it were a dozen scene stills from the picture. Near the entrance Mr. Steurle had an enlarged reproduction of the spider dance and around it portraits of Mlle. Doreen in her various dancing poses.

"Idol Dancer" Stage Setting Artistic

The showmen who have been looking forward with great anticipation to the prologue which Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, announced, several weeks ago, he would use in behalf of the "Idol Dancer," are now able to examine his stage settings, thanks to photographs which have just been received from the theatre.

Hawaiian dancers, a volcano that seethed and bubbled with fire and lava, toto poles, palm trees and a suggestion of thatched huts were the chief features of the prologue. Delighting effects were brought about by Tom Kenna and the setting was worked out by Jim Stevens, stage manager. The entire prologue was supervised by Mr. Costello, who also arranged for the singing of Mme. Marion Worthington, Hawaiian prima donna, and Miss Pau Lei Lain, a hula dancer, who defied civilization and censors. Critics declared that the setting used for "The Idol Dancer" brought out the true atmosphere of the picture in a way not brought out by previous inner-feature exploitation efforts of the Tivoli.

Remarkable Novelty Added To Criterion Program

AN addition to the Criterion program is presented this week under the title of "The Valley of a Thousand Smokes." The picture consists of a series of remarkable views of a volcanic area in Alaska, which were taken by the National Geographic Society and are being distributed by Educational Films. It presents an array of scenes quite out of the ordinary and justifies an exploitation angle of genuine novelty.

In a series of wonderful long shots "The Valley of a Thousand Smokes" is shown with its numberless fumeroles—miniature craters—belching forth clouds of live steam. Down along the valley as far as the camera takes our vision, craters, big and small, pour forth steady streams of super-heated vapor. No stretch of country that we have seen visualized on the screen has revealed scenes such as are to be found in this strange valley, every crevice of which seems to be a sort of safety valve for some great roaring furnace hidden somewhere down in the depths.

The close-ups disclose some interesting details—cooking breakfast a la fumerole, sizzling mud puddles and other unusual shots, all of which add to the unique character of the presentation. "The Valley of a Thousand Smokes" is not merely a clever title; it is an unusually interesting picture—a scenic that we feel can be truly exploited as something out of the ordinary.

Professional Rube Aids "Down on Farm"

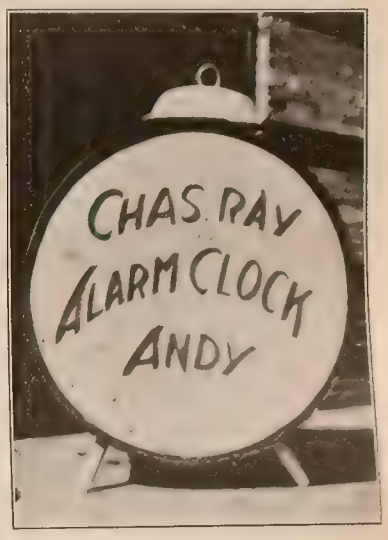
Exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory booking "Down On the Farm" have the opportunity to obtain excellent exploitation in their territory, through the work of Clyde Boak, a professional "Rube," who is lending his services to their promotional stunts, and making a big hit everywhere he has been booked.

Boak is one of the best known professional "Rube's" in the middle west, and immediately upon his learning of the excellent opportunities for exploiting Sennett's comedy, he made a tour of a few of the towns in the Pittsburgh territory and offered his services for $10 per day and railroad fare. He was booked right and left and he will appear in no less than twenty-five towns during the running of the picture, performing his many inimitable stunts.

In his make-up walking through the streets of any town Boak always provokes attention, and his performances of acrobatic stunts, whether it is on the main squares of the highway, riding a bicycle, or climbing the sides of buildings, he draws crowds much like molasses does flies. As a hick-barker he is without rival, and his services have proven big drawing cards and added to the box-office receipts of the theatres in whose behalf he has already appeared.

In many of the towns where the exhibitors use Rube orchestras and have noon-day parades, Boak heads the parade and as the leader is screamingly funny.

Fine Exploitation Idea for Ray Picture



FRANK H. BURNS, who has lately accepted the position of manager of the Rialto theatre, Jacksonville, Florida, one of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises string, comes through with a fine idea for advertising "Alarm Clock Andy" that should appeal especially to exhibitors in the smaller towns since it is inexpensive.

As shown by the accompanying illustration Mr. Burns constructed an "alarm clock" that stood in front of the theatre and invited Jacksonville residents who passed by to come to the Rialto.

The "clock" part was an old bass drum with some paint used to advantage in camouflaging it. The "alarm" was a dishpan fastened to the drum with a screw. Under the pan Mr. Burns placed an electric bell and connected it up with wires and battery in the theatre office. The bell rang every two or three seconds with the result that everybody within hearing distance looked to see where the unusual sound was coming from.

Mr. Burns' method of ringing the bell at intervals was most ingenious. The wires leading from the bell to the office were arranged so that an oscillating electric fan would make a connection when the wings of the fan reached one side with the consequent ringing of the bell for an instant. As the wires were invisible and the fan out of sight it appeared as if the "clock" was doing all the work.

Mr. Burns also used a clock in his presentation. He gave a "Big Ben" to one of the Rialto musicians and in the scene where Ray rises to the tune of the picture alarm, the musician used the "Big Ben." Both schemes worked to perfection, according to Mr. Burns, and were responsible for much added business during the feature's run at the Rialto.

The Rialto's "alarm clock" as it looked when Mr. Burn's placed it in front of the theatre

Why the Utopia Plays 'Em Off the Bat

Painesville, Ohio, is about forty miles out of Cleveland. Its people are regular visitors to the Forest City, read the Cleveland papers and follow the shows there as carefully as do Clevelanders themselves.

That is why the management of the Utopia theatre, Painesville, like to run a picture immediately after its first run engagement at Cleveland. They say that it is easier to ride in on the Cleveland publicity.

But they don't depend upon the publicity a picture has received in Cleveland. They don't sit back and wait for patrons to read the Cleveland papers and then come to see the shows when they are exhibited in Painesville. They do their share toward putting it over, and they do a big share, too.

"On With the Dance" was given a particularly artistic lobby display by H. T. Lederer, resident manager of the Utopia theatre. He took a regular six-sheet of the kind furnished by the exchanges and mounted it on beaver board. But what made the display attractive was the fact that he cut the beaver board for a stretch right across the poster, covered it with orange color crepe paper, and placed a revolving light back of it. When the light was on, it looked just like a golden sunset and was very striking. The caption, "ON WITH THE DANCE" was made transparent in like manner. This display was placed in a frame and put in the lobby of the Utopia. People came from all the surrounding towns to see it. It attracted attention because it was artistic, and because it was altogether novel.

The results were more than satisfactory.

Congratulations to "The Humdinger"

THE Saenger Humdinger, an attractive magazine published by and for the employees of the Saenger Amusement Company Inc., whose theatres cover "Dixie like the dew," for February and March, 1920, has just arrived at our desk.

The number is so interesting, both editorially and mechanically, that we are violating an unwritten rule made imperative by the fact that we receive so many house organs, programs and other booklets published in the interests of theatres that mention of all of them is impossible no matter how meritorious and extend congratulations to the Saenger Company and the editors of the Humdinger on the real class of the publication.

J. H. Saenger, president of the company; E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager, and the other executives are the first officials in the show business we know of to bring the more modern methods of developing a spirit of loyalty, good fellowship by making the Saenger employee personnel a big family so far as it is humanly possible. The Humdinger is a part of this plan but not the least of ideas developed and to be put into effect to make the "Saenger Company a better firm to work for." For instance at the New Orleans offices there is an employees lunch room where the Saengerites can get a good meal for two bits.

However, to return to the Humdinger. The publication is a newsy 16-page magazine filled with interesting little paragraphs which have a particular meaning to the Saenger employees, refers to various members personally with no attempt to "blow the horns" of the officials or "preach."

The Humdinger is edited by Gaston J. Dureau. Maurice F. Barr, manager of the Liberty, New Orleans, and Leon A. Harsh, the Saenger press representative, were associate editors for the February and March issue.

Prints Special Edition for Exploitation Purposes

THE engagement of "The Woman in Room 13" at the Columbia theater, Phoenix, Arizona, was backed by a live-wire exploitation campaign culminating in a stunt which created little short of a furore. The idea that created a sensation and added materially to the box office receipts was new to Phoenix, although it has been used with gratifying results elsewhere.

Citizens of the Arizona city were startled on the morning of April 14th, the first day of the showing of the picture, to find an announcement stamped on the first printed in red ink and read: "Who was the Woman in Room 13? See at the Co- page of the Arizona Republican. It was lumbia Theatre, Today, Tomorrow, Friday and Saturday."

Arrangements had been made with the publishers of the newspaper for the carrying out of this stunt. Five hundred copies of the issue of April 14th were purchased at newsdealers' rates. The type matter was set up a day ahead and run on the first five hundred copies off the press. These were distributed free at hotels, barber shops, restaurants, pool rooms and other places where prospective motion picture patrons were likely to be found. The papers aroused so much comment that a number of the leading merchants in Phoenix tried to arrange for similar advertising.

Prior to this final splurge, a consistent campaign had been conducted in the columns of the Arizona Republican and through street exploitation of various kinds. The picture opened against strong opposition and during three days of its run was forced to compete with Gus Hills' Minstrels

Branham Shatters Minneapolis Tradition

"Auditorium No Good for Pictures" Idea Proven Erroneous

FOR those who have feared to tackle one of "those no-good-for-pictures" theatres there is an object lesson in the experience of Charles G. Branham, who has been managing the Minneapolis Auditorium for several weeks for United Artists with this company's attractions used as the feature on the weekly change of bill. The Auditorium is situated about five blocks from the "loop" theatre district. The great majority of showmen were of the opinion that people would not walk that extra distance to see a picture. The Auditorium was originally constructed to be anything but a picture theatre and opportunity for street and lobby advertising is reduced to a minimum.

With everything against him, except perhaps public opinion, Mr. Branham began early to tell the public of Minneapolis and St. Paul that the Auditorium would shortly be opened as a motion picture theatre with Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna." The first shot was in the form of a 60-inch formal announcement advertisement in all the newspapers. This was run three weeks before the opening day. It was immediately followed by a series of "teaser" ads. Mr. Branham also lost no time in taking advantage of the fact that some competition in town was news and both the Minneapolis and St. Paul newspapers carried a great amount of publicity. Twice a week until the opening day, ads ranging in size from 30 to 60 inches were carried, in addition to daily "amusement" column smaller ads. On opening day a full page size was carried in all papers.

One of the best of the exploitation was a "jingle" contest which proved the most popular of anything of the sort ever used in Minneapolis, according to the Daily News.

A daily prize of $5.00 was awarded for the best jingle and a new one was published every day. The only requirement was the mention of Miss Pickford's name. This was continued for ten days and aroused great interest in the star. Thousands of "jingles" were received.

Another contest was that for girls who most closely resembled Mary Pickford. A $10.00 prize was the award but the real attraction was a chance for the contestants to see themselves in the movies. Those who bore a resemblance to the star were filmed in various parts of the city, making, when completed, a scenic of the city. This film was screened during the opening week.

Throughout the entire advance campaign, very effective displays were secured through the use of white letters on decorative, black background and cuts from photographs. Combination zinc etching and halftone cuts were used extensively and with great results.

Sid Grauman's Exploitation Ideas Told in Pictures

The way in which Sir Ernest Shackleton's South Polar Expedition picture, "The Bottom of the World" was played up along Broadway is to be seen in this photograph of the Rivoli theatre. The Rivoli theatre used a special electric sign completely across its front to advertise the Shackleton picture. Reports from every part of the country indicate that this picture is being similarly featured and is proving one of the educational, scenic and dramatic successes of the year

Grauman Improves on Overall Idea

A battle was started against Mr. H. C. Living at Grauman's Cinema Temple last week when a review of cotton frocks was given by the aid of thirty living models. The special number was named by Sid Grauman "The Sassy Jane Fashion Review," Sassy Jane being the brand name of cotton dresses made by a Los Angeles company which was started three years ago by a nineteen year old girl, Jun Rand. Later it was financed by Sid Chaplin, who is vice-president, and the gowns designed by Miss Rand are now made by 450 girls.

The idea of such a cotton dress review was brought to Grauman by the suggestion of prominent men that overhalls be worn. He secured the models, and the Sassy Jane Company loaned the cotton dresses which are suitable for every occasion. The presentation opened with a 400 foot film showing close-ups of a number of the designs made at this factory. A short spoken prologue followed which was recited by a girl in gingham, after which the drapes parted and the stage contained a pretty garden, with the moon rising in the background. An Irish gardner in overhalls sang "Mother McCree." The garden wall encircled the stage, and back of this was concealed an elevator which raised one of the models to the center of the top of the garden wall from which she decended on a handsome grand stairway to the front of the stage for a few seconds to show the beauty of the gown she wore and then passed off until all of the thirty models had gone over the stage in review. There was then a general ensemble, and the gardner and the girls sang, "They're Like A Great Big Boquet," which ended the act.

Newman Features Popular Songs

During the recent "Sam Fox" week in Kansas City the Newman theatre featured "Alabama Moon," the popular song in its exploitation for the various attractions on the bill for that week.

In front of the theatre were two large signs painted in colors, announcing "Alabama Moon" as a special attraction. Window display cards featuring the song were placed in windows all around the town. And the song was advertised all over the city on twenty-four billboards.

The staging was wonderful. The setting was a southern plantation, with an old log cabin on the left, a cotton field at the right, a big tree in the foreground with the moon shining through its branches. As the orchestra, consisting of forty-one pieces, played the first strain pianissimo, the curtains were drawn, and Lloyd Garrett, one of the foremost singers of Kansas City, seated on a log under the tree in a characteristic darky make-up, sang the song through.

The audience went wild—applauded, whistled, etc.—and the applause went on long after the feature picture was flashed. Enthusiastic applause has been heard before, but nothing that could compare to what the audiences accorded this feature during the entire week.

Mr. Forbstein, musical director at the Newman, played the song throughout the feature picture as the music theme.

Capacity crowds thronged the theatre during the entire week, which merely shows how a house can increase its prestige and business through broad minded and progresssive ideas.

Teaser Folder Works Well

A "teaser" was issued by Manager Herb Jennings, of the Allen Danforth theatre, Toronto, for the presentation at the Danforth of "Should a Husband Forgive?"

"He said—No!" appeared on the outside of the folder. The second page read as follows: "She said—Yes!" The third page: "Let the film sermon decide." Then follows a brief announcement about the picture.

Old fashioned handbills of a gaudy type were used by Manager Jennings to advertise "In Old Kentucky" as the feature for recent dates. Two-color printing of red and black was used on yellow stock of cheap quality and the announcement, on both sides of the sheet, was written up in circus style. "Come Early! Whoopee! Come Early! The Mammoth Show Is Here! The Sensation of the Year! See Hundreds of Actors—Hundreds of Horses—Thrills and More Thrills. Sensation After Sensation—A Tremendous Spectacle. Beautiful Women and Fighting Men, etc., etc., etc." Such were the statements appearing on this "herald." It was meant to be a sensational piece of literature and it formed a distinct change from the modest folders, cards and souvenirs that Manager Jennings had been using.

How California Theatre Put Over "Excuse My Dust"

The motor car played a prominent part in the exploitation of "Excuse My Dust" when this feature played the California theatre, San Francisco. "Nick" Ayer, publicity director for the theatre, had a number of cars out with "Excuse My Dust" signs as shown in this cut attached. The feature had an especial appeal to San Francisco, as the locale of the picture was laid in and about that city. This fact was also played up in all the newspaper advertising in the effort to give the showing the "local color" touch. The lines waiting to get in shown in the top cut will demonstrate that the California was successful with its advertising campaign

Big Town Advertising by the Small Town Exhibitor

Longmont is a long way from being the largest city in California but when it comes to exploitation for pictures it is decidedly on the map. Gynan and Rightwet, managers of the Strand, set a fast pace in live wire showmanship. On this page is shown some of the Strand's recent exploitation.

(Above)

Effective "bally-hoo" stunt used to let Longmont residents know that the Strand was playing "Slam Bang Jim." Nothing especially artistic or new about this but still effective publicity.

(Right)

When the Strand played "Better Times" one of the exploitation stunts used for the engagement was an old car as shown in the cut to which a faithful dobbin was hitched. The novel outfit caused a lot of excitement in the little city.

(Left)

For the Strand's engagement of "The Sagebrusher" a float, as shown in this cut, was driven about the city, the banners along the side of the wagon explaining to Longmont people what the parade was all about.

Goldman Presents "Shore Acres" with Prologue

THE unusually attractive prologue arranged by William Goldman, director of the Kings theatre, St. Louis, Mo. in conjunction with the presentation of "Shore Acres," was the cynosure of considerable public attention and much favorable newspaper comment.

The scene depicted the wreck of the "Liddy Ann," which was the name of the vessel in James A. Herne's classic story. The storm effect was graphically produced with lights and lightning, the drums and an actually moving ocean wave. The lighthouse blinked lambently until it was apparently extinguished by Martin Berry of the story. Then the ship which had been slowly creeping across the dimly illuminated horizon was suddenly carried off in a whirl of momentary cyclone and dashed on the light-house rocks. The wreck was depicted in the most natural manner, even to the most minute detail.

Off stage Glen Eastman, a leading base singer of the city, rendered the solo, "The Bell in the Lighthouse." The effect which resulted from both the vocal and scenic display was an important factor in bringing the picture into the popular favor.

As an exploitation feature in connection with "Shore Acres," a man whose height was over the six-foot mark, was attired in a canvas suit painted to resemble a lighthouse. He paraded the streets in the vicinity of the theatre with a sign on his back reading: "See the lights go out in the light house at the Kings theatre beginning Sunday, May 2." This means of exploitation has found considerable favor in the eyes of St. Louisans and their response was in the way of increased receipts at the box-office.

Reisenfeld Stages Prologue for "Sea Wolf"

AS a prologue number Managing Director Reisenfeld is presenting a musical act that provides both some fine singing and a pleasing atmosphere for the feature being shown at the Rivoli this week, "The Sea Wolf."

A stage setting consisting of a canvas showing a sea scene with a night sky above the horizon line and wings representing walls of rocks as if the spectator was looking out on the ocean from a narrow high walled ravine is provided.

Grouped about the stage, some reclining, with others seated and standing, about a dozen of the male members of the Rialto-Rivoli chorus sing sailor songs under the title of "A Sailor's Chorus."

All the performers are dressed in the costumes of sailors or fishermen. A full moon is showing half way down toward the horizon. The back drop is shaded in green and blue, to blend with artistic lights as if from the moon, and discloses a schooner of the type in which the producers of "The Sea Wolf" used for the filming of the Jack London story. There is no attempt to use mechanical effects except in the lightings.

Grauman Gets San Diego Manager

W. E. Jones, who for several years has been house manager of the Pickwick and Superba theatres, San Diego, has been engaged by Sid Grauman, and is serving as assistant to house manager Bob Blair at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles. Jones, during his ten years of office at San Diego, was responsible for a number of exceedingly live wire stunts which resulted in exceptional business for the theatre in his charge, many of which have been chronicled in this department of Motion Picture News.

Isis, Kansas City, Gives "On with Dance" Much Publicity

T. Bidwell McCormick, a brother of the famous S. Barrett, celebrated his inauguration as managing director of the Isis theatre, Kansas City by putting over an exploitation campaign for "On With the Dance," which would have done credit to his illustrious brother.

The newspaper advertising was begun early and was not discontinued during the showing. Drug and confectionery stores were lined up for the display of specially designed window cards. Before the opening two telephones were kept busy calling up hotels, apartments and furnished rooms, the speakers saying that many persons from out of town were expected to see the picture and the presentation it was to have and also dilating somewhat on the feature's merits. Then the persons talking would add that a list of the available rooms for transients was being made to accommodate this expected crowd.

The Isis presentation of "On With the Dance" included an elaborate prologue enacted by five dancers in Russian costumes. This act contained the rendition of many of the principal Russian dances by professional and talented artists. During the screening at the subtitle, "On With the Dance," the picture was stopped and curtains drawn while a toe dancer costumed in flowing white interpreted the "passing of Sonia" to the strains of "The Passing of the Swan." This dance was given in lights beginning in soft blue floods and gradually changed to purple and from purple to amber. The picture was continued immediately after the completion of the dancing number

New Sennett Comedy Released June 15

Mack Sennett announces the near-completion of his fifth five-reel super-production, "Married Life," and the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., announces its release June 15th. The First National, following the triumphant success of Mr. Sennett's fourth five-reeler, "Down on the Farm," came to negotiations with the Comedy King and secured his next two productions in similar size. "Married Life" is the first; the second is in the course of creation at the Sennett Studios and will be released by First National ninety days after the release of "Married Life."

Adding to the effectiveness of the comedy from a pictorial point of view, is the presence of the Sennett girls en masse. They are seen as beautiful nurses and render tolerable the adventures that Ben Turpin encounters at the hospital.

New Exchange System is Almost Ready

Educational's new exchange system in United States was practically completed this week with the announcement of arrangements for offices in Atlanta, Ga., and Dallas, Texas, in which the South and South Eastern territory will be handled. Henry Ginsberg of the New York office visited Atlanta and selected Arthur C. Bronberg, who is one of the best known distributors of motion pictures in the South.

Arrangements for the Dallas exchange were made at the time of the recent meeting of independent exhibitor interests in that section with the representatives of the First National Exhibitors Circuit. The manager of the Dallas exchange will be announced later.

Hal Hodes to Leave Universal Co.

Hal Hodes, editor of Universal's News Screen Magazine, has resigned and will sever his connection with the big film company on May 29th next. He plans to enter a new phase of the film industry. He is not ready to make his plans public.

Live News From The Producers

Hodkinson's Summer Plans

Names Releases That Are Expected to Overcome Slump of Hot Spells

THE W. W. HODKINSON organization announces that it "will stick with the exhibitor through the summer season, supplying him the quality of pictures which will enable him to defy the effects of the hot spells. 'Sex' will be one of the big assets in every exhibitor's summer campaign," declares the Hodkinson organization. "The drawing powers of 'Sex' have successfully defied the wet and the cold and may be trusted to overcome the handicap of heat. Then there is Benjamin B. Hampton's 'Riders of the Dawn' which has created quite a bit of gossip on Broadway by the manner in which it sustained a high average of attendance during its recent engagement at the Strand, in spite of very adverse weather conditions.

"Another Louise Glaum picture is in the making, called 'Love Madness.' This production measures up to the high standard set by star and producer in 'Sex,' the miracle picture of the year. Expert opinion on the quality of this coming Read Gluam release is highly favorable. The theme of the play is as fascinating and as full of thrills and sensational surprises as 'Sex.'

"The Bosworth picture, which is called 'Bucko McAllister,' also produced by J. Parker Read, Jr., shows Bosworth in one of those character parts in the portrayal of which he stands unrivaled in the screen world."

Walsh to Start Another

Director Makes Preparations for Second Mayflower Picture

COINCIDENT with the launching of "The Deep Purple," his initial independent subject, R. A. Walsh announces the completion of preliminary preparations for his second production, to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through the First National Exhibitor's circuit. It is expected that actual filming will commence within the ensuing week.

Details concerning the new Walsh feature are being withheld for the present. It is estimated, however, that the theme and treatment will be marked by a radical departure from that of "The Deep Purple." The continuity prepared by Director Walsh in collaboration with Earle Browne was completed last week. The director is now engaged in assembling the cast, which, it is said, will contain a number of prominent players.

A location expert attached to the Walsh staff is now in Baltimore making arrangements for exterior settings. Immediately upon his return, the director, accompanied by a large company of players and technical experts will entrain for the city where many of the film's most important scenes will be photographed.

In order to facilitate production, William C. Menzies, art director, will prepare the interior settings at the Paragon Studio during the company's stay in Baltimore, making it possible for the director to begin "shooting" immediately upon his return.

Encouraged by the success of "The Deep Purple" which has been accorded an enthusiastic reception by press and public at its first run showings in New York, Boston and Chicago, Mr. Walsh will produce his second feature on a scale of exceptional lavishness. The story, it is said, is well suited to elaborate scenic treatment.

In filming his new offering, Director Walsh will have the assistance of the same technical staff which contributed so substantially to the success of "The Deep Purple." It includes Hal Horne, assistant director; Earle Browne, scenarist; William C. Menzies, art director, and Jacques Bizeul, cameraman.

Paramount to Reissue Pickford Picture

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which recently announced the early re-issuing of "Old Wives for New," the first and one of the most successful of Cecil B. DeMille's series of dramas of the marriage relation, and Mary Pickford's Artcraft picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," will release them both in June, the former on the 6th and the Pickford picture on the 20th.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was originally released by Artcraft nearly three years ago. The cast chosen was a competent one, Eugene O'Brien being Mr. Pickford's leading man and the support including such well known players as Charles Ogle, Marjorie Daw, Helen Jerome Eddy, Hay Kelso, Jane Wolf, Josephine Crowell, Jack MacDonald, Violet Wilkey, Frank Turner, Kate Toncry and Emma Gerdes.

Charles Ray Adhering Closely to Original

Charles Ray's screen version of "Forty Five Minutes from Broadway," the George M. Cohan classic which he is adapting to the screen, is being kept close to the original form which had such great success during the years of its stage vogue. The wide popularity of the original Cohan play and the star's recognition of its value in the form known to a vast public has convinced its producers that the biggest success would attend a screen version following closely the lines of the popular stage piece. "Forty five Minutes from Broadway" is the first of the star's new production which Arthur S. Kane will present for First National release.

American to Release Minter Special Soon

"Peggy Rebels," adapted from "The Mate of the Sally Ann," a "Flying A" Special starring Mary Miles Minter, will be put on the market the latter part of this month, according to a recent announcement.

The scenes were filmed on the picturesque coast of the Pacific where many beautiful views of the rocky shore and the sea beyond were snapped. The filming was directed by Henry King.

Neilan Likes Work of Colleen Moore

Marshall Neilan feels that he has another "find" in Colleen Moore, the little actress, now appearing opposite Wesley Barry, in the first Neilan production, featuring the boy actor. Miss Moore has already had considerable screen experience.

In Colleen Moore, Mr. Neilan found the exact type he had been seeking for the Wesley Barry picture. After the very first scene the director became highly enthusiastic over the talents of the little actress. "I consider Colleen Moore one of the big possibilities of the future," said he, in discussing her work. "Above all things she is just as natural a born artist as little Wesley Barry is. She presents a type that in itself cannot help but prove popular with motion picture patrons."

Allan Dwan Starts His Sixth Mayflower

Actual work on the sixth and last Allan Dwan production for Mayflower was started last week when Dwan, his cast, and staff left the Brunton studios for a week on location in the mountain country of the California Sierras.

Mary Thurman and Niles Welch will play the leading roles in the all-star cast. Miss Thurman has played leads with William Russell and William Hart. Niles Welch played the lead in Vitagraph's latest production, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." Joseph Dowling, who created the role of the Miracle Man in the George Loane Tucker picture is also in the cast. Frank Campeau, George Hackathorn, Eugenie Besserer and Stanton Williams are other important players. First National will release the production.

"Suds" to Be Released June 27 is Report

"Suds," Mary Pickford's latest United Artists' production is now complete and in the hands of the printer. Hiram Abram, of United Artists, announces that this production will be released June 27.

With the exception of a brief retrospect, Miss Pickford is seen as a poor, woebegone slavey in a hand laundry in the slums of London. This production is credited by the United Artists officials who have seen it as being the best picture that Miss Pickford has ever done and absolutely unique in the line of stories and characterizations.

Vitagraph Party Goes to Work by Plane

According to Vitagraph, Tom Terriss, who is directing "The Girl From the Sky," Marguerite De La Motte, Wallace MacDonald and several of their supporting players, as well as the heads of the different technical staff, recently made a trip to "location" on a number of hydro-airplanes that are being used in "The Girl From the Sky." The company started from an aviation camp near Los Angeles and landed without mishap at Catalina Island within a short distance of the sets that had already been constructed for the picture.

Exhibitors See Mayer Film

Mildred Harris Chaplin Picture Pleases First National Showmen

THE next two dollar motion-picture production and the big picture of 1920, according to a number of exhibitors who attended the First National Convention in Chicago, will be the film now in the making by Louis B. Mayer starring Mildred Harris Chaplin.

The production, as yet unnamed and untitled, is said to have created a sensation when shown privately to several prominent exhibitors, particularly as Mrs. Chaplin is the newest of the big stars and Mr. Mayer is one of the youngest and newest of the big producers.

Five months have already been consumed in preparing and "shooting" the picture and at least another month or two will be required to complete the cutting, titling and assembling. It was personally directed by John Stahl and every detail was accomplished in a lavish style. It was at Mr. Mayer's request that Mr. Stahl took the unfinished film to Chicago to get a line on what the exhibitor thought of it.

Because titles play such a prominent part in the making of a picture, Stahl decided to leave the production untitled in submitting it to a jury of unbiased persons. Accordingly the picture was shown with not one single title or subtitle, no art embellishments and no music.

The picture, the name of which is withheld until its release through First National, will be shown to the public next fall. Mr. Mayer refused to go into details regarding the picture, as he intends to launch it as a surprise. It will be a special in the full sense of the word and admission prices will run to two dollars.

This is only another illustration of Mr. Meyer's determination to make pictures of the finest quality, which should bring in big money at the box office.

E. J. Peil to Appear in Hampton Production

Edward J. Peil has been engaged by B. B. Hampton to impersonate a Chinese role in the forthcoming production of "The Money Changers" Peil has played a number of similar parts in recent releases including "Broken Blossoms" for D. W. Griffith.

"The Branded Mystery" Making Progrress

Rapid progress is being made on "The Branded Mystery," the new Ben Wilson serial, which is being made on the West Coast, under the supervision of the star-director who first rose to serial fame with "Voice on the Wire."

First of Paramount Scenics Received

The first of the series of pictures of the lower Pacific, secured by the Paramount-South Sea Expedition, have been received by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and will be released in the Paramount Magazine in one of the June issues. The title for the initial instalment, which depict the unusual scenery and customs in the lower Pacific, is "Beneath the Southern Cross."

Under the auspices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and various scientific and educational institutions, a small group of Boston scientists and motion picture men sailed from Marblehead, Mass., last December in the 125-foot power yacht Ajax, bound for the Southern Pacific. "Under the Southern Cross" is the first of the pictures revealing the breadth and intensity of the party's exploration.
PRODUCERS

Urges That Exhibitors Select Stories

Richard Stanton, director of many Fox pictures, has outlined a new departure in collaboration between the exhibitor and picture producer. He believes that a committee of exhibitors selecting screen material, would mark a step forward in the industry.

"I, for one," said Mr. Stanton, "would be glad to direct any story upon which has been set the stamp of exhibitor approval. As I am interested in one thing only, the production of box office successes, I would appreciate suggestions from the exhibitors in regard to this or any other plan which will raise the standard of our mutual livelihood."

Pathe to Start Drive on Blackton Pictures

A concentrated and extended drive on Blackton feature productions will be inaugurated this month by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Preparatory to launching this drive, Pathe is now conducting a publicity campaign which will be of material assistance to exhibitors in presenting the Blackton pictures to the public.

Particular stress is to be laid upon "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier," all of which have been released. "Passers-by," a June release, also will be thoroughly promoted by the Pathe sales force.

More Chicago Houses to Play Vitagraph

Vitagraph's increased activities in Chicago and its environs has just been further evidenced by the addition of twenty-six first class theatres which will now present Vitagraph stars. Through contracts just signed with Lubliner and Trinz, fourteen theatres controlled by them were added to those already showing Vitagraph productions, and twelve more were added through a similar contract with the Asher Brothers, who have now included the Larry Semon comedies in their bookings.

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

BRUNTON

ROBERT BRUNTON is to engage in the production of a series of all star features, the first of which will be "The Devil to Pay," which is to be made under the direction of Ernest C. Warde from the story by Frances Nemo Greene. Director Warde has just returned from a vacation following a year of constant filming of J. Warren Kerrigan and Bessie Barriscale subjects.

The Robert Brunton studios have acquired an additional ten-acre plot adjoining the studios, and this is now being enclosed for the use of exterior settings. Improvements inaugurated at the Brunton plant include the making of three miles of oil and gravel roadways costing approximately $20,000; the erection of a forty-foot tower to be used for drying the hose of the studio fire department, and the purchase of a fire engine and a steam roadway roller for use at the plant.

Frank Gereghty, who has served as assistant to Director Ernest Warde in the making of Kerrigan productions for Robert Brunton, leaves for New York this week to direct the making of twenty-four features for the recently organized American Picture Associates, a new syndicate said to be headed by William Howard Taft.

Director Roy Clements of the Dial Film Company is working at the Brunton studio making the necessary preparations for the filming of "Hearts of Ireland." Myles McCarthy, who has been starred in Klaw and Erlanger stage successes, has been engaged to play the leading role in this.

"Who Am I?" a story by Max Brandt, has been purchased by Harry Rapf, and will be filmed by Henry Kolker upon the completion of that director's present subject, "The Palace of Darkened Windows."

Cast for the sixth and last Alan Dwan production for Mayflower has been announced and includes Mary Thurman and Niles Welch as leads, with the other principal parts taken by Joseph J. Dowling, Eugenie Besserer, Frank Campeau and George Hackathorn.

SELIG-MAYER

COL. W. N. SELIG is making a five-reel farce comedy from the old time stage play, "In for the Night." Fred Sullivan has been borrowed from the Christie Film Company to direct the making of this, and the leads are taken by Irene Wallace and Harry Depp. The company has been working on this film for about three weeks, and are now taking up the making of a great number of animal scenes which will constitute an important part of the farce when completed.

Louis B. Mayer returned from the Chicago convention of the First National Exhibitors' Association all smiles as the result of the reception tendered the two subjects shown there prior to release. One of these, "The Yellow Typhoon," stars Anita Stewart, and the other is the unnamed subject starring Mildred Harris Chaplin.

Producer Mayer now has in the making "Harriet and the Piper," starring Anita Stewart under the direction of Bertram Bracken, and "Old Dad" being made by Director Lloyd Ingraham with Mildred Harris Chaplin as the star. The casts of both of these pictures have previously been given in this department.

F. P. LASKY

THREE permanent titles were selected this week for forthcoming Lasky productions. "Behold My Wife" will be the permanent title for "The Translation of a Savage," now being completed by George Melford. The Ethel Clayton film made under the working title of "All in a Night," which is an adaptation from the Samuel Merwin story, "Dinner at Eight," will be released under the title of "Crooked Streets." This picture was directed by Paul Powell. The William D. Taylor production of boy life in a great city, from an original story and scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers, will be known on the screen as "The Soul of Youth." Mr. Taylor will make the last scenes for this film this week, and will then give his attention to the preparatory work for the filming of "The Furnace," by Pam.

Edward Dillon, who came to the coast to direct "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" for Metro, was engaged by Famous Players-Lasky this week and is shortly to go East to direct Billie Burke.

Announcement is made that Ethel Clayton is to go to London to work in the new producing plant of Famous Players-Lasky. However, plans now made provide she will not leave the Hollywood studios for about two months. She is now working in "A City Sparrow," and following this will appear in "Rosanne O'Zanne," screen version of which is being written by Mary O'Connor, editor of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department.

Bryant Washburn is to remain with Famous Players-Lasky for one more story following "Burglar Proof," which is now being produced. The story selected is "Wanted a Blemish," and the continuity is now being written by Douglas Bronston.

Wallace Reid has returned from a four weeks' speaking stage engagement in San Francisco, and will begin work immediately in the filming of "The Charm School," a Saturday Evening Post story prepared for the screen by Tom Geraghty.

Charles Maigne, who has been on the coast for the past several months, is to return to the Famous Players-Lasky studio in the East. He will be accompanied by Tom Meighn, and they will serve as director and star respectively in the making of "The Frontier of the Stars."

Other films now in the making are, "The Life of the Party," starring Roscoe Arbuckle, and the William C. DeMille production, "Conrad in Quest of His Youth."

GOLDWYN

THE stage play made famous by Leo Dietrichstein, "The Great Lover," is shortly to be put in production at the Goldwyn studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Continuity for this well known play is now being prepared, and the cast will be selected within the next week.

The Aborigines' village for the vision sequence of "Empire Builders," the Mary Roberts Rinehart story being filmed under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, has been completed in the wild sea coast country north of Santa Monica, and scenes are being taken, and this week hundreds of negroes are being used and this portion promises to be the most spectacular and colorful section of the photodrama. One of the big scenes for this is that of the cannibals putting a visitor to death by the much talked of method of boiling him alive.

The company producing "The Black Pawl" has gone to Catalina Island where they will work under the direction of Reginald Barker. The sea scenes will take approximately two weeks, and the principals taking part in these are Russell Simpson, who takes the name role; James Mason, who plays Red Pawl, and Robert Kortman, who appears as Spiess. The continuity for this play was written by J. G. Hawks, head of the Goldwyn scenario department.

The Jack Pickford Company filming "The Man Who Had Everything," is in San Francisco, and Director Victor Schertzinger has completed the filming of "Rose Alvira," and Mabel Normand, the star, has gone East on a short vacation.

FOX

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by the publicity department of the William Fox studios this week that the last sequence is now being filmed for the big five or six-reel Hampton Del Ruth comedy production. In speaking of this setting, it was said it is perhaps the most expensive ever erected for a comedy, covering at it does, more space than any previous setting of the kind. No title is given out for this comedy, and plans provide that no definite name will be given the subject until the name has been approved by the eastern offices of the William Fox Company. It will probably be several weeks before the finished print is sent from the studio.

The William Farnum Company has gone to San Francisco to spend three weeks in the filming of sea scenes for "The Scuttlers," adapted from the novel by Clyde Westover. J. Gordon Edwards is continuing as Farnum's director, and this picture will mark the return of Jackie Saunders to the screen. Miss Saunders has been selected to play opposite Farnum in this production, following an absence of about two years from Los Angeles studios. She was starred in a number of productions released by World Film several years ago.

T. N. Heffron, now directing Buck Jones in "Fire Brand Trevison," is making good progress, and the William Russell Company will shortly finish "The Twins of Suffering Creek." The latter is being directed by Scott Dunlap, and Louise Lovely is playing opposite William Russell. Helen Stone and Malcolmn Tripe play the parts of the four-year old twins.

Two productions have been finished in the past week. Shirley Mason has worked in all scenes for "The Little Wanderer" and Eileen Percy has completed her work in the Paul Cazaneuve directed subject "Her Honor the Mayor."

UNIVERSAL

UNIVERSAL CITY is particularly quiet, for it so happens that more than half the companies now at work are on distant locations, and will be away from the big studio for a week or more.

The company filming "Marama" is working at an island off the California coast where a South Sea Island village has been built. This picture is being directed by Norman Dawn and stars Edith Roberts.

Lynn Reynolds is directing a company at Big Bear Lake, 150 miles out of Los Angeles, where they are making scenes for "The Red Lane," a tale of the Northwest, starring Frank Mayo.

Harry Carey is working at Victorville on the desert sequence of "Fightin' Job," by H. H. Van Loan. The direction is in charge of Reeves Eason.

"The Moon Riders" company, directed by Albert Russell and featuring Art Acord, is at Yosemite Valley, and Jacques Jaccard is filming scenes for "The Death Trap," a Northwest mounted police feature in Poccima Canyon, Leonard Clapham and Virginia Fair are the principals.

A number of companies making short reel subjects are at work at the Universal plant. "Hoot" Gibson is working in a two-reel Western titled "Hesitatin'," with Lucille Ruby as his leading woman. Phil Rosen is making a two-reel melodrama titled "A Happy Fool," and Joseph McDonough and Horace Devies are co-directing a comedy titled "Twin Lizzies." "The Way of the Law" is a dramatic story with Western atmosphere being directed by William J. Craft for the Oscar Jacobs Production Company. The subject features Eileen Sedgwick and Joe Moore, and is to be released by Universal.

Four comedy companies are at work. J. A. Howe is making a satire on the Federal prohibition measure titled "The American Desert," and James Davis is directing Charles Dorety and Lillian Byron in a subject that will feature the Century girls. "An Awful Skate" and "Should Waiters Marry?" are nearing completion. The latter features George Ovey.

Martha Mansfield, one of the beauties of the stage and screen, who is appearing in the American Cinema Corporation production, "His Brother's Keeper"

Messrs. Lyons and Moran have selected Ann Cornwall as their leading woman for their next comedy feature, "La La Lucille," from the musical comedy of the same name, and will have their entire cast selected to begin work the latter part of this week.

Priscilla Dean is next to play in an original photoplay, story of which was written by Tod Browning, who directed "The Virgin of Stamboul" with this star. Lucien Hubbard, editor of the scenario department at Universal, is writing the continuity for this feature.

NATIONAL

INNOVATIONS which the producers believe will materially increase interest in serials, is to be introduced in "The Son of Tarzan," now being made by the National Film Corporation of America, under the direction of Harry J. Revier. The first episode of this serial will have a prologue of approximately 500 feet to give the theatre patrons an idea of the first three of the famous Tarzan books by Edgar Rice Burroughs to make a setting for the fourth or, "The Son of Tarzan," which is being filmed as a serial. Each of the succeeding episodes will have a pictorial synopsis of preceding release which will briefly tell the portion of the story shown before. The company is now working on scenes of the first three episodes using a tropical jungle setting and several yachts.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation will handle the Flannigan and Edwards comedies now being made by Director Harry Edwards at the National studio. Eddie Flannigan recently played in National Hall Room Boys comedies, and Georgie Edwards recently returned from over seas where he was cited for bravery in the Argonne Forest battles.

The National studios is undergoing a material change both with respect to personnel and equipment and C. A. Willat, new general manager, announces that everything will be in readiness shortly for the filming of a number of adaptations from well known books.

J. D. HAMPTON

TWO productions are in the making at the Jesse D. Hampton studios, and plans are being made for the filming of a number of other subjects. Paul Scardon, recently engaged as director, following an engagement at the Goldwyn, has begun work on the Blanche Sweet production, "Port O' Caprice," which gives the star the role of a Broadway actress and her experiences between seasons while in the pursuit of a husband. Albert Roscoe is leading man, and Edwin Stevens, George Kauwa head a notable cast.

The Robert Thornby directed unit making an all star special, "Half a Chance," is in San Francisco filming ferryboat scenes. Mahlon Hamilton as Sailor Burke is to escape by diving into San Francisco harbor while wearing manacles. Lillian Hall is the leading woman, and the cast includes Sidney Ainsworth, Little Mary McAllister, Tom Guise, Josephine Crowell and a number of others.

"The Brass Bottle," from the F. Anesty stage success, is to be filmed with H. B. Warner under the direction of Henry King. Both the star and director are now on a vacation. Edwin Stevens will play the role of genii which he created on the stage in this film.

"Leona Goes a Hunting," the sixth of the Blanche Sweet features, is now being edited, and in the opinion of K. E. Anderson, film editor of the Hampton studios, this will surpass any of the Sweet subjects released to date.

VITAGRAPH

THE William Duncan, "The Silent Avenger" serial company is using the mammoth tank at the Vitagraph plant for harbor scenes. The stern of a large ocean liner has been built in the tank, and fire engines of local departments were used to secure necessary water effects. A setting requiring ten acres of ground is now being built for use by this company.

Mary Miles Minter in her latest Realart picture, "Jenny Be Good"

The electrical department of the Vitagraph has found it necessary to add additional facilities to increase the electrical supply to 22,000 volts. This is made necessary because of the trick electrical effects being used in "Hidden Dangers," the Joe Ryan-Jean Paige serial to be released following Duncan's "The Silent Avenger." Because many of the effects in this depend upon trick photography, an additional camera has been added to the staff.

The Tom Terris Company staged a big hotel fire scene in Long Beach this week when more than 200 people were used for scenes in the picture tentatively titled, "The Girl Out of the Sky," which has Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite De La Motte as leads of an all star cast.

METRO

THE Metro studio is to be the rendezvous of many prominent authors of popular present day fiction, according to announcement made by Bayard Veiller, who returned from a business trip to New York this week. The authors are expected to arrive in Los Angeles early in June to work with the Metro scenario department in the adaptation of some of their present stories, and also to write special stories for the screen.

The list of plot makers includes Irvin Cobb, whose first story for Metro will be "The Five Dollar Baby," with an all star cast. Others engaged according to the statement by Bayard Veiller are Henry Roland, Arthur Somers Roache, George Gibbs Turner, Arthur Stringer, Don Byrne and Lucia Chamberlain.

June Mathis is to go East for Metro to work with Maxwell Karger at the New York studio, and plans to leave Los Angeles within two weeks. Miss Mathis has been at the west coast since the Metro producing forces were transferred to Hollywood, and in that time has supervised the continuities of many of the plays. It is intimated that her stay in the East is to be permanent.

The "Hearts Are Trumps" Drury Lane Melodrama company, being directed by Rex Ingram, has gone to San Rafael, California, for exteriors for this Metro production.

The George Turner story, "Held in Trust," which is to be a starring vehicle for May Allison, has been put in production under the direction of John Ince. The cast selected for this includes Darrell Foss as leading man, Walter Long, John H. Elliott, Lawrence Grant and G. Burnell Manley.

The few remaining scenes for "The Price of Redemption," the Bert Lytell subject, are being made with the star this week, and he leaves May 15th for New York. He will be accompanied by his cameraman, Sol Polito, who will work in the East.

"The Waffle Iron," a story by Arthur Stringer, has been purchased by Metro and will be used as a Screen Classic for May Allison. A. P. Younger is now writing the continuity.

Thomas Jefferson has been cast for an important character role in "Hearts Are Trumps," now being filmed, and Norval MacGreggor has been engaged to play the role of Captain Somers of the sailing vessel Elsinore in "The Mutiny," which features Mitchell Lewis.

Roy Klafki, formerly of Universal and Fox photographic department, has been appointed head of the Metro studio photographic and laboratory departments.

Powell Takes Far East Pictures for Goldwyn

A letter has just been received from E. Alexander Powell, traveler and war correspondent and the author of a number of important books, who started last January on an extended tour of the Far East to secure pictures for the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph. Mr. Powell's itinerary calls for visits to localities never before entered by a photographic expedition in India, China, Japan and Borneo.

The first pictures taken by Mr. Powell, who is traveling with his camera man, E. L. Hawkinson, were in the neighborhood of Yokohama, Japan. From Japan he went to China, penetrating to the interior.

Jack Pickford Picture Started by Goldwyn

With Al Green retained as a Goldwyn director and a strong cast of motion picture favorites assembled, work on the Jack Pickford starring vehicle, "The Man Who Had Everything," by Ben Ames Williams, was started last week at the Goldwyn studios, in Culver City. Billy Reiter will act as assistant to Director Green and the camera work will be in the hands of Clyde Cook.

This story, which was first published in the Saturday Evening Post, will be Pickford's third production since he became a Goldwyn star.

Van Dyke Will Direct Pathe's New Serial

W. S. Van. Dyke, who directed Jack Dempsey in Pathe's "Daredevil Jack," is directing the serial in which Charles Hutchison will star for Pathe, under the supervision of Robert Brunton at the latter's studio in Los Angeles. The company selected to support the star will have many players who appeared in "Daredevil Jack."

Adele Blood With Farrar

Well-Known Star Will Support Star in Associated Production

GREATEST care has been exercised in the selection of players who will appear in the cast with Geraldine Farrar in her first Associated Exhibitors' production, "The Riddle: Woman." Adele Blood, one of the nationally prominent leading women on the stage, who has headed her own stock company in nearly a dozen of the biggest cities of the country, and for four years was star of "Everywoman," has been engaged as the leading feminine support in the Farrar cast. Miss Blood is to interpret the character of Kristine, a role which will require consummate skill and dramatic ability.

Within a week, Mr. Jose expects to be in a position to definitely name the complete cast of "The Riddle: Woman." He anticipates beginning production of the great play in which Bertha Kalich starred for two seasons, as soon as Miss Farrar returns to New York. Preparations are now being completed for the filming of the picture in the Thanhouser Studio in New Rochelle. The preliminary details virtually have been completed, and all that remains is for the players to step right on the set and begin the production.

Adele Blood's reputation on the stage extends across the country. Starting with the extended run of the production in New York, Miss Blood played the title-part in Henry W. Savage's "Everywoman" for four years. Soon after she was starred in "Mile-a-Minute Kendall."

"O'Doone" Bookings Come in Fast

Although the finished prints of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," Vitagraph's big spectacular special production of the popular novel by James Oliver Curwood have been reaching the various Vitagraph exchanges only during the past few days, heavy sales are being made in all parts of the country and Canada.

Within the past week additional bookings have been recorded as far South as Texas and as far West as California, with the middle West and Eastern territory crowding the various branches for prints. One of the most recent bookings was for fifty-seven days in the Proctor theatres in New York City and state and nearby territory.

Simplex Notes

THAT the Simplex Distributing Organization, as a whole, looks with considerable favor upon the advantages to be derived through the generous use of printer's ink, is evidenced by the increasing number of "House-Organs" that are now published by many of the Simplex Distributors throughout the country.

Among the older papers can be counted the "Cosiki" of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atalnta, Ga., of which Mr. Harry K. Lucas is the editor; "Swaab's Monthly Messenger," published by Lewis M. Swaab, the well-known Philadelphia Supply Man, and the "Boston Bean Pot," published by the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, southern New England Distributors for Simplex.

The "Teco Tattler," published by the Teco Products Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis, Minn., with Mr. George Feinberg as its editor, is another monthly house-organ that is enjoying great popularity; while the "Yale Service Bulletin," edited by Mr. C. D. Struble of the Yale Theatre Supply Company, Kansas City, Mo., is crammed full of interesting new items, humor and accessory information each month. The "B. P. S. Service Bulletin," published by the Breck Photoplay Supply Company of San Francisco, Cal., keeps the readers informed of everything that is new in the way of theatre equipment and thoroughly posted on prevailing prices as well.

According to a report from the Exhibitors Supply Company a survey of the projection rooms in Chicago showed that there are slightly over seven-hundred-fifty Simplex Projectors in use daily in the city of Chicago itself, while almost the same percentage is maintained in the suburbs and outlying sections of the city.

Auditorium and Two Details in the Rialto, Fall River

The Rialto Theatre, Fall River, Massachusetts

Fall River Consolidated Enterprises, Owners —Louis M. Boas, Manager

THE new Rialto theatre marks an important chapter in the amusement life of Fall River, representing as it does the last word in theatre construction, and more especially the most modern ideas in appointment and equipment for exclusive motion picture houses.

To Louis M. Boas, general manager of Fall River's four leading theatres, belongs the credit largely for providing such a theatre.

The New Rialto — modern and up-to-date in every way, with a foyer of splendor and beauty, a lower auditorium of extreme magnificence, a stage setting of novel and exquisite design, a balcony second to none in that section in the matter of convenience for patrons, a booth with a battery of moving picture machines without a parallel in New England, with every detail looked after for the comfort and convenience of patrons — meets the instant approval at the hands of Fall River theatregoers.

The New Rialto is dedicated exclusively to a motion picture theatre. Twice weekly the program is changed and performances are given continuously from 10:30 A. M. to 10:30 P. M. The construction is fireproof. The balcony is supported by a steel truss weighing 20 tons. The installation of such a girder does away with posts.

Attention is called to the arrangements of exits. From the auditorium there are several exits opening out to the north and south sides. There are also ample exit facilities from the balcony with two stairways leading from the promenade into the balcony seats.

Beautiful in decorative design and effect and enhanced by the most artistic scheme, the entrance to the New Rialto is thoroughly in keeping with the richness of structural appointments throughout.

The outer lobby is entirely devoted to advertising display. Within this section are set specially arranged and manufactured display frames. The arrangement is artistic and effective and grouped on a scale as elaborate as is usually found in theatres only in metropolitan centres. On either sides are frames for photographs, lithographs, etc., used in connection with exploitation work. Directly above the door, too, and running the full width is another novel frame also used for exploitation purposes.

The real glimpse into the beauty of the theatre comes with an inspection of the second or "mirrored" lobby. On either side are paneled mirrors, between each being a gilded "torch" fixture with a single subdued light. The decorative scheme is gold and ivory with just the faintest touch of blue to complete the beautiful picture. The "inner" foyer is a panel scheme in ivory and gold with the tiniest touch of blue and is carried out most effectively. Mahogany doors, with small mirror panels and beautifully windowed panels within which are set photographs of screen stars who will be seen from time to time at the theatre afford delight.

Manager Boas and wife on opening night

The lighting effect within the foyer completes the scene of beauty. Two bracket fixtures of gold with Japanese shades are set between the panels on either side, harmonizing perfectly with the general decorative scheme. Shower bursts radiate brilliancy from above in the two inner sections.

In the first section, or advertising lobby, is a ticket window. A second window for the sale of tickets is located in the second section. Opening from the "inner" foyer, are rooms for men and women. First comes the ladies' room on the left on entering the theatre. The ladies' recreation room is splendidly furnished. A popular feature in the ladies' room is a public telephone.

Concentration at the stage, and on either side, is the design executed in an Italian renaissance architectural effect, as seen in the Venetian palaces. A most effective composition is formed by combining the simple and dignified columns, and ablatine with its simple profiles, and the arch of the decorative detail. The capital of the Roman orders with rich ornament and gold glazed with a soft green, an effect that is beautiful in the extreme. Within this ornamental arch is the organ.

A silk velour valance, with a four-inch gold fringe, rich in color and design and blending in harmony with the general design is drawn to hide the screen. Above conspicuous in a rich rose colored frame is a large gold letter "R."

Gold and ivory predominate in the decorative scheme, in which is set the screen, unfolded when the valance is withdrawn. The white screen is framed in a border of black. The seating capacity of the theatre is about 1,700 seats.

Special electrical fixtures are installed within the lower auditorium, shades of newest design being used to subdue the lights. A handsome shower light radiates brilliant effect from the centre of the theatre. There are numerous gas pilot lights about the theatre, installed for emergency purposes.

There is a spacious promenade leading from the balcony stairway along in the rear of the seating area. Opening from the promenade are stairways at either end leading up into the seating area. An emergency sick room, ladies' rest rooms and a man's room also open off the promenade, as well as rooms for porters, ushers, etc.

No theatre in New England can boast of a picture booth of the modern type which has been constructed at the New Rialto. In the first place the booth is reached from an entrance entirely apart from any entrance used by patrons in the theatre. It is of absolute fire-proof brick construction with a concrete floor. It is 9x20 with a height of 12 feet.

Another important feature is an electrical device on the door. By means of this device the door cannot be opened from the outside without the knowledge and approval of the operator within. This is made possible by an arrangement of signal bells. The person without makes known his presence by ringing the bell and before the door can be opened the operator within must operate an electrical device. Another feature is a separate storage room at the north end. By means of this films, etc., may be stored in this separate room thus eliminating what has always been regarded as a fire hazard.

Equally important is the equipment in regard to the motion pictures. The New Rialto, it may be said, is equipped on a bigger scale than any motion picture theatre in New England. There is a battery of five picture machines.

The fan system is used in heating and ventilating, hot air being circulated throughout the theatre by this means.

A house telephone system is an added and important feature. By this arrange-

Society of Motion Picture Engineers Holds Convention

Tenth Semi-Annual Meeting at Montreal Great Success

THE tenth semi-annual Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was held at the Hotel Windsor, Montreal, on May 10, 11 and 12. About fifty members gathered from all parts of the United States and Canada and listened to the finest collection of papers that have ever been prepared for presentation before the Society. After listening to several invitations from various civic bodies in other cities, it was decided unanimously to hold the October meeting in Dayton, Ohio.

Monday forenoon on the first day of the Convention was taken up with the opening ceremonies and the discussion of new business. The actual reading of papers did not commence until after luncheon, B. E. Norrish of the Department of Trade and Commerce, with offices at Ottawa, reading the first paper entitled "Educational Possibilities of the Movies." Mr. Norrish related some of the means now being used by his department to further education by means of the motion picture and finished by suggesting possible ways of developing this feature of education.

George A. Blair, Manager of the Motion Picture Department of the Eastman Kodak Co., followed with an intensely interesting paper on "Film Tinting." On account of the thoroughness with which he had absorbed the subject, Mr. Blair felt that those present might not care to go deeply into the subject-matter, the assemblage found the paper to be so interesting that Mr. Blair was requested to read it.

Immediately after the paper on "Tinting" the Optics Committee made its report, laying before the society the results of a psychological test carried out by its members. This report was but the beginning of an exhaustive study into tinted films and its effect on the optience. This work, under the leadership of Dr. Story of the Research Laboratory of the General Electric Company, promises to be of the greatest value to the producer and laboratory expert.

The Educational Committee then made its semi-annual report, bringing out a suggestion for a Course in Motion Picture Engineering for those interested in the subject. As developed by the Committee it is their intention to prepare a number of books on related subjects having to do with the production of motion pictures and to sell the Course in much the same way that correspondence schools have marketed their wares. The huge amount of work incident to the preparation of such a series of lessons was recognized by the Society and the Committee was given the support of the Association to go into the matter further and render a more detailed scheme.

Tuesday morning, W. T. Braun, a prominent theatre architect of Chicago, had the honor of presenting the first paper, "Standards in Theatre Design to Safeguard from Fire and Panic." The preparation of this paper is of the utmost importance to the industry and represents a great deal of work on the part of the author.

Mr. L. A. Jones of the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Co. presented an exceedingly interesting paper on "A New Method of Lighting Motion Picture Theatres," as worked out in the case of one theatre near Rochester. It is probable that the publication of this paper in the Transactions will cause many architects to make radical changes in their methods of illuminating theatres. It was one of the most valuable papers delivered during the three-day convention.

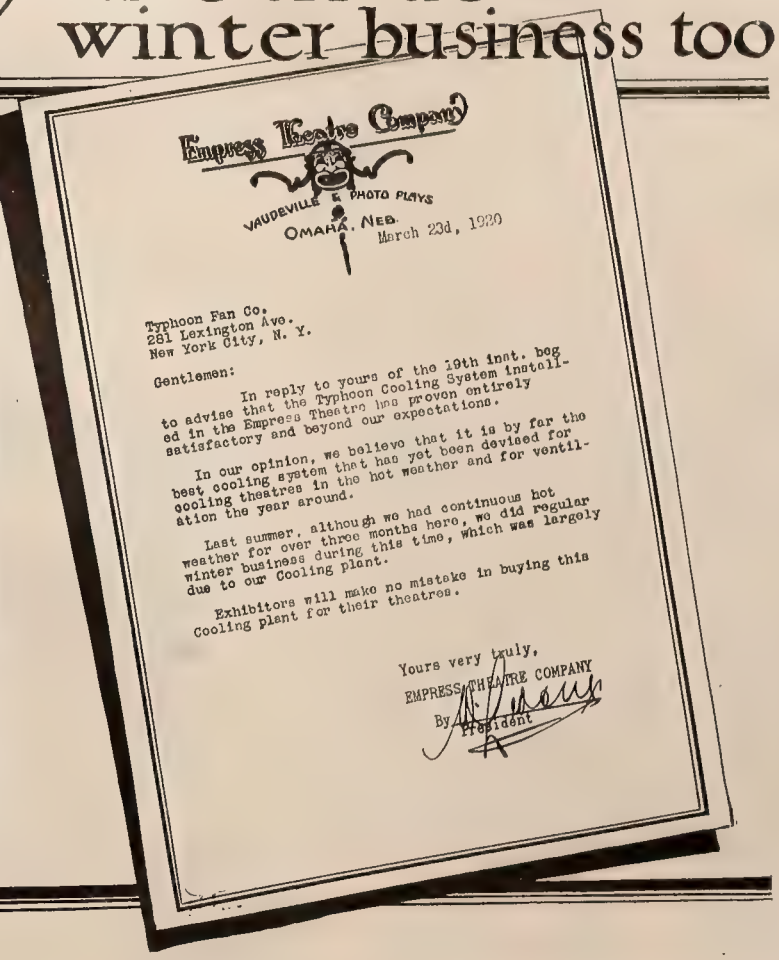
Closing the morning session on Tuesday was "The Ventilation of Motion Picture Theatres and Studios," by O. K. Dyer of the Buffalo Forge Co. Mr. Dyer went into the various systems, gave their advantages and their shortcomings and concluded by stating what in his opinion constitutes the proper and ideal system for the present-day theatre. The afternoon session was commenced with F. H. Richardson's paper on "Projection Speed and Its Effects." Then came W. B. Cook with a treatise on "The Eccentric Star Intermittent Movement," in which he outlined a variation of the Genera Star movement, making use of a non-radial slot. Mr. C. Francis Jenkins followed with "A Continuous Motion Picture Machine." Mr. Jenkins' paper developed that he had been working for some time on a continuous projector that seems to have great practical possibilities. He produced a reversible prism which was the heart of the machine. Further details are not forthcoming at this time but it is expected that at the Fall meeting of the Society Mr. Jenkins will have gone far enough into the experimental end of the project to add considerable to his statements made at Montreal.

C. E. Egeler of the National Lamp Works delivered a paper on the subject of "The Application of Mazda Lamps to Small Motion Picture Projectors." This paper related a history of the development of the incandescent lamp for projectors and hinted at some of the tests now being carried out to make their application more successful. This concluded the papers for the second day. The banquet was held in the Rose Room of the Windsor in the evening. Mr. George Perkins, to whom the Society owes much for his handling o Convention and for many of the courtesies shown it during its stay in Montreal, was Toastmaster. Other speakers were A. F. Victor, W. C. Smith, H. H. Cudmore, A. D. Cameron and G. A. Blair.

Wednesday was taken up with the delivering of five papers. The first was by R. L. Lee on the subject of "Design of Gasoline Electric Sets for Motion Picture Theatres." The second was by H. C. MacNary of the Westinghouse Company on "Remote Control Systems for Studios." Mr. MacNary's paper compared the older methods of controlling studio lights with the remote control systems now in use in many of the leading studios. The paper was illustrated with lantern slides and was well received.

Dr. H. P. Gage followed MacNary with a demonstration of an "Optical Testing Equipment." After luncheon Dr. Story continued his paper of last year on the "Photoelectric Comparison of Lens Systems," and W. F. Little of the Electric Testing Laboratories concluded the session with his "Tests of Screen Illumination." These tests made by Mr. Little are among the first that have been accurately made and as such shed considerable light on a subject little understood up to the present.

The stay of the members in Montreal was interspersed by journeys to many of the famous spots of the French-Canadian City. The hospitality of the citizens and particularly those who had the affair in charge was everywhere in evidence. The spirits could not have been improved upon and on account of this there was an agitation on the part of many members to make Montreal the permanent gathering place of the Society. But whatever may be the future aims of the association this meeting in Montreal will always stand out as one of its best and most successful.



Theatres Combined

Some very ambitious plans have been worked out by the Goldwyn interests and Ascher Brothers, the new owners of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee. Negotiations are now said to be under way for the purchase of the old Gayety theatre, directly adjoining the Merrill. When these are consummated the Merrill will be entirely rebuilt, it is reported, making it one of the largest theatres in the middle west. The entire seating arrangement will be changed, as the addition of the Gayety will give the Merrill a floor space of 125 x 150 feet.

Gentlemen:

In reply to yours of the 19th inst. beg to advise that the Typhoon Cooling System installed in the Empress Theatre has proven entirely satisfactory and beyond our expectations.

In our opinion, we believe that it is by far the best cooling system that has yet been devised for cooling theatres in the hot weather and for ventilation the year around.

Last summer, although we had continuous hot weather for over three months here, we did regular winter business during this time, which was largely due to our Cooling plant.

Exhibitors will make no mistake in buying this Cooling plant for their theatres.

ment attaches in any part of the theatre may talk through a central office, but this is not the case here. For example, a mix-up in seats may be easily adjusted by an usher communicating directly with the box office instead of the old-fashioned way of losing time in making a personal trip there. Likewise, an emergency call for a physician may be handled by direct communication.

The New Rialto theatre is the newest playhouse of the four theatres owned by the Fall River Consolidated Enterprise. It is a holding company with the following officers: J. C. Bills, Jr., president; L. M. Boas, vice president; B. A. Brager, treasurer; James M. Swift, clerk.

Louis M. Boas, general manager of this entire chain of theatres, has been such a prominent figure for so many years in the theatrical and amusement line in Fall River that he has really become regarded as a "native son." As a matter of fact his birthplace was Providence. He was born there 38 years ago. It was about 1905 that Mr. Boas first entered the show business in Fall River. When he opened up the little picture show at the Scenic theatre, his program at the Scenic called for eight shows daily, with admissions at five cents.

As the general manager of Fall River's four leading theatres and the chain now held by this same company, he is known in the theatrical world from coast to coast.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A Series of Interest to All Projectionists

This is the fifth installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

Accurate focusing is a necessity with the Mazda lamp.

If your lamp, for instance, is only slightly off,

⅛" off center.....20% decrease in light

If the lamp is not focused,

⅛" ahead of focus...23% decrease in light.

It is practically impossible to tell by the eye, when the most light is on the screen. Differences, however, are readily noticeable when a dark film is run through the projector.

The following test shows how near the eye judges:

A light was thrown on a screen and several observers asked to note its brightness. The light was thrown off for a few moments and another thrown on. Each observer claimed he saw no difference in the brightness of the screen, although in the first case, there was an intensity of four foot-candles, and in the second case, only two foot-candles.

Two lights of different quality were thrown side by side on the screen. The observers immediately placed one as being at least twice as bright as the other and yet both were of the same intensity.

With the arc, where a three-winged shutter was formerly used, with Mazda projection, a two-winged shutter may be profitably employed, a two-winged shutter, of course, passes considerably more light.

With the alternating current arc, the speed of the revolving shutter blade may often times be exactly timed with the alternations of the current. When such is the case, the light on the screen will vary periodically in intensity.

Operation

THE operation of the Mazda Lamp when the optical system is lined up and the lamp focused, is extremely simple—the strongest appeal to the projectionist. No one cares to keep continually fussing with adjustments such as are necessary in feeding a non-automatic arc.

Focusing with the Mazda Lamp, however, is slightly more complicated than with the arc, since two images, one of the filament—the other of the mirror—have to be contended with. The images may be allowed to fall upon the blade of the revolving shutter. Shutter, of course, must be properly positioned.

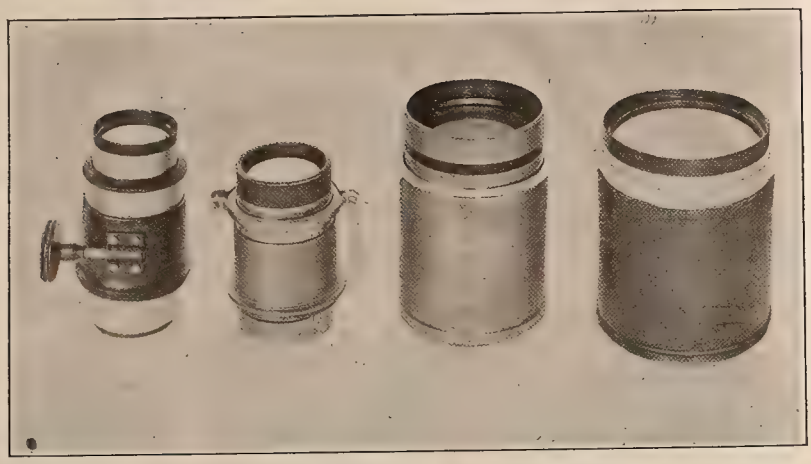

Fig. 13—Different projection lenses of various diameters

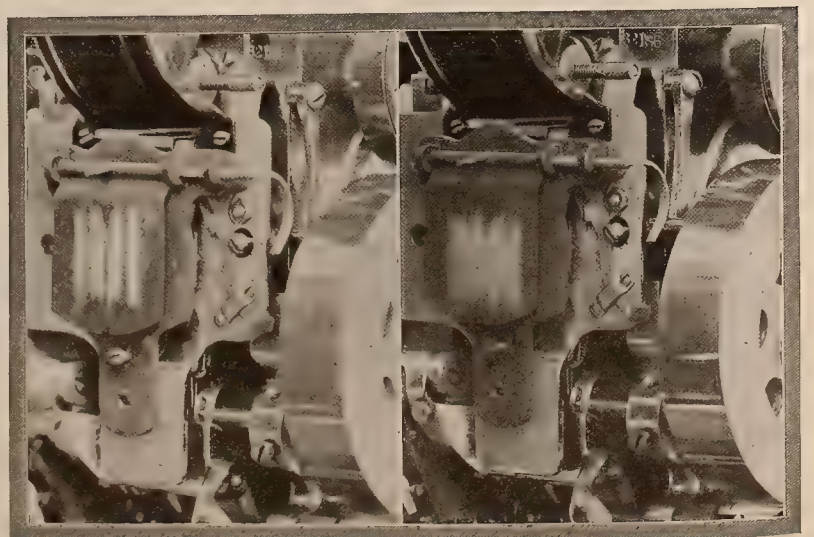

Fig. 15—Method of setting image thrown by mirror, with reference to filament. The view at the left shows the image produced from the filament alone. The one at the right shows the spaces between the sections of filament filled by the reflected image, giving a practically uniform light source. A pin-hole in the dowser causes the production of these images

Gentlemen:

The Power's #6B Cameragraph installed for us by your company about one year ago, has given us excellent satisfaction. We had the machine equipped for Mazda Lamps.

Our machine has been in constant use, and considering the fact that at least ten different persons handle the machine, our expense for lamps has been very small indeed. We have used six and ninehundred Watt lamps, and find both of them very satisfactory.

We use your machine exclusively.

The lamp is then moved forward and back until the filament stands clearly defined upon the revolving shutter blade. The mirror is then focused in the same way, and its images fitted in between those of the filament coils.

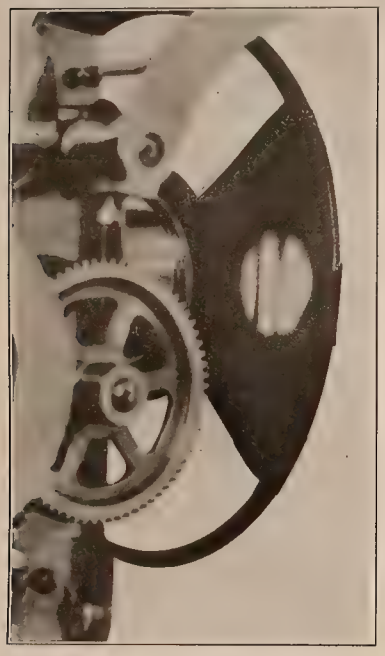

Fig. 14—The filament image properly focused and symetrically placed on revolving shutter

A pin-hole in the dowser on some housings allows a sharp image of the filament and the mirror reflection to fall upon the fire shutter or cooling-plate, so that a ready check upon the correct focus and placing of mirror may be had.

When used for stereopticon projection, a set of plano lenses are easily pulled into place. The prismatic lens (as before described) cannot be used for stereopticon work.

As regards operation of the lamp itself when it has burned approximately 100 hours there may be noticed on the surface of the filament very minute holes much the same as those in a sponge, only, of course, very much smaller. This is called "Spot evaporation" and is an indication that the filament has burned its rated life and that a new lamp should be inserted.

Again, the four filament coils should at all times be equally spaced. If, for any reason, the coils should bend towards each other so that they are about to touch, the lamp should be removed, since if one coil touches an adjoining one a short circuit will result and the lamp will burn out. The lamp should be inspected before each run. Mirror and condenser should be thoroughly cleaned every day.

Equips with Speedco

Carl Fulton, sales manager of E. E. Fulton Company, has contracted to equip all theatres in the Loew Circuit with Fulco Speedco Arc Controls. In speaking of this important contract Mr. Fulton said that several of Loew's New York houses have been equipped with the Speedco device where they have been in constant use for five years without the cost of a nickel for repairs, so that Purchasing Agent Meinhold was thoroughly familiar with the value and durability of the arc control.

A Correction

We regret that in publishing advertisement of the Graphoscope Development Company of New York in the April 24th issue, cut illustrating their PORTMANTO model was inserted upside down.

Inasmuch as one of the big points of the Graphoscope Motion Picture Machine is that magazine containing reels is placed in the lower part of the machine, we wish to correct any erroneous impression created, and to call attention to the proper set up of this machine as will be found in this company's advertisement, appearing in this issue.

IN lighting it is well to get a suitable blending of the direct light and of the diffuse light. Nature's rule is half and half. The diffuse light is so advantageous in cutting out the harsh sharp black shadows and giving what is known technically as luminous shadow effects. Diffuse light can be secured by indirect light as well as by diffusing screens. The intensity of the light should photographically be very high in order to get the camera to operate satisfactorily with f 5.6. The flame arc can be used with a camera lens at f 5.6 to give good lighting on a small stage with 20 kw. The jump from f 5.6 to f 4.5 or even f 3.5 makes a big difference in the definition and clearness of the picture. The depth of focus can be maintained better, of course, with f 5.6, and because of the important artistic value of the background and the large distances with rapid movements that should be covered, it is highly desirable to work with a good depth of focus. With the flame arc the high concentration of light can be easily controlled as well as the direction of light. This convenience of control of the amount and direction of light are necessarily of the highest importance for free artistic expression on the part of the directing geniuses. In general, the motion picture stages will use with flame arcs the following amount of powers having the lens at f 5.6.

Medium Stage 50 kw. 10 to 16 flame lamps.
Large Stage 100 kw. 20 to 32 flame lamps.

Using the larger openings of lens f 3.5 as low as 20 kw. with flame arcs can be used to secure the illumination of large stages. As the amount of light varies with the reflecting surfaces and is inversely as the square of the distance from the light sources it is not easy to give exact information without going into too elaborate detail. Also multiple reflection can in partly closed spaces greatly increase the illumination. (See Fig. 25 and 26.)

The artistry of the motion picture field is advancing so rapidly with so many new and complex changes that it is rather hard for an amateur like myself to keep track of even their main drift. Among the recent innovations has been the production of plays with the background subdued so that instead of the usual "close-up" the faces of the players in tense scenes are accented throughout the entire production of the play. As, for example, in the play "The Golden Chance." In this case, the background is subdued to such an extent that the characters in the foreground appear to stand out in stereoscopic relief.

In another arrangement an intensely lighted background is used to cause the players to stand out in sharp shadow-like relief. In still other cases the immense control of intensity of light gives a power of securing the sudden appearance or disappearance of an actor in trick and dramatic pictures and to aid greatly in securing such peculiar effects as double exposure and other photographic tricks. The lighting can be utilized in such a way that the artistic forming of the picture is accented in harmony with the idea involved. Another way in which flame arcs are used is for casting shadows in trick pictures and to represent prison scenes in the more artistic manner of showing the shadows of the prison bars rather than the actual grim stolid fact.

It would not be expedient to describe in elaborate detail the many devicesfor rapidly moving the lights around in studios or the particular mechanical arrangement for carrying the lamps around on wheel cabinets or on trolleys or on ropes, etc. The actual installations of lighting are arranged in a great variety of ways, in some cases the overhead lighting is set up with the idea of permanently supplying the particular set. In other cases the overhead lighting is arranged so as to be easily moved by a trolley system from set to set. In the latter case the small weight of the flame lamps in proportion to their candlepower greatly reduces the cost of the moving system and also affords a better utilization for admitting overhead daylight if this is desired. For side lighting the flame lamps are mounted on wheel stands either separately or in powerful unit groups of 6 and 12. The typical Edison stage is shown in Fig. 19 and 20, which were most kindly supplied by the Edison Co. Here about 28 lamps of Aristo type are seen mounted in 4 rows of 7 each. These are arranged to be easily moved. One large stand lamp is shown in this picture, Fig. 18. It is interesting to note that the resistance of the flame lamp can be mounted in a separate room so as to further reduce the heating which is remarkably small with the flame lamp. In some studios a dozen Aristo lamps are mounted in a portable cabinet formed in sets of three rows of four each with the top row forward and the bottom row back away from the stage. The whole can be easily moved around the studio because mounted on wheels.

In Fig. 22 there is shown the overhead arrangement of flame arms and mercury arcs used for lighting a boxing match at Madison Square Garden. (See Lighting Journal 4, p. 78, Apr. 1916.) It is interesting to note that eight motion picture cameras were used simultaneously and that the entire room was so well lighted that brilliant illumination was obtained in every part of the large hall.

The use of flame arcs is carried out on an extensive scale in the Vitagraph motion picture studio located in Brooklyn, New York. Mr. Ross, master mechanic of the Vitagraph Co., was kind enough to furnish me data showing that the average number of flame lamps (20 amperes each lamp) used per set is twenty. In the Brooklyn studio alone, there are 225 flame arc lamps, hanging overhead, or in sets in stands or mounted so as to be easily moved about in small carriages so as to eliminate shadows. In Fig. 20 there is shown a portion of one of the main studio rooms. In Fig. 21 is shown a setting of lighting arrangements received through the kindness of Miss Anita Stewart. In Fig. 24 and 25 are some interior studios that illustrate the use of multiple reflection to increase greatly efficiency and to give diffuse light.

Mr. Cecil B. DeMille, director of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., wrote about three years ago, an article ("Motography 15, p. 240, Jan. 29, 1916") under the title "Lighting to a Photoplay Is Like Music to Drama." He concludes that lighting effects as applied to motion pictures assume precisely the same value in EVERY DIRECTOR will agree that LIGHT is unquestionably the greatest single adjunct in the production of Motion Pictures. If the lighting is wrong because of inefficient control or for any other reason—the picture is bad.

Light achieves its importance in the studio because motion pictures must focus the five senses of mankind in an appeal to one—"sight."

The great tasks of the Director are facilitated by proper electrical equipment and control.

In these branches we are pioneers in the industry and have to our credit the largest and most efficient installations in Eastern studios.

We are alert to the trend of production to this section of the country and place at the disposal of Producers and Directors our entire staff of experts.

the photo drama that music assumes in the spoken drama. He says "the theme of a picture should be carried in its photography." "The Cheat," representing unprincipled sinister Japanese characters, used abrupt bold lights to definitely suggest the "clang" and smash of Japanese music.

In "Carmen," however, the Rembrandt idea was followed. The lighting and grouping of the characters in the soft shadows were all worked out in keeping with the school of that famous master. "Light effects are out of place in comedy; there you will notice our lighting is clear and brilliant corresponding to the faster light comedy and music, except in the melodramatic scenes where we carry our audience into thrills not only by the action of the artist, but by a change in the mode of our photography."

Years of Experience Is No Proof of Knowledge

OUR dictionaries define "knowledge" as "skill from practice," and "experience" as "knowledge gained by practice." The definition of "practice" is given as "frequent or customary action; dexterity acquired by habit; habitual exercise."

For a moment let us forget the above definitions and resort to realism. We must admit that the heading of this article can justly be applied to our own profession—"Music and the Film." We don't wish to specifically pick men whom this glove fits but isn't it an established fact that every profession can bring forth sufficient evidence that "Years of Experience is no Proof of Knowledge"?

How many musical directors are today boasting of infallibility, attempting to prove the correctness of their assertions with a long review of their past experiences. As defined above, experience is gained through practice. Dictionaries define "practice" as "habitual exercise," and we must admit that all habits are not admirable.

In our estimation knowledge in our profession can only be acquired through careful study of human nature. Give the public what they want! Habitual practice is not sufficient to create such valuable asset as knowledge backed by common horse-sense, the only knowledge the world needs. Alertness and the ability to instantly parallel with the ideas of the public is the only fundamental doctrine of real knowledge.

I know of musical directors who although very young in the profession have performed admirable work. Mr. Don Roberts of the Alcazar theatre of Tampa, Florida, is one of them. Mr. Roberts not only masters his instrument, but is also able to perfectly fit his pictures in a most satisfactory manner. His music scores are rich in elaboration and vivid in tonal color. All this he is able to do in spite of the fact that he is serving in the profession but a very short time.

The above example shows that the proof of real knowledge is the unanimous acceptance of a man's idea by the majority. Innumerable instances can be cited to ascertain the correctness of the above theories, but we hardly believe that is necessary.

We are sure you know of someone practicing a certain trade for a great many years and although professing to know a great deal about that trade, knows but very little.

Let's forget ostentation: Let us value our performances and knowledge by the acceptance and approval accorded them by the masses they are intended for!—THE EDITORS.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Emotional Miss Vaughn"

(Mrs. Sidney Drew Production Starring John Cumberland—Released by Pathe —Two Reels)

Seemingly Mrs. Sidney Drew is getting overly ambitious. Having been very successful as producer and director of two comedies from the Julian Street "After Thirty" stories with John Cumberland starred, she not only officiates in these capacities for a third production under the title of "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," but plays the leading role herself. In so doing it seems to us that a very clever comedy idea is very nearly muffed for Mrs. Drew isn't the type of the emoting actress, which is the role she plays and in taking a part in the picture she seems to have neglected her job as director, all of which is a long way of saying that the third of the series from the Street stories doesn't rank as well as its predecessors.

The basic idea of "The Emotional Mrs. Vaughn," that of having the impressional "Jimmy" get interested in an actress who was a former sweetheart, with the emoting lady finally deciding to cure him by pretending to reciprocate and in so doing recites to him a long speech of romantic flavor, intermixed with free love doctrines from her next play with "Jimmy" getting alarmed when he finds himself apparently accepted, and beating a hasty retreat back home to wife and babies, is probably the best of the trio used, but it has not been so skilfully handled especially in building a finish for the offering. However, the skill with which John Cumberland plays "Jimmy," and the idea when it is disclosed along toward the end of the picture make a combination which gets the comedy by. Mrs. Drew as the actress doesn't contribute to any great extent. She registers as a nice wholesome little woman and that lets her out.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Flapper"

(Selznick)

THE first four reels of "The Flapper," with Olive Thomas as star, makes an unusually entertaining and amusing drama. And except that the picture is slightly too long drawn out, running to six reels, and the interest lags a bit on account of this, it is well up to the mark in every possible way.

"The Flapper" was written by Frances Marion, who has built up her story about a young girls' boarding school, and has chosen her characters largely from that romantic and golden-dreamed period of life that surrounds the age of sixteen. It might be called a female version of "Seventeen," but only inasmuch as the modern young lady who wants to add several years to her age and who seeks sophistication, is a prototype of the male hero in Booth Tarkington's story. There is plenty of good incident, and the sub titles ought to get many a laugh. The logic of the story is especially to be commended, for the author has not made a thirty-five year old clubman fall in love with the youthful "flapper." Instead, the romance develops between the two youngsters, both of whom are tyrannically confined in boarding schools close to one another.

The star lives up to all that you expect of her and possibly more. She is as nice to gaze upon as ever and youthful enough in appearance. Also she has hit off the modern small town high school girl to perfection. And when she decides to surprise her folks at home during vacation time, by creating a dark and mysterious past for herself, she gives a very pleasing burlesque of a haughty and world-weary vampire.

Theodore Westman has been very well cast. He is a student at a military academy—full of bravado, bluff and romance, and his characterization of enthusiastic boyhood contributes much to the comedy. The story opens in Florida, shifts to New York and ends back in Florida. In transplanting all the characters from North to South the scenario writer has had a little difficulty. There is a bit of the crook element injected which arouses the interest well enough in the beginning but which is partly responsible for the six reel length, and the pictures consequent tendency to drag.

The director, author and star are the trinity that have made this interesting little photoplay, which provides good entertainment even if it does not attempt to be a world-beater. Length 6 reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Third Eye"

(First Three Episodes of Fifteen Episode Serial, Starring Warner Oland and Eileen Percy —Astra-Pathe)

THE press sheet on "The Third Eye" announces it as a serial of baffling mystery, intrigue and romance and it proves to be correct as far as the first three episodes are concerned, for all these elements are there and worked out in a way that will give the "serial fans" all the thrills, surprises and excitements their hearts desire.

H. H. Van Loan, whose latest feature, "The Virgin of Stamboul," is meeting with such pronounced success, is the author of "The Third Eye" and we're going to give him credit for the masterful way he has drawn his characters and the deep imagination he must have had in putting them forth in a "serial manner." For although the story thrills and mystifies it carries a certain amount of love interest which acts as a relief to its stronger moments.

The cast which is a splendid one for this kind of work, is headed by Warner Oland and Eileen Percy. Oland again shows that he is a master in timing his scenes, using his suave manners and then again varying them when necessary to the "deep, dyed, villain." And he is ably assisted by Miss Percy, who has many difficult and dangerous tasks to perform.

Director Horne has kept the action moving at the right pace throughout and showed excellent judgment in keeping his scenes free from the entanglements that so often occur in serial stories.

The plot revolves around the killing of Curtis Steel, a society man in a moving picture studio. He pursues Rita Moreland, a picture actress, to her studio and endeavors to make love to her. She repulses him and in a struggle that follows, he is shot by the young actress. Steel staggers forward and collapses. Our heroine is terrified, for she believed the revolver was loaded only with blank cartridges. As she is bending over him, he leaps to his feet and with a sneering remark prepared to leave.

That night, however, she is informed that Steel has been found in the studio shot through the heart. And to make matters worse; a film is brought forth, showing Rita pursued across the stage by Steel and her shooting at him.

Some one here turned the crank of a moving picture camera upon the scene and recorded the actual happenings. But who?

And it is for possession of this piece of film that Rita, her sweetheart, the villain and all concerned are involved in a wild effort to score its possession.

Jack Mower, Mark Strong and Olga Grey are members of the cast.—FRANK LEONARD

"Should Dummies Wed"

(Sunshine Comedy—Fox Two Reels)

IT has taken Hampton Del-Ruth to think of the ancient armor suit as an idea for one of his Sunshine comedies. It is the burglar hokum with one of the footpads lugging his "tin-man" to a pawn shop where he is disposed of as a rare piece of antique. There is a plot to the thing because the pawnbroker is on the track of a sack of gold. The comic points are revealed in his discomfiture over the strange conduct of the armored crook. It is slapstick, pure and unadulterated, with considerable footwork applied to the lower end of the torso.

The tomfoolery is extended right down to the bomb explosion when the armored crook endeavors to run away from the pawnbroker and finds himself and the enemy trespassing on dangerous ground. The street car trick is worked—with the trolley running on the switch just when it approaches the victim. This stunt is becoming passe. Other time-worn tricks are used which still manage to raise a laugh, and a few are shown which are brand-new. The girls come into the action with some exercises, but most of the incident revolves around the crooks and the pawnbroker. "Should Dummies Wed" is not a master-piece of burlesque, but it, nevertheless, has its comic values. Chester Conklin is the principal funmaker. LAURENCE REID.

"THE TERROR"
(Fox)

Tom Mix Thriller More Than Satisfies

HERE you have Tom Mix in a picture that abounds in sure-fire thrills and real dramatic interest. The scenario writer, Jacques Jaccard, sets it humming with action in the very beginning, when Mix does a daredevil stunt of leaping from his horse to a speeding train, and keeps up the interest throughout, to the final reel. The star is credited with writing the story, and while the plot material is more or less familiar, it is embellished with entertaining and novel incidents, and this, coupled with the cowboy-actor's daring, make this a western that should get an enthusiastic reception. A dance hall set, of gigantic proportions, several hundred extras and "Tony," the broncho, afford Mix an opportunity to put over a thrill that is the high spot of the picture. A remarkable high dive is another stunt, and a speeding motor truck pursued by bandits is a novel bit of business. Mix drives the heavy car through a wooden shanty to escape his pursuers.

The story runs along smoothly with no improbabilities in evidence except that all the bandits are rather poor shots, and works up to a climax that is a wonder. The star is a Deputy United States Marshal, and the plot deals with robberies of gold shipments, which are made by motor truck, and the clearing up of the mystery by the marshal. The star witness is kidnapped, and is rescued just in time to testify in behalf of the innocent prisoner.

While the setting is a small mining town, they have made it a twentieth century mining town instead of a crude log cabin affair of the gold rush days. Mix receives good support from Francelia Billington, Lucille Young, and Lester Cuneo, and the rest of the cast is equally pleasing, while there is some good riding by the cowboy extras.

"The Terror" will add to Mix's popularity. The thrills, the lavish sets and the well sustained interest will, in fact, make it a western hard to excell.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Terror," starring Tom Mix, is scheduled as the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is another story of the West, with the cowboy-actor furnishing thrills that will prove difficult for any other screen actor of to-day to equal.

Tom Mix believes in realism, and he has injected a goodly amount of it into this picture. But such thrills as diving off a high cliff hold no terrors for Mix, for he was formerly a cowboy, rough rider, and huntsman. One of his most daring feats in "The Terror," which he performs, is leaping from the back of his horse, "Tony," to the rear end of a speeding train. "Tony," by the way, Mix's black pony, helps a great deal to make the production a success. He even runs, at his master's call, into a crowded dance hall to aid in making an arrest. This he does by bucking and kicking until he has cleared the entire floor. Meanwhile his master is "covering" the others with two guns.

These are only a few of the stunts in this interesting picture that will make you hold tight to the seat in your excitement. There is also a pleasing love-story running through it all, and a gripping tale of a series of robberies in a western mining town. Mix plays the deputy United States Marshal, who eventually solves the mystery and punishes the guilty parties. In the cast are such well known players as Francelia Billington, Lester Cuneo and Lucille Younge.

PROGRAM READER

If you like to see pictures of masculine deviltry and courage mixed with a strain of beautiful romance, there is a treat in store for you on ———— when Tom Mix, one of the most popular of screen stars, will be seen in "The Terror," his latest photoplay of the West. It is a picture that specializes in sending the thrills running up and down your back. Mix's past productions have been noted for the daredevil stunts of their star, but in this feature, the cowboy-actor has outdone himself. It's just five reels of excitement, romance, and more excitement.

The star plays the part of a Deputy United States Marshall who is sent to a Western mining town to solve the mystery of a series of gold robberies. He does it—and how he does it makes one of the most interesting Western pictures of the year.

SUGGESTIONS

Boost the daredevil stunts of the star in this picture. Tell your patrons that they are going to see one of the most thrilling pictures of recent years. You can safely do this and they will not be disappointed. His last picture was "Desert Love," and if you showed it, mention this fact. Western pictures such as this allow for good street stunts; especially cowboy parades. If you can get a black pony, such as Mix's in the picture, it would be good to lead him through the streets, with an appropriate sign such as "This is 'Tony,' Tom Mix's horse. See Tom Mix in 'The Terror' at the ———— theatre."

CATCH LINES

Daredevil stunts to make you hold your breath! Lovely romance to make you sigh!—all in "The Terror," Tom Mix's latest feature.

Tom Mix is here again! This time it is "The Terror," a thrilling drama of the gold country in the West.

"BURNING DAYLIGHT"
(C. E. Shurtleff-Metro)

London's Vital Story Makes Good Audience Picture

THERE is enough vitality to this screen version of Jack London's "Burning Daylight"—enough dramatic conflict, rugged characterization and picturesque backgrounds to make it a good audience picture. Those who are unfamiliar with the story may feel somewhat disappointed in discovering that the outdoor action is relieved by indoor incident, and those who have read it or not will certainly remember that the idea has been used time and again on the screen. To some it may appear passe, since its development presents the primitive Westerner leaving the open spaces to take up residence in New York and be fleeced by its Wall Street "wolves." The tenderfoot who goes West and the virile son of the soil who goes East are certainly two overworked formulas.

It must be admitted here that the director has treated the latter so that it presents a full quota of action. His treatment saves it from looking time-worn. The earlier scenes show some picturesque backgrounds against which the miner Harmish, or "Burning Daylight," as he is commonly called, starts a boom town through his discovery of the precious metal. He sells out for a snug fortune and decides to move to the metropolis and beat Wall Street at its own game. As Mitchell Lewis is the star, his following is apt to be disappointed not to find him in his customary battle royal. No fights take place on the edge of a cliff. The only time he becomes the "he-man" is when he holds up the "wolves" with his Forty-five and recovers the five million of which he is temporarily fleeced.

The audience will also be surprised to notice that Lewis has taken up the comedian's mantle, for he becomes, in his Eastern environment, the proverbial "bull in a china shop." He is not always at his best in the comedy scenes. The romantic interest is well emphasized, there being an adequate note of conflict. And the suspense is well maintained. The conclusion shows the Westerner back in the open spaces. All things considered, the star gives a capable performance, ably assisted by Helen Ferguson, who furnishes the romantic interest. Some of the minor actors overplayed and destroyed the effectiveness of their roles.—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Burning Daylight," a screen version of Jack London's novel of the same name, will be presented at the ———— the week of ————, with a cast that includes Mitchell Lewis supported by Helen Ferguson, William V. Mong and Edward Carew. Readers of the story will recall that Elam Harnish, or "Burning Daylight" as the whole of Yukon knows him, is a crude, big-hearted prospector, with a lust for adventure and a devil-may-care spirit that drives him gaily through the hardships of the mining towns. It is an ideal role for the star since his rugged personality is synonymous with Alaskan stories.

The opening scenes showing the gold stampede, with the action centering around the Tivoli saloon, with its turbulent atmosphere of elemental passions, forms a striking contrast to the developments in the latter part of the photoplay wherein "Burning Daylight" fights the giants of Wall Street and beats them at their own game. The picture is well punctuated with stirring action and there is a pleasant vein of romance running throughout the entire plot. "Burning Daylight" may be called a typical Jack London story and adapted on the screen it presents a bang-up smashing play.

PROGRAM READER

A Jack London story is always interesting reading. When one is transferred to the screen the spectator will notice that it carries a wealth of physical action, a group of colorful characters, and effective dramatic conflicts, the same attributes that are found in the printed page. Our patrons will be pleased to know that one of Jack London's most vital stories, "Burning Daylight," will be the feature attraction at the ———— next ———— Since most of these tales are laid in the Northwest it is fitting and proper that a star of rugged personality should interpret them. So Michell Lewis is featured here supported by a cast that includes the charming Helen Ferguson, Arthur Carew, and William V. Mong. The picture is tense with action and measures out a deal of suspense. Edward Sloman directed from a scenario by A. S. LeVino.

SUGGESTIONS

A Jack London adaptation always lends itself well to exploitation. You have your bookdealers to co-operate with and they can feature the story and others from the graphic pen of the author. The title is attractive and should be advertised for its full value. You can dress your lobby in atmosphere suggestive of the Yukon region. Bring out the star's name and tell that he is an ideal selection for the leading role. Use stills of the scenes—which, incidentally, are mighty attractive. Feature the picture as a vital drama of the North

CATCH LINES

See "Burning Daylight"—a picture with a strong heart punch—a virile romance and a red blooded theme. Mitchell Lewis is the star.

THE SEA WOLF
(Famous Players-Lasky)

Good Action, Melodrama Typical of Jack London

FOR those whose photoplay memory extends back to the time of the first production of "The Sea Wolf," the 1920 picture will prove interesting if only as a matter of comparison. We have heard much concerning the advance in the art of picture making. In this connection, to our mind, the first "Sea Wolf" has all the best of it. But Mr. Melford's production is good and at times intensely exciting. The sinking of the ferry is a most realistic scene. The fights in which Noah Berry as "Wolf Larsen," figures prominently, are the real thing. In fact it is in this that the producer may have erred when the average audience with its feminine predominence is considered. More attention has been given to showing "Wolf Larsen" as a "he man" than to depicting the development of its leading character from a mollycoodle into the specimen of manhood, you are given to understand he is at the end of the enforced voyage on the "Ghost." However, in this last connection Jack London's story, from which the picture was adapted, was one of a hard life among hard people, and as such the picture version is true to the original. The feature attempts to point a moral; that the so called "super man" can be beaten, but in this it goes lame after some very good titles have opened the picture. The "super man," "Wolf Larsen is beaten, but it is fate and not the pampered son of luxury which defeats him.

Acting honors go to Mr. Berry, of course, since he has a role which gives him all the chances. Tom Forman, who comes back to the screen after a considerable absence has little to do of real importance. Mabel Julienne Scott is also given little opportunity in the one feminine role of the production. Considerable of the dialogue of the novel has been used to advantage, especially in giving the picture a touch of needed comedy. Action predominates through the entire production. Will Ritchey has done well with his continuity and Mr. Melford's direction is above reproach. Length, 6 reels. J. S. Dickerson.

PROGRAM READER

Jack London's great story of life on the sea, "The Sea Wolf," with Noah Beery as "Wolf Larsen," will be the attraction at this theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

The production is one of the notable melodramas of the year, being dominated by action and telling a story of rugged adventures as only Jack London, who wrote of what he had experienced, could tell it. Beginning with the sinking of the San Francisco ferry, a scene which has never been echpsd for realism, "The Sea Wolf" is a story of adventure and romance. Two scions of wealth and luxury through an accident are forced to go for a voyage on board a sealhunting schooner. There the young man, one of the passengers, learns to be a man in his own right and in so doing wins the wife he desired, who had refused him because he was not a "caveman."

However, it is the incidents and events of the sea voyage with its fights, both human and with the sea that makes the picture so absorbing. The big character of the picture is that of the captain, a brute and exponent of the theory of "might is right." Mabel Julienne Scott is the heroine, and Tom Forman, who will be welcomed back as a screen star, plays the role of the lover.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Sea Wolf," a picturization of the famous Jack London story, directed by George Melford and a Paramount-Artcraft special, has been booked for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement, beginning ————.

Adapted from one of Mr. London's famous books, all of which are characterized by action and the dramatic incident of a sea faring life which the author wrote from personal experiences, "The Sea Wolf" is one of the most enlivening and exciting pictures of the year. The story is one about how two young people of San Francisco through the wreck of a ferry were forced to go on a voyage to the Behring Sea in search of seals on board a schooner commanded by "Wolf Larsen," the sea wolf, and a man so brutal and calloused that even his crew, selected from the scums of the docks, were afraid of him. How he ruled them by the might of his fist, what happened to the young man who had never done a day's work in his life, on board this "hell ship" makes interesting screen fiction. Jack London knew his sea and his stories are faithful descriptions of the life thereon. In the role of "Wolf Larsen" Noah Beery, one of the best character men of pictures, gives a great performance. Mabel Julienne Scott is the heroine and Tom Forman is the young man who becomes cabin boy for the "Ghost," after having lived a life of luxury.

CATCH LINES

Replete with action and showing life on the boundless sea as only Jack London knew and told it is this red blooded story of a voyage to the Behring Sea in search of seals. "Wolf Larsen" was a man who ruled by might and believed that this made him right. How his methods failed him at last and how he died a broken, blind failure makes this the greatest of the stories ever written by the master.

The girl was romantic. She refused the young man because he was not brave and a "caveman." Then fate sent them on a voyage aboard a seal hunting schooner, with a brute for a captain and the scum of the earth as a crew and she came to know him as a real man and to realize that her ideal was not that which she had imagined it.

"THE BUTTERFLY MAN"

Sumptuous Production with Weak Plot in Society Picture

"THE BUTTERFLY MAN," with Lew Cody as its star, follows somewhat along the lines of the "Beloved Cheater," enjoying perhaps, more elaborate production, but suffering from the lack of a real dramatic story. It is wholly a society picture with dinner parties, lawn parties, and dancing parties following closely upon one another. The star is cast in the role of a male heart breaker and we follow his society life through the five reels. And his "affairs" with married women, his strenuous endeavors to win an heiress and thus pay his debts, create the interest in the picture, which interest will, with a certain type of audience, compensate for the lack of real drama and strong plot.

The story makes the star almost entirely unsympathetic. His entire family, even the lovable mother, are likewise far from admirable, for they all want to see the butterfly "marry well." The "butterfly man" himself behaves rather illogically, for needing the heiress' money as he does, he still flirts with other women until she finally learns his true character and breaks the engagement. In the end his mother dies and he walks, broken hearted and disconsolate, off the scene. We suppose that his social life is ended, and take the moral that it does not pay to be a "butterfly man." Whether such a character, as this heartbreaking, women-chased vampire is true to life or not, it will probably appeal strongly to a number of fans, but others, who want to see a character they can admire, and who possesses manly and honorable traits, will be far from pleased. Cody's love-making scenes are not emphasized as much as in "The Beloved Cheater."

The cast is above the average and Louise Lovely, coy and love-sick, and Alec Francis, as sophisticated as ever, and several others help make it so. Lavish ball room interiors are provided and there is some fine garden photography. If your audience like pictures depicting high society life and enjoy this somewhat emasculated type of picture, you will do extra big business with "The Butterfly Man."—Length, 6 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A treat is in store for all of Lew Cody's many admirers, for they will have an opportunity to witness his latest production, "The Butterfly Man," at the ———— on ————. Cody, whose last picture, "The Beloved Cheater," won him thousands of new followers, again plays the "male vampire" in this picture. It was taken from the story by George Barr McCutcheon, whose many novels have been read and re-read by millions of Americans.

"The Butterfly Man" is a society picture—with Lew Cody playing in the role of society's favorite. For Sedgewick Blynn, played by the star, is a butterfly, flitting from one love to another, and yet satisfied with none. He was loved by all women and envied and feared by the men—envied because he finds such favor with the fair sex, and feared lest he should turn his attentions to their own wives and sweethearts. In the end, however, Blynn learns that it does not pay to play butterfly man.

The picture contains numerous pleasing sets, and some of the ballroom scenes are more elaborate than any that have been seen on the screen in many a day. Ida May Parke, the only woman director in filmdom, supervised the production, and the cast contains such favorites as Louise Lovely, Lilie Leslie, Alec Francis, Alberta Lee, Andrew Robson and Rosemary Theby. "The Butterfly Man" is a worthy successor to "The Beloved Cheater," and one that will please and captivate any audience.

PROGRAM READER

Lew Cody is coming! If you saw "The Beloved Cheater" you will remember this adorable, love-making star very well. This time he is appearing in "The Butterfly Man," a photoplay adapted from the novel of the same name by George Barr McCutcheon, one of America's best known novelists. It is a story that might have been written especially for Cody. For it gives him every opportunity to show his skill in that delicate art—love-making. And Lew Cody is an artist of the highest type in this respect. "For every man that hated him, ten more women fell in love with him," said a wise old man, as he watched this young favorite of society at his work of breaking hearts. And everyone who saw "The Beloved Cheater," ten more will come to see "The Butterfly Man."

SUGGESTIONS

Try a teaser campaign with this caption, "Watch your wives and sweethearts! The world's greatest heart breaker will be in town soon." Follow this up with "He's here! Who? Lew Cody, the screen's greatest love-maker in 'The Butterfly Man' at the ———— theatre." Flood your programs and advertising copy with catch lines, for there are countless which can be devised to get over the "male vampire" and "lessons in love making" ideas, which is the biggest and best angle of this production to boost. Do not, of course, neglect George Barr McCutcheon, and judge his popularity from library statistics, if possible. Play up the high society settings by showing the most gorgeous stills possible. Show

CATCH LINES

Would you want your fiance to have married women phoning him all day long? Such was "the butterfly man"—but then who could help calling up such a heart breaker?

"NOTHING BUT LIES"
(Taylor Holmes-Metro)

Farce Picture Drags and Carries Very Little Humor

AN expenditure of effort which might be placed to better advantage is brought out in Taylor Holmes' newest picture, "Nothing But Lies." Not being fortified with any sustaining highlights in the shape of comic situations and with the action running around in a circle, it carries but few entertaining moments. On the stage it was presented as a sequel to "Nothing But the Truth," but didn't score anywhere near the success of the latter because of the similarity of idea. Whereas the play about "Truth" contained a note of originality and was spontaneous in its development, the farce of "Lies" was conceived to share some of the glory of its forerunner by presenting contradictory theme and treatment.

It was a spineless plot at best and on the screen, deprived of snappy dialogue, it drags its way to a pointless conclusion. Five and one-half reels are too many to present a farce built upon a fabric of fibs, because the action becomes repetitious long before the ultimate climax is reached. The scenes are not funny in themselves, the situations being too thinly conceived. What one sees is a series of exits and entrances and the players rushing about making explanations. Even a farce must have back-bone to score its points—a wee bit of logic woven in the thread somewhere. Here the chief character is caught spreading one falsehood on another in order to save his concern—with divers persons being complicated. It is quite confusing at times.

The titling tells more of the story than the action itself and contains most of the humor. Mr. Holmes works hard, as do all of his players, in an effort to make it snappy and bright. It must be admitted that they have little or nothing to work with. The star knows farcical values—knows when to emphasize his points and keep them subdued. His skill at expression is lost because of the foamy substance of his idea—an idea, incidentally, which doesn't intrigue the imagination. Most of the interest is centered in the bits of business introduced by the players, among those who stand out being Rapley Holmes and Dodson Mitchell. The production itself is praiseworthy.—Length, 5500 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Taylor Holmes will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest production, "Nothing But Lies," which is an adaptation of William Collier's stage success of the same name. This is a sort of sequel to an earlier offering, "Nothing But the Truth," and concerns the efforts of a young man to cover up a friend's mistake. The hero is the junior member of the firm of Nigh and Cross, advertising experts, and everything is going smoothly in his concern until Nigh's son becomes involved with the propaganda of truth. George Cross wants to tell the truth about the expose of his clients. They wouldn't believe him; they are too busy swamping him with congratulations. And nobody would listen to the man who had caused the initial outrage which turns out to be a big business asset.

Cross nearly loses the love of Ann Nigh in attempting to square himself and he gets himself entangled in a series of startling complications. These same complications made thousands laugh when they were incorporated in the original play and presented in the picture they are as mirth-provoking as ever. Mr. Holmes is a comedian who knows the value of situation and climax and he scores effectively in a quiet way. His support includes the beautiful Justine Johnstone, Rapley Holmes and Jack McGowan. Lawrence Windom directed the feature, and his action is as snappy and full of comedy high lights.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever start out to tell the truth and find yourself involved in a fabric of lies? And every attempt you made to square yourself you found that you were sinking deeper than ever? That's what happens to Taylor Holmes in the adaptation of William Collier's stage success, "Nothing But Lies," which comes to this theatre next ————, This is a sparkling comedy—a companion piece to a previous offering, "Nothing But the Truth," and it features the same comic high lights which are excellently brought out by the star and his well balanced company that includes the beautiful Justine Johnstone in the opposite role. The picture makes a lie look like a great white halo.

SUGGESTIONS

Emphasize the fact that this is a screen version of a well-known stage success—a farce originally acted by William Collier. And tell that it was a companion piece to "Nothing But the Truth." Exploit the star as one of the screen's leading light comedians. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion and use teaser campaigns for your programs and newspapers. Use a portrait of George Washington which will satirize the idea. Use catch lines. Exploit the beauty of Justine Johnstone and advise your patrons that she is one of the most beautiful women in America. Feature the farce as containing one long, continuous laugh from start to finish. Use such a teaser as "We're telling the truth when we declare 'Nothing But Lies' is one of the funniest farce pictures ever made."

CATCH LINES

"NO. 99"
(Brunton-Hodkinson)

Obvious But Interesting Photoplay Is Kerrigan's Latest

IT is a made-to-order picture which J. Warren Kerrigan has in "No. 99," but despite its obviousness the offering is quite interesting. An escaped convict story, by its very character, is usually full of action and adventure and this one is no exception. What if it is far-fetched and quite improbable? What if it does develop according to Hoyle? Its faults are unimportant compared to the generous spray of highlights which focus one's attention. The star dearly loves to bask in adventurous roles because they permit him to be heroic in full radius of the camera. And he is the center of activity from the time he escapes from prison until he vindicates himself in the concluding scene.

Certain touches do much to destroy the logic. For insatnce: Why are the guards permitted to search a house without a warrant? They are admitted when a week-end party is in full swing and conduct themselves in a thoroughly Prussian manner. Of course their actions may be discounted in a way because of the serio-comic values of the story itself. The convict has sneaked into this house and is protected by the heroine. She gives him her brother's clothes to wear and presents him as a guest. Naturally this is hokum with a vengeance. And all of it follows the familiar groove. Still the interest of the spectator is maintained.

The complications develop when the guards are introduced and a bit of suspense is measured out when one wonders if the convict will be able "to get away with it." When he elopes with the girl and marries her, the complications are swept aside and he is revealed as a "more sinned against than sinning young man." It may perplex the critical how he is able to keep his liberty without a pardon or reprieve. And escaping from prison is a crime in itself. The keen observer will also notice that Kerrigan elopes in a fur coat and comes back in a leather one. There are several slips which show a carelessness of detail. However, the picture keeps going, sending out a full measure of action and a balancing note of romance. The star and his players contribute good performances.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"No. 99" is J. Warren Kerrigan's latest picture and it comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. It is an entertaining comedy-drama which contains action, suspense, and original serio-comic twists. The star is seen as an escaped convict. He hides himself in Cynthia Vivian's boudoir, where she discovers him. Her sympathies are enlisted, and she suggests that he remain in hiding at her home, posing as Philip Valentine, a friend of her brother who is absent. He becomes a guest in the house, which is closely guarded by prison guards.

At the house party are John Brandt, the man who sent Arthur to jail, and Renee Etherington, an old sweetheart. Complications develop and Arthur's identity is established, but when things loom up black for him, the judge comes to his rescue. He had married Cynthia in the meantime. The spirited action travels along with unique situations and Kerrigan makes the most of them in his dashing way. As in his previous offerings Fritzi Brunette heads the aggregation of players among whom are Lila Leslie, John Steppling, Charles Arling and William V. Mong. The story was written by Wyndham Martyn and directed by Ernest C. Warde. The star has a good characterization here and one that permits him plenty of acting opportunities.

PROGRAM READER

He escaped from the prison, jumped in someone's limousine and made a good getaway. He got rid of the car and entered a bedroom window of a house. But the girl who saw him extended her sympathies and made him a guest of the week-end party. And being a gentleman he knew how to conduct himself. When the prison guard searched the house they never mistrusted that their convict was present. The picture is a spirited comedy-drama which unfolds a series of unique situations, and J. Warren Kerrigan in his inimitable manner makes the most of his opportunities. Fritzi Brunette appears again as his leading lady. The picture is called "No. 99" and was written by Wyndham Martin, scenarioized by Jack Cunningham, and directed by Ernest C. Warde. It will be at the ———— theatre next ————. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Convict stories by their very character lend themselves well to exploitation. You can go in for atmosphere, dressing your lobby to fit the situations and staging a prologue. Announce that J. Warren Kerrigan has another picture which is ideally suited to his buoyant personality. Feature the title. It is attractive and should be played up prominently. You can go in for suspense by featuring the title and nothing else. This will arouse curiosity as to just what it means. Bring out that it is a comedy-drama of an escaped convict who turns the tables on his pursuers. Tell that it unfolds a series of spirited situations. Feature the other members of the cast. Tell that the author wrote "ALL the World to Nothing," and "The Man Outside." Send out circular letters because the star has a big following.

"ROMANCE"
(United Artists)

Artistic Production Given Play of Love and Sentiment

THE long-heralded screen version of Edward Sheldon's famous play, "Romance," with Doris Keane playing her identical role, has reached the exhibitors and the public and the verdict is sure to be "an artistic production." The name of the star may not be familiar to the majority of picturegoers and there may not be much box-office value attached to it. Still the average patron is ever in search of a new type. From that standpoint the star is certain to please any one tired of the personalities who are presented every other week. She brings to the screen a fragrant personality, even though her histrionic capabilities are smothered through its limitations. Yet she screens well and conveys a spiritual quality in her work.

The picture itself is lacking in physical action, there being scarcely a scene of situation or climax. So it is dependent upon its theme of broken romance for sustaining value. And it must be said in all fairness that action which presents nothing else but impassioned and often sentimental love-making has a tendency to become wearisome at times. The picture follows the play very closely, the subtitles being genuine excerpts, and carrying on its thought exceedingly well. And the treatment is identical with the original, even to the prologue and its subsequent development. A young man contemplating matrimony approaches his grandfather on matters of love and the old gentleman's imagination travels back to the heyday of his youth—to the big romance of his heart.

His account of it makes up the moving moments of the play. He is a clergyman in love with an Italian opera singer and the conflict is generated in his effort to rise above worldly things and take her with him. But she is of the flesh and the romance ends with a deep note of pathos. It is hard to reconcile the conduct of the young dominie with his religious doctrine. And his action, to some, will be a big pill to swallow. Chet Withey, the director, has brought out all the atmosphere. The scenes are well arranged and he has guided the players to get the most from them. Basil Sydney as the romancer plays with a good deal of fire and persuasion, while Norman Trevor brings a balancing note with his admirable restraint. The picture will certainly appeal to those in search of romance or who have lost it in the days when love was young. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

No screen production that has yet been produced possesses such delightful qualities as does "Romance," the alluring and fascinating love story from the pen of Edward Sheldon, one of America's foremost dramatists, in which Doris Keane, who played the leading role on the stage for six continuous years in New York, Boston, Chicago and London, will play the chief part, when it is shown at the ———— theatre next ————. This fascinating drama reveals Mr. Sheldon as a playwright of rare sentiment and poetic gift, and his play has endured because of these very qualities.

The picture is well named for it expresses an exquisite romance. As Mme. Cavalini, the fascinating prima donna heroine, Miss Keane has won for herself many triumphs on the international stage and is ranked as one of America's greatest emotional actresses. The most minute care has been taken to represent faithfully the environment of the period in which the story is laid. It is a breath of romance which comes like a summer breeze. Miss Keane is supported by a cast of excellent players most of whom have had long training upon the stage. Chet Withey, the director, has been faithful to the original and has turned out a picture which is a rich achievement.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— has the pleasure of announcing that "Romance," a screen version of Edward Sheldon's wonderful play of love which has captivated audiences for six years in New York and London, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— with Doris Keane, who has won a position as one of America's greatest actresses, in the leading role. The picture is said to be full of poetic imagination and charming sentiment, while the love romance of the prima donna and the clergyman is as novel and unusual as it is charming and beautiful. Miss Keane was brought from London where she created a genuine sensation in "Romance," to appear in her leading role on the screen. And she gives excellent testimony why she is called a superb actress. Our patrons are assured of seeing one of the most appealing pictures ever screened.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which demands full exploitation. It is one of the greatest plays ever written and you can mention that it held audiences spellbound in New York and London for six years. Tell that its success was so great in these cities that the play never appeared to the populace who live along the road. Bring out that their chance has arrived to see Edward Sheldon's beautiful romance. Exploit the title and use circular letters and every kind of exploitation possible.

"A LADY IN LOVE"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Ethel Clayton's Charming Performance the Only Redeeming Feature Here

THERE is very little to recommend in this picture aside from the star's sincere and charming performance in another of her domestic roles. Whatever merit it once possessed as a play has apparently gone astray since there appears to be neither rhyme nor reason in the plot. Although, based upon a melodramatic formula (the woman with a past), there is an attempt to ring in a satirical thrust or two which is contrary to its logic. It's an old formula that is presented here one that depicts the young convent-bred girl in love with love, eloping with a ne'er-do-well, finding herself a grass widow immediately after the ceremony, and waiting for a divorce to take place before she can marry the next man who fascinates her.

Of course the fatal note is unearthed eventually which makes her marriage void and the second fellow is revealed as a Prince Charming. In the meantime there is considerable "give and take" between them, because he must never know of her past. And a counterplot is offered which presents the jealous wife of her guardian, also playing at love. The villainous scamp who leaves our heroine in the lurch comes back into the picture for the final climax—without any explanation over his strange conduct. No motive is established for leaving such a charming wife, for if her physical appeal failed to attract him surely her bankroll would. And she must have money because she goes to New York and sets up an apartment.

The hero resides on the floor below and she meets him through the ancient burglar hokum. The various scenes are arbitrarily arranged and coincidence comes in when she returns to her guardian to find Prince Charming likewise a visitor. He is the lawyer who will arrange the divorce. The inevitable lawn fete and dancing party takes place with villainy rampant in evening dress. The lady in love saves the jealous wife from being compromised, discovers the happy evidence and the happy ending at the same time. It seems to us as if it is patterned, too closely, on the froth of society to present any truth or drama. Miss Clayton gives it tone, but she deserves a picture with a purpose. Harrison Ford is pleasing as the gentleman in love. The production itself is meritorious. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

The latest photoplay to present the charming and talented Ethel Clayton is "A Lady in Love," adapted by Alice Eyton from the original play of that name by Harriet Ford and Caroline Duer, and directed by Walter Edwards. The picture will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. It may be described as a domestic drama with much of the same ingredients that were found in "The Thirteenth Commandment." The star plays the role of a convent girl who elopes with a certain ne'er-do-well. After the marriage she discovers that he is already married, although he contradicts it. Later he is forced to flee and Barbara consults her guardian about a divorce. This arouses the jealousy of his wife.

A young lawyer is summoned to handle the divorce and Barbara falls in love with him. Events occur, subsequently, which prove that the ne'er-do-well's first marriage is valid and after a highly effective climax the heroine is given her liberty. This picture contains a full quota of appealing situations that are ably enacted by Miss Clayton and her company. The star is thoroughly at home in this type of story since it permits her to show that rare sympathy and restraint which are hers on the screen. Harrison Ford appears opposite.

SUGGESTIONS

The steady picturegoer knows what to expect from an Ethel Clayton picture. He knows that the star will give her best effort in a production which is flawless. So exploit this latest Clayton feature as up to her standard. Tell that it is an adaptation of a successful play and that it affords the star with another opportunity to present a domestic drama. Use stills which bring out the beauty of the star and her wardrobe. There are no situations in the play with which you can link up in exploitation matter. But you can go to the trouble in advertising it in newspaper copy and advising your patrons that the picture is of the same high quality as "Young Mrs. Winthrop," and "The Thirteenth Commandment." Tell that Harrison Ford is the leading man and advertise the director. He has turned out some fine products for Constance Talmadge and others.

CATCH LINES

She was in love with love and married before she reached the age of discretion. Then when the real man came along, what happened? See Ethel Clayton in "A Lady in Love."

She was married to a man who led a double life. How to keep her self-respect. That was the question. Her heart told her. See "A Lady in Love."

"A TRIP TO MARS"
(Tower Film Corporation)

Should Furnish Average Entertainment

THIS picture dwells upon a topic which, although not a new one, has troubled the minds of scientists for many generations. Every now and then some member of this learned body gets busy on this old but always new theory and works our imaginations to fever point, wondering whether he will succeed in his almost hopeless task—that of communicating with the well-known planet, Mars.

The author of this tale has put this thought into story form with the objects of giving us interesting and exciting entertainment. In this he has succeeded in many ways and the picture should afford pleasant amusement.

However, there are a few drawbacks which may tend to lessen the feature's success. It was made in Italy and the foreign style of acting and direction is noticeable throughout. The actors either overact or they pose, which seems to draw the attention from the story and to themselves, the leading man being especially given to this style.

The settings and lightings are up to standard and the exteriors, especially in the Martian atmosphere, are beautiful, many "extras" appearing in them.

The story is different from the usual type in that it is not of the dream sequence variety, for we see two anxious explorers leaving mother earth in their airship "Excelsior" and, after the usual experiences and discouragements, arriving at Mars.

In the new found planet the discoverers find a different world from the one they have left. Peace, quietness and good will towards mankind is the motto there and it is an offence even to kill a bird, as our hereos soon discovered.

We are shown the temples, the hills and plains, which are filled with beautiful maidens, who dance "in abundance" to our adventurers' delight and the "grotto of justice." And then our hero becomes enamored of a beautiful maiden and takes her back to this earth that she may spread her doctrines among us.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Trip to Mars," a Tower Film Corporation feature, will appear at this theatre on ——— of next ——— week.

This picture is a little different from the usual run of features in that the story takes as its theme a subject that for generations has troubled the minds of scientists. And it is only within the past few weeks that one of our own scientists endeavored to accomplish this well known object—communication with Mars.

He did not succeed, however, and so it was up to the author of this story to take us on a trip to the planet and show us the wonders that are contained therein.

He has placed his heroes upon the good airship "Excelsior" and after many trials and tribulations, landed them safely on the plains of Mars. And there they find a different world from the one they have left, for peace, quietness and good will towards men reign there and our heroes are told by these good people that they have known of our planet and of the terrible disasters that have occurred, through the fighting instinct that exists here.

After being shown the wonders that exist on the new found planet, the discoverers prepare to leave but not before one of the heroes has become enamored of a beautiful maiden whom he takes with him back to this earth that she may spread her beautiful doctrines among the people here.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— announces that "A Trip to Mars," a Tower Film Corporation feature, will appear at this theatre on ——— of next ———.

Although the theme of this story is not a new one, it is one that has worried the minds of scientists for many years and it is only within the past few weeks that one of our own scientists endeavored to accomplish this well known object, communication with Mars. He did not succeed.

The author of this feature, however, has taken upon himself the difficult task of accomplishing this object, in his own way and so he has placed his heroes upon an airship named the "Excelsior" and sent them upon their mission through the clouds and through space until after many trials and tribulations they finally reach their destination.

But the inhabitants know of their coming and are prepared to meet them. Here everything is different from the material ways of the world they have left and our heroes find that peace and good will towards men is the principal motto.

The adventurers are shown the temples, the hills and plains, which are filled with beautiful maidens, who dance "in abundance" to the delight of the discoverers, the "grotto of justice" and many more wonderful things to behold.

And then one of our heroes falls in love with one of the beautiful maidens and takes her back to mother earth that she may spread her beautiful doctrines among the people in this universe.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture should give pleasant amusement to your audience should you care to book it. It will not do any more than this, however.

In exploiting it you have a title which is attractive and one which should excite interest. And then again the story is timely and one which has always interested the human beings upon this earth.

As you know, it was only a few weeks ago that one of our learned scientists hit upon a new idea of communicating with Mars and sent a balloon up many thousand feet with apparatus attached in an endeavor to find out whether a connection could be established.

The newspapers all over the country printed the story which to say the least, must have excited great interest, as it always has and always will.

You could run stories in your town papers telling of the supposed wonders of this planet and invite the views of your patrons.

If you run the right kind of stories you certainly will arouse your people.

Do not place much stress upon the picture, for you might have some disappointed patrons.

"THE PATH SHE CHOSE"
(Universal)

Interesting Despite Slight Story

THIS picture has as much interest as any picture could possibly have that struggles along with such a slight story. There is a serious lack of dramatic incidents and it is merely the picturization of a poor girl's rise from poverty and sordid surroundings to business success and domestic happiness. There is, of course, a climax, when her wayward brother seeks to force her old conditions of life upon her once more, but this comes suddenly and unexpectedly and is not worked up to in a manner to arouse great suspense.

But despite all this there is entertainment in the picture, not because of its drama, but because it is a wholesome little chunk of life in a big city, having no improbabilities, and tracing as it does the history of a most sympathetic character. There is romance, of course, pleasing, but not overemphasized.

This is Anne Cornwall's first starring vehicle and it hardly gives her a chance to install herself in the hearts of the fans. She has a pleasing personality in addition to good looks, but probably many actresses of her type could have been equally satisfactory. The cast is good, with Claire Anderson, Edward Coxen and William Moran showing up especially well. The director manages to bring you right into the correct atmosphere of cheap boarding houses, the sordid slums, and the workaday big city factory life. And it is this faithful depiction of the life of the "five million" that the audience will like. For the heavy is not overdrawn and the heroine is far from being absurdly "pollyannaish."

Nothing unusual in sets could have been used and are therefore not missed. Detail is up to the mark. It has a very good little moral, which is not overemphasized and which is gotten over without any attempt at moralizing.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Path She Chose," a Universal picture, starring tiny Anne Cornwall, will be the attraction at the ——— theatre beginning ———. This is a story of a little girl of the slums, who, by diligent work and serious study, finds success in the business world, and, eventually the man she loves and who loves her.

The story is laid in a large American city. Virginia has been brought up among sordid surroundings. Her father is a drunkard, her brother a cheat, and her sister a painted, unrefined girl. But Virginia decided to take the different path. She leaves her unhappy home, and finally obtains work in a millinery factory. There she works hard for several years until her employer not only appreciates her business ability, but also finds in her the girl of whom he has always dreamed. The sister, who has chosen the different path, is rescued from the menial life of a scrubwoman by Virginia.

The picture is just a large, healthy slice of life flashed before your eyes on the screen. The types of characters you will recognize immediately. It depicts the struggles of a young and helpless girl to keep on the true path to happiness, and it contrasts very vividly the ends of her path and the path of her wayward sister. In the cast are many distinguished players, notably Claire Anderson, Edward Coxen, and William Moran. The picture was directed by Philip Rosen.

PROGRAM READER

She had her choice, and she made it. But her sister selected another road, and it led—but you will find out the answer in "The Path She Chose," which will be the attraction at this theatre on ———. Anne Cornwall, a newcomer to stardom, but not to the screen, will be in the leading role. This is not a picture of heiresses, and multi-millionaire young clubmen. It does not attempt to depict the life of the exclusive upper set. Instead it is just a pleasing, everyday story of everyday people—the kind of people who form the great bulwark of America. The story opens in the slums of a large city, and shifts to a cheap lodging house and from there to a millinery factory. It tells the tale of a little girl who chose the path that means work and study, rather than "a short life and a merry one." But it is not a sermon—only a pleasing little romance of a remarkably pretty little girl.

SUGGESTIONS

The title seems to be about the best angle in this picture. You can get a number of catch lines out of it which will arouse the interest. Your patrons will probably also be interested in the fact that the picture shows a new star. Feature a close up of her in your newspaper ads, as this will be more attractive than stills from the picture. The fact that it was written by Ida M. Tarbell and was adapted from a magazine story may not mean a great deal to your patrons, but is probably worth mentioning.

CATCH LINES

Virginia was up against a serious problem. It was up to her to choose her path. She did, and where the road led and what it brought her makes "The Path She Chose," an unusually interesting story.

A new star in a new kind of picture. A human heart-interest story such as you have always been looking for.

Virginia came to a fork in the Road of Life, and she made her choice. Her sister took the other path, and the careers of these two girls will keep you interested if you see "The Path She Chose."

CANADA

All members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario are apparently unanimously opposed to percentage booking. Following the regular April meeting of the association at Toronto, a questionnaire was sent out to the two hundred or more members of the organization to secure their opinions regarding the percentage plan of booking. At that meeting a standing vote was also taken on the question and every exhibitor supported the proposal to abolish the percentage system. The motion for this decision was moved by Mr. Redway, of the Crown theatre, Toronto, and seconded by Mr. A. Bailie, owner of the Cum-Bac theatre, Toronto, and a past president of the association.

The latest Allen theatre to be opened in Canada is the brand new house in St. Catharines, Ontario, which has a seating capacity of 1,600. Mr. Rosenthal is the resident manager. The theatre is equipped, furnished and decorated in the usual Allen style. The house was opened under auspicious circumstances on Monday, April 26.

According to statistics issued at Ottawa, Ontario, the Musicians' Unions in Canada have increased their membership by over five thousand during the past year.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, has lost two of its prominent exhibitors during the past week or two. Will M. Elliott resigned from the management of the new Allen theatre on May 1 to return to Eastern Canada, while Oral D. Cloakey, manager of the Walker theatre, Winnipeg, also resigned to move to Vancouver, B. C., where he will have charge of the great new Allen theatre in that city.

Two Canadian film officials have been visiting exchanges and theatres of the Canadian West. One of these has been L. E. Ouimet, of Montreal, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, distributors of Pathe and various British releases. The other man is George W. Weeks, of Toronto, general manager of the Famous Lasky Film Service. Weeks will be on the road for upwards of two months, during which time he will call on exchanges and exhibitors throughout the territory west of Winnipeg.

Something of building conditions in Canada is revealed in the announcement at Calgary, Alberta, that work on the new Allen theatre at Calgary will be started shortly. The construction of the house should have been started several months ago and the steel should have been delivered in January last. Operations have been held up because of the non-delivery of the steel.

SALT LAKE CITY

While "Black Deering," William S. Hart's bandit picture was on the screen at the Paramount Empress theatre last week bandits staged a real holdup in the theatre and it was not a press agent stunt either. Two masked bandits entered the theatre early on the morning of April 25th, held up, bound and gagged Evant Baalegorae, night watchman and attempted to blow the office safe.

The Broadway theatre was transformed temporarily into a court of justice recently, when Judge Tobin held court in the building to run off an industrial film which is an exhibit in a legal contest.

BUFFALO

The Star theatre has reopened with musical comedy. This house for the past several months has been presenting motion pictures and vaudeville under the direction of A. A. Fennyvessy of Rochester.

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" was shown for week runs in two Buffalo houses commencing Sunday, May 2. The John Barrymore production was at the Empire, while Sheldon Lewis starred in the picture at the Lyric.

The New Aeriel theatre, High street, near Michigan avenue, has been sold to the New Aeriel Amusement company with George Welte and son George, as the principal stockholders.

Richard E. Riddick, First National exploitation man, was in Buffalo this week replacing temporarily Lieut. Jim Anderson, who attended the convention in Chicago.

Jack Kirsch, Dooley exchange manager, in company with Thomas W. Dooley, general manager, journeyed to New York the week of May 3 to purchase new features, serials and short subjects.

G. A. Woodward, formerly connected with the Goldwyn office, is now representing the Dooley exchange in Albany. David G. Rowney, former Vitagraphiat, is now a member of the local Dooley sales staff.

Cale is Made Representative by Rothacker

Not so many months ago George Cale, of Missouri, knew motion pictures only from a seat in the audience, but he learned swiftly after Watterson R. Rothacker made him an industrial film salesman.

It was in the week when he landed four industrial picture contracts in St. Louis that Mr. Rothacker made him Industrial Division representative for the entire State of Missouri. Mr. Cale's headquarters are in St. Louis, from where he commutes frequently to Kansas City, Joplin, St. Joseph and Springfield.

Music

¶ The NEWS has hit it!

¶ Beginning this week, a new music department is inaugurated under the direction of CHARLES D. ISAACSON, foremost exponent of the popularization of great music.

¶ The publication of music cue sheets, always necessary, will be supplemented by the more important discussions, which will enable owners, managers and financial interests to understand the theory, philosophy and practice of musico-theatricals.

¶ Mr. Isaacson has a personal following of two million music-lovers he has created and developed in New York City. He gives you the fundamental material, which will be translatable into added business.

A Mistake Worth Thousands to Showmen

Mistakes are usually expensive, but this one is a money maker. Before we started producing and releasing "COMEDYART" we made a budget covering the expenses for distribution, productions, etc. Of course, we based these figures on the gross amount of business that we expected to do with "COMEDYART."

This million dollar mistake, with the reverse English, that is, making money today for several thousand exhibitors so that we greatly underestimated the value exhibitors would immediately place on the "COMEDYART" idea, that is—three snappy, high-class subjects in a two reel release each week. We underestimated our gross bookings on "COMEDYART" so greatly that starting with our fourth release, "MOTHER'S ANGEL," we find ourselves able to spend from three to four times as much money on the making of our comedies as we had planned in our budget; that we were able to add four more companies making these comedies; able to add more specialists in title writing, gag men, artists; able to build the biggest, most elaborate sets—to use hundreds where we had planned to use dozens.

The costumes of our "special" beauties are more daring, more magnificent than any producer ever has used and each one of them is a new, original creation by the highest priced, imported modiste west of New York.

And the "special" Beauty Chorus! Well, we allowed for some expense in this line but these "specials" cost five times our original figure and they're surely worth ten times as much to you.

We started walking; now we're running. We started in low speed; now we're in high and hitting on twelve. There is no program of short reel subjects that can compare in quality with the "COMEDYART" releases now available, and to come.

If you have contracted for "COMEDYART" consider yourself lucky; if you have put off getting a contract for this latest winner there is still time to remedy it. There's a "Special" office near you and a postcard will bring you your opportunity—the same opportunity that thousands of the wisest, most successful exhibitors in America are cashing in on right today.

TO EXHIBITORS-

"IN every way 'Below the Surface' is superior to 'Behind the Door.' The story is strong and not gruesome. It is a daring theme treated in a daring manner.

"The undersea scenes are simply astounding. They are by far the most startling ever shown.

"I am sure that no matter how great your expectations are, you will not be disappointed in 'Below the Surface.'"

"The Greatest Love Story Ever Told"

Triumphs At Its Initial New York Presentation

"'Romance' is one of the finest examples of screen entertainment seen in New York in many months. Doris Keane gave a performance which might well serve as an object lesson for most of our 'movie' stars. The reality of her 'Rita Cavallini' has seldom been seen on the screen."

—New York World.

"Miss Doris Keane charmed a large audience yesterday by her impersonation of Mme. Cavallini . . . . She is at her best in this picture and her work is as effective on the screen as it was on the stage. The unfolding of the story kept the audience at a high pitch throughout."

—New York Evening Telegram.

"Miss Keane's acting on the screen has lost none of its charm."

—New York Evening Post.

"'Romance' is uncommonly interesting."—New York Times.

"Miss Keane makes a lovely Marguerita Cavallini, just as she did on the stage and as the love story unwound itself, one could easily understand why the stage production had been so great a success."—New York Tribune.

"The screen version shows that Miss Keane has indeed gained in power to stir the emotions . . . . Her work is beautifully shaded."

—New York Sun-Herald.

"Doris Keane in the role that she played over a thousand times in England and many times in this country, in Edward Sheldon's 'Romance', repeated on the screen at the Strand yesterday, the triumph that she achieved in this charming play on the legitimate stage."—New York Evening Sun.

FOREIGN TRADE AND SERVICE

Five years ago, the foreign film market, its scope and possibilities, were unknown to the American Producer. Today, it represents a vital adjunct to his business.

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, acting as the medium through which foreign buyers were enabled to obtain exclusive territorial rights to American productions, has played no small part in the development of foreign trade.

In the future it hopes to play an even greater rôle in the healthy continuation of trade in foreign film markets.

TWO STANDARDS

THE "PROFESSIONAL STANDARD" inflammable film is that used by the EXHIBITOR. In every theatre there is a fire-proof booth and a licensed operator as prescribed by law for the protection of the audience. Every theatre man recognizes the great work being done to increase his patronage and promote his interests and those of the Producer, in building up his audience by the use of the "SAFETY-STANDARD" non-inflammable film in the Church, the Home, the School and elsewhere. Here we find men, women and children, usually those who have previously looked down on Motion Pictures, now becoming interested. These are the ones who make up that potential audience who ultimately will become enthusiastic Motion Picture theatre patrons.

Demand and Supply

THE louder the demand, the greater the supply! That is one version of the economic law. The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is perfectly equipped to supply all the RITCHEY posters demanded.

The exhibitor needs all the RITCHEY posters he can get. He will get them in sufficient number when he voices his demand with enough sound, volume and insistance.

Regarding the demand and the supply of great posters,—our interests and the exhibitor's interests are identical. We make and he wants the greatest motion picture posters that it is possible to make. We are concerned with their production. Getting them is his concern. He should always remember that tickets are only purchased at the box-office—they are sold by the poster! To always sell the maximum number of tickets RITCHEY posters are absolutely necessary.

The exhibitor should therefore always have them, and he will only have them always, when he always demands them. In this matter he must take care of himself. God only takes care of drunken men and fools. The exhibitor is neither, and the surest way of demonstrating his sober wisdom is by DEMANDING RITCHEY POSTERS!

The How and Why of Reviews

MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week continues to present extracts from exhibitor letters on the subject of trade paper reviews. In entire frankness we wish to state at the outset that our only present purpose in the publication of these letters is to place before producers and the trade in general these forcible evidences of the exhibitor mind on the review question.

The fact that these letters are the outgrowth of the declaration of the Selznick organization that any trade paper reviewing its pictures would lose all advertising, and the subsequent action in the case of the NEWS alone—this phase may now be allowed to pass into the background.

As far as we are concerned it will.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is far too solicitous for its standing and dignity as a representative trade publication to go any further along such paths than is necessary to justify its position and clearly express its policy.

We have pledged our faith to our readers, and emphasized the pledge to the thousand exhibitors who have written us. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will maintain its review policy firm and unswerved; seeking no compromises, making no bargains.

SO let us turn to the lessons taught by those exhibitor letters. Several outstanding impressions remain on our minds after reading the letters. At random, they are:

First, that at least eighty per cent. of exhibitors consider competent reviews even more than a mere desirability, yes, a vital factor in the conduct of their business.

Second, that the exhibitor faces the review question in an intelligent logical manner, caring as little for "the reviewer who calls everything rotten" (one letter phrased it that way) as he does for the milk and water review which covers space, but says nothing.

Third, that the increase in producer-controlled theatres and the spread of the franchise plan, have made reviews of even greater importance than heretofore, for the value of the big first run as a booking guide has been proportionately decreased.

These are the prominent impressions driven home by the letters. Were it not stating the obvious conclusion that these facts point, we might add that the letters are a complete and effective answer to the type of producer and distributor that minimizes the exhibitor intelligence.

ONE additional reason for the necessity of providing real reviews is more directly applicable to the coming season.

Here we may be hazarding a prophecy, but it is our plain conviction that "open booking" in all the words imply will be an actuality next year.

True it is, that "open booking" was announced with a grand fanfare of trumpets last season; and true also, that the outcome was far removed from the promise.

But there are natural forces at work that will lead inevitably to a booking system based on the individual worth of the production. This season is the appointed time. And when the day dawns, what factor more vital to the success of both exhibitors and worth while productions than sincere, competent reviews?

WE cannot too strongly urge all whose success is based on a close contact and knowledge of the exhibitor mind to appropriate the time necessary for a real study of the exhibitor letters appearing in last week's issue and those on the following two pages.

In their treatment of the review question the letters also serve to shed light on many other phases of exhibitor thought and action. Scarcely a word in them can fail to be of value to the producer and the man employed by the producer.

The stiff competition that the coming year is certain to see will make equally stern demands on the man sitting at a New York desk and bring its rewards to the man best fitted to diagnose and analyze exhibitor psychology.

And to the end that it is giving service as an inter-trade medium of communication, and that end alone, MOTION PICTURE NEWS will continue to present as many extracts from these letters as space conditions will permit.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Exhibitors Speak Plainly on Reviews

Extracts from others of the thousand letters received from exhibitors the country over, expressing their desire for honest, candid reviews by the trade press, will be printed in next week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Opinions as to the stand this magazine has taken will be gladly received from producer and exhibitor.

"THE REVIEWS AND THE ADS"

"We subscribe to your journal for two reasons, the most important of the two of course is the reviews of the various pictures, they help me greatly in many ways, it is impossible for me to see every picture I play before I play it, therefore I find your reviews very valuable, they help me to secure good clean pictures for our audience, and they give me many good pointers as to the best manner of advertising each subject.

"Our other reason for subscribing for the NEWS is for the purpose of reading the advertising it carries. The producer may not know it but his advertisements carry many valuable hints and suggestions for the live exhibitor."

Chas. K. Campbell,
Auditorium Manager,
The Young Men's Christian Assn.,
Coatesville, Pennsylvania.

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER

"I have always read your reviews and think they are as fair if not BETTER—than any other paper—(and I take them all) and I want the REVIEWS to continue—in spite of the fact that some producer has an idea that he would start something."

H. E. Swan,
Empress,
Kearney, Nebr.

ADMIRES THE "NEWS" STAND

"I admire your stand in this matter and only hope that you will not move an inch regardless of a temporary loss of advertising."

E. O'Keefe,
Regent Theatre Company,
Billings, Nebr.

"WE MUST HAVE REVIEWS"

"If we cannot read what the critics think of the pictures we will certainly be getting a lot of bad pictures as we all know it is impossible to judge a picture by what the film salesman says."

C. W. Eckhardt,
Manager Marlow,
Helena, Mont.

"NOTHING BUT SERVICE"

"As both operator and manager I wish to state that the NEWS has always been a great help indeed and have never found anything in it but SERVICE from beginning to end, and mighty fair at that."

Glen Carver,
Manager, Empress Theatre,
Hastings, Nebr.

GIVES A SPECIFIC EXAMPLE

"We are very glad to state that we do read all of your reviews and all other reviews we have time to read from the four publications we are now receiving together with Harrison's Reports and we find same very helpful in booking and advertising our pictures.

"For instance just last night we ran 'The Mother of His Children' and the only reviews we had on this late picture was the review in your issue of April 17th and we will say that the review was correct."

Opera House Theatre,
Guide Rock, Nebr.

"I AM PERFECTLY SATISFIED"

"Your service has been fair and impartial to all. In fact, at times it appears that you are partial more so to the producer than to the exhibitor. However, I am perfectly satisfied in the service rendered by MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"To date I have not seen any adverse criticism by any exhibitor to the effect that MOTION PICTURE NEWS is not a competent judge of pictures.

F. W. Harrigan,
Manager, Macdonald Theatre,
Philipsburg, Mont.

USE REVIEWS AND AD AIDS

"Yes, we use your reviews for press notices and like them better than the producer press dope."

Fred Cosman,
Electric Theatre,
St. Joseph, Mo.

THANK YOU—BROTHER KEYES

"I have always found out that if you give every one concerned a square deal that you will come out at the top of the pile, and this, I believe MOTION PICTURE NEWS is doing."

Chas. R. Keyes,
Wagon Mound, N. Mex.

SPEAKING FROM THE HEART

"Thank God there is one instrumentality in the whole world that is willing to give the exhibitor just the ghost of a show. It seems to us they are tied hand and foot on every occasion and in every way."

A. P. Sitton & Son,
Amuza Theatre,
Tularose, N. Mex.

"STAND BY YOUR GUNS"

"More power to your arm. Stay with that policy and you will find that all fair-minded exhibitors will stay with you. We look to your reviews for facts."

Shear,
Hurley House,
Hurley, N. Mex.

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS ALONE"

"The MOTION PICTURE NEWS is the only trade paper I use in the conduct of my four theatres and if I thought its main columns were controlled by the advertisers I would soon drop it."

Henry J. Rockafeller,
Rockafeller Hughson Enterprises,
Asbury Park, N. J.

THE COMPLETE CIRCLE

"I would not think that a producer who had supposedly put his best efforts in making a picture and then feared to have the light of day turned on it would have a permanent place in the business. To my mind the industry needs producers that make good pictures and exhibitors that show them and both proud of the achievement."

Arthur J. Smith,
Fenwick Theatre,
Salem, N. J.

"KEEP UP THE GOOD WORK"

"We believe the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be the best trade paper on the market and are always looking forward for the next issue. We believe you to be fair in your service and competent in your reviews, as they certainly give the exhibitor some line on how to advertise the picture. And it also gives him a general idea of pictures before he buys them. Keep up the good work."

W. L. Darrington,
Star Theatre,
Littleton, N. H.

An Opportunity to Feel Theater Pulse

THE STORY IN A NUTSHELL

"If we could not get fair reviews from the trade papers how would us small fellows that have no time to get in to the city to see the pictures intelligently book and advertise a picture?"

G. W. Yeaton,
Ioka Theatre,
Exeter, N. H.

BATTING 1000 PER CENT WITH HIM

"The reviews of pictures in your MOTION PICTURE NEWS have always been a great help to me in selecting features and never have I exhibited a picture which was favorably spoken of by your critics that did not please my audience, and, furthermore, whenever I have a picture booked that is well spoken of in your reviews I do not hesitate to advertise it as a first class and pleasing production, and I have never gone wrong in so doing.

Arthur M. Twombly,
Opera House,
Alton, N. H.

"POOR ONES EXPENSIVE AT ANY PRICE"

"Replying to yours of April 21 with reference to the NEWS giving honest reviews on pictures want to say that I think that the NEWS has a moral obligation to fulfill in giving the reviews on pictures as they find them, and exhibitors should support the stand your publication has taken, that reviews should be based on the actual merit of a production rather than on the manufacturer's advertising value. You will find that before long the trade papers who base their reviews on the amount of advertising they receive from the makers of films will lose much of their circulation, and the value of their reviews will be in proportion in the eyes of the exhibitor to what they are actually worth.

"Every exhibitor wants honest reviews on pictures made by the different distributing organizations, and not because of buying cheaper for a poor production is expensive at any price. Any legitimate manufacturer will welcome an honest review of his production, and if unfortunately he has made an inferior production he should be glad of comment on some in order that he may receive an honest criticism on his better pictures when they are released.

"We consider your action in the matter most commendable, and the writer will make it his business to bring same before the New York State League, so that all the members of this organization will know the attitude you have taken."

A. C. Hayman,
Manager, Cataract Theatre,
Niagara Falls, N. Y.

THE TRUTH ABOUT PRICE-HAMMERING

"Replying to your letter of the 26th, beg to state that I value reviews for the purpose of protection in advance bookings with no idea in mind regarding price as a poor picture I would not show free of cost."

J. A. Colin,
The Grand,
Johnston, N. Y.

NEVER BOOK WITHOUT THE "NEWS"

"As a 'small town exhibitor' I want to say, 'Shake' for the stand you and your paper have taken on the reviewing of pictures, whether it is agreeable to the producer, and if we had more of your type of men in the business we would have much easier sailing, for it is a bad proposition booking pictures now on press accounts, and the producers, at least some of them, are holding the 'big stick' over the exhibitor as well as the others of the business.

"Not all the exchanges, though, are of this type, for we do business with several who are on the square, and always willing and glad to help us along.

"So far as your reviews go, we find the comments from others who have run the pictures and also your reviews helpful, and might say we have never booked a feature that we did not try to see what the NEWS had to say, and we think the stand you have taken will be appreciated by all of us, the 'big fellows' and 'little fellows' alike."

S. T. Daniel,
Manager, G. M. G. Theatre Co.,
Duke, N. C.

DON'T WORRY—WE'LL KEEP THE FAITH

"An honest review of current pictures is of advantage equally to the producer and the exhibitor. Assuredly, despite the vaporings of fool salesmen, no producing house thinks that all its output is 'super-special,' and in the long run an exhibitor will have a friendlier feeling with an exchange which does not sting him than for one which does. A review which is biased by the advertising pages is a betrayal of the trust which your subscribers have a right to place in you, and a continuance of such policy would soon reduce the NEWS to the level of an amplified house organ."

A. C. Wyer,
Delhi Theatre Company,
Delhi, N. Y.

MAHAIKE THEATRE GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.

"To me reviews are very important for several reasons. If I find favorable reports in the different trade papers on a picture that I have booked I push it for all it is worth and if reviews are not so good I don't force it quite so strong. Reviews are the only fair way that an exhibitor gets a line on the picture he has booked. The press books boost the picture to the sky anyway. And many reviews amount to nothing."

Earl B. Raifstanger.

First National Survey Continued Next Week

THE third installment of the First National survey of motion picture conditions throughout the country, which is being published exclusively in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will appear in the issue of June 12th. Owing to the continuance of the paper shortage it was necessary to omit this interesting resume this week.

Reichenbach Scores Again

YOU gotta hand it to him, boys! Harry Reichenbach has scored again—and right splash on the first pages of those hard-boiled eggs, the New York dailies.

Harry had barely returned to New York flushed with the triumphs of "The Virgin of Stamboul" from coast to coast when he turned his hand to the Numa picture, "The Return of Tarzan."

Nothing happened for a few days while Harry laid his plans. Then, on last Monday morning the storm broke. Practically all the New York papers told on the first pages with lengthy stories about the eccentric African explorer, "Mr. T. R. Zann," who had registered at the Hotel Belleclaire with a mysterious trunk, and then, the next morning, startled the hotel clerk with a request for 'steen pounds of raw meat.

Horrors! Investigation by the clerk, the manager, all the bell-hops, the house detective and nineteen others disclosed the fact that "Mr. T. R. Zann" had a live baby lion in his room. What could be done? The lion wasn't registered for one thing. Another, while there were rules against dogs, cats, and even monkeys, nothing in the books said anything about lions.

Of course nothing remained but to notify the papers. Reluctantly this was done. So reluctantly! And now Harry's scrap book is filling up again, the New York papers have done their share to boost next week's showing of "The Return of Tarzan" at the Broadway Theater, and out of town clippings are appearing to show that the word is spreading.

Fox's New York Studio Formally Opened

Prominent Speakers Address Crowds During Ceremonies at New Building

GALA scenes and impressive ceremonies marked the formal opening on Monday, May 24, of the new William Fox motion picture studio and administration building on West 55th street, New York. Men prominent in the official life of two States joined in making the affair one of the most successful of its kind ever undertaken. Among the speakers, in addition to Mr. Fox, were Governor Edward I. Edwards of New Jersey; Supreme Court Justice Charles L. Guy, and the Rev. Joseph Silverman, of the Temple Emanu-El on Fifth avenue.

Long before the dedicatory exercises started, long lines of invited guests were shown through the mammoth picture producing building. The doors of the new structure were thrown open shortly after 12:30 to those invited, and the guests, who numbered several thousands, began to arrive. After visiting the many executive offices on the main floor the guests were directed to the immense studio on the top floor, where they were able to get an intimate glimpse of the methods used in making screen productions. Several companies were working. To add to the brilliancy of the affair, a full uniformed band played selections on the studio floor, keeping the crowd in good spirits until the opening exercises started.

Governor Edwards touched briefly upon the career of Mr. Fox and extended his sincere wishes for continued success and prosperity. He pointed to the motion picture industry as "the big educational feature of the present day," and also to the work done by Mr. Fox during the war as something worthy of the highest praise.

Justice Charles L. Guy, introduced as an "ardent movie fan," touched upon the rise of the motion picture industry, which he said had come to be an educational institution, the same as the daily newspaper—in fact, a "larger press."

Rabbi Silverman paid a high tribute to the career of William Fox and dwelt upon the relationship between the church and the theatre.

Mr. Fox, the last speaker of the day, was formally presented with a set of engrossed resolutions of congratulation from his employes. Chairman Rogers made the presentation speech.

In responding, Mr. Fox told of the conditions surrounding the motion picture eighteen years ago, when he first entered the business as a showman.

At preliminary exercises in the morning a large American flag was unfurled atop the new building, the employes of the various departments of Fox Film Corporation who were in the service during the war taking part. The colors were raised to bugle call sounded by Bugler Billy Allen of the First New York Field Artillery.

Rear Admiral J. H. Gleason, in command of the Third Naval District, sent his regrets; he was in Washington for the meeting of the Selection Board. He was represented by his aide, Lieutenant Commander Elmer de Loss Langworthy. Other officers of the Navy present were: Captain O. P. Jackson, Captain P. Symington, Captain Norris, Captain Charles A. Adams, Commander W. S. Anderson, Lieutenant Commander Van de Leer, Lieutenant Norris, Lieutenant Westod and Lieutenant McClure.

General Robert Lee Bullard, of Governor's Island, Commanding the Department of the East, was represented by his Chief of Staff, Colonel William Weigel, U. S. A. Colonel Bootes and Lieutenant H. W. Miller of the Marine Corps also were present.

Exhibitor Factions Are Still at Odds; Still Plead for Union

Opposing Bodies Issue Statements; State Leagues Announce Their Plans

THE developments of the past week, centering around the forthcoming exhibitor conventions at Cleveland on June 8, 9, 10 and 11, consist, in the main, of the issuing of statements by exhibitors associated with the two principal rival factions. An analysis of the mass of statements that still pour in from individuals and organizations located in various sections of the country leads to the following brief resume of the situation: The Independent Motion-Picture Exhibitors of America, of which Frank Rembusch is chairman, have not modified their plans to meet at the Hotel Cleveland on the dates indicated above. The Motion-Picture Owners of America, of which Sydney S. Cohen is temporary chairman, have made no change in their program to meet on the same dates at the Hotel Winton. Both these factions, it would seem from their pronouncements during the past week, are still at odds.

Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, announces that his organization will convene with the other exhibitors at the Hotel Cleveland June 8 to 11, instead of meeting later in the month in Chicago as originally planned. A delegation of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, it is announced, will attend the Hotel Winton convention on the appointed dates. Various state exhibitors' associations have issued calls for the convening in the near future of the state bodies.

Out of the array of conflicting statements, sweeping in from all sides, two distinct pleas for the obliteration of all quarrels between the principal factions and the holding of a single united convention on June 8 to 11 are heard. One comes from William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York; the other call for the union of all rival forces is embodied in a telegram to Frank Rembusch from President Maurice Choynski and Sam Atkinson of the Allied Amusement Association.

The pertinent paragraphs of the communications received from the rival organizations and from individual exhibitors and local associations interested in the Cleveland "get-together" are submitted as follows:

What Cohen Forces Say

"The most interesting development in the preparation for the great national exhibitors' convention at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, June 8th to 11th, is the action taken by the Cleveland Convention Committee in asking the temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Sydney S. Cohen, to appoint a committee of exhibitors representing every film shipping zone to take charge of the arrangements for the convention and the matter of registration.

"The request to Chairman Cohen came about in this way: The Cleveland committee, consisting of Henry H. Lustig, chairman; W. J. Slimm, treasurer, and Samuel Bullock, secretary, was grieved to read that exception had been taken by the promoter of the second 'convention' to the committee's treatment of the subcommittee of the Chicago conference consisting of Mr. Kress of Ohio, Mr. Farley of Alabama and Mr. M. Van Praag of Kansas. It is a matter of history that these three gentlemen visited Cleveland and, in the language of the Cleveland arrangement committee, expressed absolute satisfaction with the arrangements in hand and plans outlined. Not only Mr. Van Praag but his associates on the subcommittee have duly and emphatically registered their appreciation of the courteous treatment they received at the hands of the Cleveland arrangement committee.

"In connection with this matter the Cleveland convention committee has issued a statement which completely covers the ground and which, no doubt, will be read with interest by the exhibitors who are interested in the coming convention at the Hotel Winton."

Here is the statement of the committee as submitted by Mr. Cohen:

"Cleveland regrets the necessity for issuing this statement inasmuch as we were proceeding with convention arrangements with only one thought in mind—harmony, as expressed in the trade papers, issue of May 22nd.

"Since then we regret to announce that we have been informed that Mr. F. J. Rembusch has engaged the Cleveland Hotel Assembly Hall and reserved a block of rooms 'for a convention of motion picture exhibitors.'

"This information is direct from the hotel management. Whatever Mr. Rembusch's object may be in thus ignoring our committee will be hard for Mr. Rembusch to explain, in view of his insistent demand for harmony and 'no politics' at the Patterson meeting in Chicago, as reported by Mr. Bullock.

"We sent a representative to that meeting, Mr. Sam Bullock, our executive secretary, with a message to deliver.

"We have evidence that he delivered that message on the floor on Tuesday, May 27th, by consent of Mr. Pattefson, to whom it was addressed. Part of that message follows:

"'May we be pardoned for inquiring if it is your intention to initiate a new national exhibitor organization or merely to get an expression of sentiment from the assembled exhibitors and prepare to crystallize that sentiment into action at a convention later? If that is your intention we are with you heart and soul. If, however, some over zealous exhibitors, smarting under present and prospective abuses, should prematurely undertake to start a national organization with such little preparation, there could be only one result—failure, . . . with producer influence in control. It has always been so in the past and our tentative national organization will have nothing to do with such a proposition.'

"Mr. Bullock gave further details and invited all present to come to Cleveland and help form a national theatre owner organization. A motion followed that an investigating committee be appointed on producers' attitude; said committee to report their findings to the Cleveland Convention June 8-9-10. The meeting adjourned without any further authority being conferred upon anyone.

"In commenting on the action of the Cleveland arrangements committee, Temporary Chairman Cohen said that he would gladly comply with their request for the appointment of a committee on arrangements and registration. The names and addresses, organizations and offices of the appointees are as follows:

Albany, George Roberts, president, Tri-City Exhibitors' League; Buffalo, Ira Mosher, president Buffalo Managers' Assn.; Philadelphia, A. C. Fisher, president, Philadelphia Exhibitors' League; Pittsburg, J. E. Smith, president, American Exhibitors' Assn. of Pennsylvania; Cleveland, Henry Lustig, president, Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Assn.; Cincinnati, Dr. Alexander, secretary, Miami Valley Exhibitors' League; St. Louis, Joseph Mogler, president, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis; Chicago, Joseph Hopp, president, Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance; Kansas City, M. Van Praag, secretary, Kansas State Exhibitors' Assn.; Oklahoma City, Ralph Talbot, president, Oklahoma Exhibitors' Assn.; Omaha, J. E. Kirk, secretary, Nebraska Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Assn.; Denver, M. C. Gerhardt, secretary, Colorado Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Assn.; South Dakota, C. W. Gates, vice-president, United Theatrical Protective League; Milwaukee, Paul Langheinrich, secretary, Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Wisconsin; Minneapolis, W. A. Steffes, president, United Theatrical Protective League; Detroit, J. C. Ritter, president, Michigan Exhibitors' Assn.; Seattle, Dr. H. S. Clemmer, Spokane, Wash.; Los Angeles, Glenn Harper, secretary, Theatre Owners' Assn. of Los Angeles; Dallas, E. T. Peter, president, Texas Exhibitor Circuit; Atlanta, W. C. Patterson, president, Southeastern Exhibitors' Assn.; Charlotte, N. C., H. B. Varner, secretary, North Carolina Exhibitors' Assn.; New Jersey, J. T. Collins, Rutherford, N. J.; New York, S. I. Berman, secretary, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, State of New York.

"The committee will convene at the Hotel Winton on June 7th for its first important business meeting.

"The temporary officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America desire to make it very plain to the entire industry, and particularly the producers and supply men, that they have no connection with or interest in an exposition which for some reason best known to the promoters of the enterprise has been advertised for the same days as the convention at the Hotel Winton. They say that the convention at the Hotel Winton will be a business convention pure and simple, and that if the exhibitors wish to do justice to only the most urgent problems now confronting them, they will have no time left and certainly no inclination to attend any so-called exposition.

"The following is the text of the report made to Chairman Rembusch of the Chicago Conference called by W. C. Patterson on April 26th, 1920, made by the subcommittee of three appointed on that occasion to go to Cleveland and investigate arrangements for the national convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at the Hotel Winton, June 8th, 9th and 10th:

"'That we heartily endorse and approve the arrangements that have been made for the convention called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the Hotel Winton, June 8th, 9th and 10th. H. W. KRESS, Chairman, Piqua, Ohio; H. C. FARLEY, Montgomery, Ala.; M. VAN PRAAG, Kansas City, Kan."

Patterson States Views

Rumors which have reached W. C. Patterson, manager of Sig Samuels' Criterion theatre at Atlanta, to the effect that the plan which he sought to consummate at his Chicago mass meeting for a concerted national opposition by independent exhibitors against producer operation of theatres had fallen of its own weight, and that the postponement of definite action until the assembly in Cleveland on June 8 was a bit of diplomatic strategy to cover failure, are ridiculed by him in an outline of the platform he will recommend as the basis on which independent theatre owners can be merged into a national organization.

"An official evidence of sincerity and regard for the opinions of exhibitor absentees," he declares, "manifest in the willingness of the theatre owners present in Chicago to accept the assurances of various league executives and promoters of the Cleveland meeting that the exhibitor representation there would be more adequate to the purpose, apparently have been perverted to serve ulterior motives from some quarter or other. We were asked, in Chicago, to form the convention into a permanent organization, with a Committee of Seventeen which would gather facts in New York, and reconvene the new national unit, with its committee report, in Cleveland, so that out of the various exhibitor alliances which will attend there can be formed a substantial country-wide organization to meet national issues which concern the welfare of independent exhibitors. It was further proposed in Chicago, both by the theatre owners who responded to my call for the meeting, and by representatives of the state leagues which will meet in Cleveland, that the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, with the membershp pledged at the Hotel Congress, would constitute an excellent beginning for a new national league.

"I do not know who sponsored the rumors, but, in comparison to facts, they are ridiculous. We are going into Cleveland as an organization, with our accomplishments in Chicago as proof of our determination to get somewhere as a national exhibitor council. We have no politics to play. There is no individual supporting the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America who has any personal ambitions to gratify. There is no one seeking fame, glory or power through executive preference. What I want to see come out of the Cleveland meeting and I am voicing the wish of the great majority of independent exhibitors who were in Chicago on April 26 and April 27,—is a working body of theatre owners solidly pledged to combat, through co-operation and collective action, the producer-exhibitor menace as the greatest danger confronting us as exhibitors, and prepared, in every way, to function quickly and efficiently on all other national conditions affecting its members.

"I shall bend my every energy in Cleveland to keeping any semblance of politics or personal ambition from any source out of the sessions, and I will work as an individual exhibitor, without office or desire for office, but as one of the rank and file of independents who want a national source through which to operate in defense of our respective theatre interests."

A. S. Black to Join Forces

"To the exhibitors of the United States: After careful consideration we believe that the best interests of the exhibitors of the United States in view of the recent Chicago meeting and the subsequent happenings, demand that exhibitors from all over the country meet in Cleveland. Disregarding the personal interests of any one set of men it is better to have a threshing out of many problems at one city and at one time than with divided attendance at different places. The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America stands for a fair deal to each and every exhibitor of the United States. We are therefore calling our convention to meet at the Cleveland Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio, on June 8, 9 and 10.

"ALFRED BLACK."

Forty From Illinois

President Joseph Hopp, of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, will head a delegation of forty theatre owners, who will attend the Cleveland convention called by Sidney S. Cohn of New York. Their headquarters in Cleveland will be at the Hotel Winton.

A marked revival of interest in the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance was shown at the annual meeting of the association held on May 13. Mr. Hopp was selected president, John Frundt, vice-president; William E. Burford, financial secretary; Fred W. Hartmann, recording and corresponding secretary, and Henry Van Meeteran, treasurer. The members of the executive committee represent thirty-seven theatres.

Brandt Suggests Plan

The following letter has been sent to Sig Samuels, of the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., secretary of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors, and Sam Bullock, Cleveland, Ohio, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, by William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York:

"Dear Sir:—

"In view of the fact that the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' of America are about to hold two separate and distinct conventions in Cleveland at the same time; both conventions being called for the same purpose; and in view of the fact that the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America represented by a committee of seventeen, appointed at Chicago, are to hold a preliminary meeting in New York on June 3 and 4, may I suggest that in the best interests of harmony and so that the Cleveland convention can get down to real business by eliminating politics and petty quarrels; that a committee of an equal number representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America meet the former committee on June 3 and 4 to arrange to hold a joint convention in Cleveland instead of two separate and independent conventions."

Another Plea for Unity

President Maurice Choynski and Sam Atkinson, of the Allied Amusement Association, who are to head a delegation of one hundred Chicago exhibitors to Cleveland, are prepared to fight for unity and one convention. They have sent the following wire to Frank Rembausch:

"Am strongly opposed to two conventions—in Cleveland. Let us fall in line and thresh out our differences, if any, on the floor. This was our understanding in Chicago, and that we attend the Cleveland convention. We never arranged to hold separate one and will not be a party to any division."

Jersey "Exhibs" to Meet

The motion picture exhibitors of New Jersey are summoned by their temporary chairman, John T. Collins, to attend an exhibitor convention to be held in Newark, N. J., on June 2. The object will be "the perfection of an organization which will be representative of the great interest of the motion picture theatre owners of New Jersey." The exhibitors are also urged to attend to combat the producer-exhibitor evil.

Exhibitor Interest Thoroughly Aroused

By J. D. Williams

ON to Cleveland!

It is in every issue of the trade journals. Exhibitors met on a recent Southern trip were saying it. Producers and distributors are echoing it. Visiting theatre owners, in New York from many territories, talk enthusiastically about the next big chance to mould a national league of exhibitors, representative of every section, free from petty politics, nation-broad in scope and determined in its course of defence for individual interests.

Similar attempts in the past make it a big order to fill, and a great undertaking for the exhibitors whose unusual initiative and business acumen give it an impelling force. It is a purpose beset with dangers and difficulties, surrounded by countless pitfalls, but with possibilities of such magnitude if it succeeds that it is worthy of every ounce of support, encouragement and counsel that can come to it from any quarter.

It is doubtful if any group of independent exhibitors, or any individual theatre owners, passively or intensively interested in the outcome of Cleveland, realize so keenly what tests of mutual confidence, of personal integrity, of individual loyalty and steadfast resistance to insidious, destructive influences, are certain to follow and attack the ambitions of the national league to be solidified at Cleveland as the exhibitors who, three years ago, joined hands in a national cooperative and defensive structure which was, and is, fundamentally identical to the composite unit soon to be created. Their theatre interests were threatened then with dangers equally as great as the independent exhibitor menaces upon which the Cleveland assembly will unite and act. So they got together and organized First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the formation of which was for a purpose similar in many respects to that which exists to-day.

First, the exhibitors who formed First National merged their respective desires for relief from oppressive conditions, began with a definite, well established plan. They confined themselves to the big, important phases of the menacing conditions they confronted, and they applied themselves strictly to determining the best and quickest means for eliminating them.

When it became known that a number of exhibitors had formed a cooperative organization the majority opinion throughout the industry was one of scoffing and ridicule. Professional tale bearers lost no opportunity to relate, every time they encountered a member alone, stories of alleged questionable methods and ulterior motives harbored by one or more of the other members.

Similar experiences will befall the exhibitors selected to administer the affairs of a national league. The solution, for the future, as in the past, is the same. Pay no attention whatever to gossip, rumor or vague insinuations affecting the loyalty, integrity and sincerity of any league official. Stick together and resent such tactics as vehemently as you would attack them if they affected an intimate personal friend.

Care, discretion and mature consideration should precede the selection of executives for a national league. To them is entrusted the problem of leadership, direction and progress. Once a majority vote has delegated authority of this kind, the only practical and safe policy is for every member to cast his allegiance one hundred per cent to the elected officials, without regard to previous inclinations.

Even with this unanimous aid which First National possesses, the path of that national exhibitor body, as will prove to be the case with a national league, has been neither smooth nor rosy. It is both natural and wise to assume, in the instance of a national exhibitor league, as in other cases, that some one of these myriad links in the national chain may prove vulnerable, and that destructive forces harboring ulterior motives may break through and strive to create dissension. Then comes the real test of cooperative strength. If the majority membership remains steadfast, these occasional attacks will become helpful, welding the organization into a more compact and determined unit.

A national exhibitor organization, no matter what its objectives may be, so long as it is a cooperative body, formed for mutual aid, protection and defense, must have the undivided loyalty and unswerving allegiance of its entire membership, and differences in personal opinion and viewpoint on questions before it never should affect this support.

On to Cleveland but with individual exhibitor determination to hurdle all petty differences, to allow nothing to halt action on the big, basic dangers which can be overcome only through organization, to grant office to the most capable, and then to be loyal to them as the choice of the majority thus, every independent exhibitor will create, for himself and for his fellows, an asset beyond value.

Associated Will Meet in Cleveland

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., will be represented in Cleveland during convention week by an almost 100 per cent representation of its exhibitor-members—a group of independent theatre men in which is mirrored the spirit of the Independent Exhibitors of America.

That Associated intends to fight tooth and nail with and for independent exhibitors who are battling against the forces who they claim seek to devour the theatre man is indicated in the fact that Associated will hold not only a meeting of the Board of Directors, but also will have convened other members and officers from almost every point in the United States.

Virtually every franchise holder in Associated already has given assurance of attendance and all, also, individually and collectively, have pledged themselves to the platform of a fight to a finish against the producer-exhibitor. Some of those who intend to be on hand are Harry Crandall, Dennis Harris, Samuel Harding, Harold B. Franklin, H. H. Wellenbrink, Hugo Lambach, Harry M. Lubliner, James Q. Clemmer, I. Libson and many others.

Advices received in New York from F. C. Quimby, general manager of Associated, who recently arrived in Los Angeles from New York, and who expects also to attend the convention, are to the effect that never before in the history of the industry have exhibitors been so aroused over the situation as they are at present. Mr. Quimby had the opportunity of feeling out the sentiment of showmen in many cities and, according to his analysis, showmen big and small have come to a full realization of what they are up against.

Independent exhibitors seem to realize fully that definite constructive action must be taken at once, Mr. Quimby advises, adding that from what he had been able to learn it seemed as if every exhibitor who possibly could make the trip to Cleveland would be on hand during the convention.

The attitude of independent exhibitors varies slightly in territories where there are purely local conditions to be considered, Mr. Quimby said, but on the vital and important issues they are standing solidly together.

The majority of the independents are said to believe that the convention may result in the formation of two national bodies one organization composed of exhibitors who are not purely independent, and which will take up questions concerning all exhibitors, regardless of any producer-affiliations; the other association composed entirely of independents, its single purpose being to combat the efforts of producers to gobble theatres.

The latter will be the stronger organization, it is believed. This is indicated by the earnestness of spirit and the zeal of those actively engaged in missionary work. The depth of spirit reflected at the Chicago meeting in April is only a slight sign of the intensity of feeling which since has been aroused, it appears, and the cry throughout the ranks of the independents today is "On to Cleveland!"

Denver Club Planning Big Movie Exposition

Denver's Annual Moving Picture Exposition, Convention and Grand Ball, which had been set for June 18 and 19, has been postponed two weeks more for preparation and will be held on Thursday and Friday, July 1 and 2, under the auspices of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club.

Never before in the history of Denver was such a big, joyous time planned for the moving picture industry and its "fans." Big movie stars are said to be coming to Denver for this occasion and the distributing companies in New York are lending their assistance to the branch managers in every way possible.

All the exchanges, supply houses and producing companies will have special exhibits and one of the most interesting exhibits will be a regular studio-set complete, where scenes will be taken. There will be a model theatre, equipped up to the minute and showing pictures with the best equipment. Every article used in and around a motion picture theatre will be on exhibition.

The Governor of Colorado, the Mayor of Denver and the big City and State officials are co-operating with the Rocky Mountain Screen Club to make this event a gala occasion for Denver.

Famous Players' Experts Start for Bombay

Carrying plans for the erection of a studio and the establishment of an exchange system throughout the Far East, Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Tarkington Baker, sailed Tuesday on the City of Lahore for Bombay as the first step in the plans which Adolph Zukor has made for the production of Paramount Pictures in India.

The departure of Mr. Meyer and Mr. Baker follows the announcement recently made by Mr. Zukor of the formation of the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., a $3,000,000 corporation organized by the American company acting in conjunction with prominent London and Indian bankers.

As soon as they arrive in Bombay, Mr. Meyer and Mr. Baker will begin at once the erection of a large studio equipped with all the most up-to-date appliances. American methods will be employed throughout.

Hampton Del Ruth

Del Ruth Edits Picture en Route to New York

Having just finished the production of his long-heralded farce Hampton Del Ruth, supervisor of Fox Sunshine Comedies, reached New York from Los Angeles in time for the Fox Convention. The feature was shown to Fox managers and executives at a special performance in the Academy of Music.

Mr. Del Ruth arranged for two drawing rooms on the train, fully equipping them with re-winding and splicing machines to enable him with his assistants and cutters to put the finishing touches on the big special so that it could be shown in completed perfection.

Lederman of Universal Resigns His Post

After having been connected with the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. for ten years, D. B. Lederman, assistant to Mr. Laemmle, has resigned. Mr. Lederman has become connected with a prominent film organization and will take up his new duties in the very near future. In point of service, Mr. Lederman was the oldest Universal employee at the time of his resignation.

Rothapfel in Charge of Capitol Presentations

Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, announces the appointment of S. L. Rothapfel, who will assume charge of the future presentations at the Capitol.

With the advent of Mr. Rothapfel Managing Director Bowes announces the inauguration of a summer policy. The theatre will be closed after next Tuesday's performance and will not reopen until Friday night following, when the type of program that Mr. Rothapfel devised for motion picture presentation will be ushered in. During the two days of intermission there will be extensive physical embellishment of the interior of the theatre, with particular reference to the stage, and rehearsals for the inaugural program will be actively carried on.

There will also be a radical reduction in prices with the opening of the Capitol theatre, Friday, June 4th, under the summer policy. The top price will be $1 for the choicest seats, with the scale down to 40 cents. Matinee prices will be on an even more popular scale—30 and 40 cents.

The Capitol theatre was opened on October 24th, 1919, an opening which created a stir in amusement circles. Every newspaper in the United States commented on the size and splendor of this institution, which has been continuously successful since its inception. The recent innovation of operatic performance in conjunction with motion pictures has also been the theme for much comment.

Legal Suit May Follow Alleged Deceptive Ads

What is alleged to be a case of deceptive advertising in the Los Angeles press may result in a legal suit, according to a report of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Display advertisements of the Alhambra theatre, is the report, announced "Gloria Swanson, Cecil B. DeMille's famous star, in 'You Can't Believe Everything.'"

Mr. DeMille claims that the theatre obtained an old release featuring Gloria Swanson and advertised her as a DeMille star. The producer ran signed advertisements stating these facts in the Los Angeles press and has threatened legal action against the theatre.

Winfield Sheehan Returns from Abroad

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, has returned from his European trip and is back at his desk in the new William Fox Building on West 55th street. He arrived last week on the White Star liner "Adriatic," which brought many persons prominent in the theatrical world.

As a result of his trip, which covered branch offices of Fox Film Corporation in England, France, Germany, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Italy and Belgium and also brought him in close touch with Spain and Algiers, Mr. Sheehan brought back with him most enthusiastic reports of Fox status abroad. During his visits to the countries named, he made a systematic study of conditions surrounding the motion picture trade generally, and the outlook in particular of Fox films for the forthcoming season.

During Mr. Sheehan's stay in London the new offices of Fox Film Corporation, at 13 Berners street, were officially opened with ceremonies at which Justin Huntly McCarthy, author of the world famous story, "If I Were King," presided. Many notables were present at a luncheon in the directors' room of the Fox Building—which, by the way, served during the war as headquarters of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in London.

General Manager Sheehan opened in England and France new plants for the production of Fox film in those countries. These two branch plants will enable the European offices of this firm to supply prints on a far bigger scale than hitherto. Also they will supply for America Fox films made in France with French companies.

Fox Film Corporation now maintains a branch office in almost every leading city in the world, with distributing facilities ample to meet any pressure for years to come.

No announcement is yet forthcoming from the Fox office of next season's plans, or the names of new stars or plays which may have arrived with General Manager Sheehan. It is expected, however, that such an announcement will soon be issued.

Federated Exchanges Meet to Form Permanent Plans

Room 432 at the Hotel Astor was a busy place this week with the meeting of members of the Federated Film Exchanges of America to form a permanent organization and decide on definite production plans. The sessions were still on as THE NEWS went to press and no statement will be issued until later in the week.

Among those present at the gathering are:

J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players, Chicago; D. Chatkin, Marion Kohn, San Francisco; J. J. Allen, Toronto; Mr. Kyler, Supreme Photoplays, Denver; Sam Werner, United Film Service, St. Louis; Al Kahn, Crescent Film Co., Kansas City; Ralph Wettstein, Midwest Distributing Co., Milwaukee; F. W. Thayer, Merit Film Corporation, Minneapolis; J. E. Pearce, Pearce Films, New Orleans; H. Charnas, Standard Film Service Co., Cleveland; Harry Lande, Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh; Sam Grand, Federal Feature Film Corp., Boston; Ben Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; A. G. Whyte, Empire State Film Corp., New York, and Fitzpatrick and McElroy of Chicago.

Edward J. Shalvey Dies Suddenly in New York

Edward D. Shalvey, president of the V. B. K. Film Corporation, producers of Paramount-Drew Comedies, died suddenly on May 19th in New York City. In addition to his executive position with the V. B. K. Corporation, Mr. Shalvey was treasurer of the AyVeeBee Corporation, producers of the Ernest Truex two-reel comedies; secretary of The Notlek Amusement Company, and secretary of the Van-Kelton Amusement Corporation.

New York Governor Signs Deposit Bill

A WIRE recently received at the offices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York states that Governor Smith has signed the Cotillo bill and the Kelly bill, both of which passed the legislature during the last session.

The Cotillo bill provides that all producing companies exacting deposits or so-called advance payments from exhibitors must hereafter segregate the deposit money or else keep it in separate accounts bearing interest, which must be paid to the exhibitor. The second bill allows children to attend the theatre provided a matron is in attendance.

Lou Baum Will Manage Northwest Division

Lou Baum, manager of the Universal branch exchange in Cincinnati, has been appointed division manager of Chicago and the entire northwest division for Universal, it is announced by H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the film company. This is the most important change in the sales force for Universal in many months.

Baum's new territory is the most important film sales section in the United States, and includes the combined territories of the following Universal branch exchanges: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, St. Louis and Omaha. His headquarters will be Chicago.

Baum's promotion, says Berman, is a result of his efficient management of the Cincinnati exchange, where he has been in charge for the last eighteen months. In that brief time he built up the exchange from a money-losing proposition to a highly profitable subsidiary.

Baum made an enviable record as a film salesman before Universal placed him in a managerial position. Prior to working as a salesman for Universal, he sold films for Fox, Selznick and other film concerns.

Theatre License Fees Are Raised in Canada

The moving picture interests of Ontario were advised officially on May 20 of the passing of an Order-in Council providing for the raising of the annual theatre license fees and the doubling of the annual fees of moving picture exchanges. The order also provides for a fee for the censorship of moving pictures that is exactly double the rate in effect last year. According to the announcement of Hon. Peter Smith, the new Provincial Treasurer, the new scale is scheduled to come into effect with the opening of the fiscal year in June.

The theatre license fee changes are, briefly, as follows: for theatres in cities of 10,000 or more, the new tax is to be 35 cents per seat per year in place of 25 cents. In towns having a population of from 5,000 to 10,000, the theatre license now costs 25 cents in place of 20 cents. Municipalities of between 3,000 and 5,000, the fee is 20 cents in place of the flat rate of $75 per annum for the theatre. Theatres in municipalities of between 1,500 and 3,000 will be charged 15 cents per seat instead of the old rate of $50 for the whole theatre. Theatres located in municipalities having less than 1,500 people will pay 10 cents per seat per year.

Tax on exchanges has also been largely increased while operators must pay a fee of $15 to take their examinations.

Drew Post Ceremonies in New York City

Over three hundred members of the S. Rankin Drew Post, No. 340, American Legion, composed of men in the theatre and motion picture field, met in Central Park, New York, recently, for the official reception of the Post Colors. Immediately following the presentation, the Post members planted a tree in the Mall in memory of S. Rankin Drew, the young actor son of the late Sydney Drew.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

K. Hoddy Milligan is visiting Pittsburgh and a number of eastern cities in the interest of the Capital Film Company. Mr. Milligan has extensive motion picture interests and he is part owner of Milligan Studios, formerly Kalem, New York, and is president of the Creation Film Company.

The New President theatre, formerly the President, on East 55th street, has been opened by Brunhild and Young Theatrical Enterprises, its new owners. "Even As Eve" was the feature booked for the first performance. The house has been remodeled and redecorated throughout and will put on high class programs with adequate musical setting. Julius Lamm is manager of the new house.

Jack Graumont, manager of Metro's Chicago office, left for New York last Monday to attend the Metro Convention in New York City and expects to be gone a week.

Ellman & Salkin have leased the Julian theatre on Belmont avenue from J. G. Conderman for a period of ten years. According to Mr. Ellman it is their intention to reconstruct the front of the house and make extensive improvements to the interior including handsome decorations. Upon completion of the work they will install a first class orchestra and conduct the house as a high-class moving picture theatre.

Greater Stars have arranged with A. Teitel to have the film of "The Soul of Rafael" conserved so that it will be in first-class condition when run at the Auditorium in conjunction with Grand Opera, as Greater Stars realize that every part of the program must be perfect in every detail if Maestro Dippel's experiment in combining the best in music and pictures is to prove a success.

The conservation of "Confession," the feature handled in this territory by Harry Weiss, also has been completed by Teitel and aided in making its projection at the Playhouse the big success which it has proved.

"The Love Expert," Constance Talmadge's new picture, has proven such success at the Randolph that Jones, Linick & Schaefer have continued the engagement for another week. Chicago newspaper critics have been a unit in praising the comedy and declaring it the best picture in which Miss Talmadge has been starred.

Watterson R. Rothacker is spending a fortnight in New York and will return to Chicago in time to pass a week or so at his headquarters here before leaving for Europe early in July.

Douglas D. Rothacker, manager of the industrial division, is at the St. Louis branch of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company for a week and George Gibson, superintendent of the Chicago factory, has returned to Chicago from a visit at the Eastern Kodak Plant in Rochester and the Norma and Constance Talmadge Studios in New York.

Louis Laemmle of Universal's Chicago office, has completed arrangements for accompanying his brother, Carl Laemmle, to Europe. They will sail from New York on the steamship Olympic July 8th and expect to remain abroad till September. Louis Laemmle will be accompanied by his wife and his two children, Richard, eight years old, and Eleanor, five years, and his family may remain in Europe until Spring. Business and pleasure are the combined objects of the trip and it is understood that Carl Laemmle will visit the exchanges of Universal in Europe while overseas. Louis Laemmle already has asked Motion Picture News representative to be sure and see that Motion Picture News is sent to him in Europe during July, August and September, as he doesn't want to be without the paper which gives him all the news of the motion picture field while away.

Harry Weiss of Superior Screen Service reports that "Confession" is being booked heavily throughout Illinois and Indiana, among the important bookings being that of Dubliner & Trinz, who will show the "Confession" at all theatres in their circuit, and Schoenstadt's circuit which will also show the picture at every one of their houses.

It is rumored that Gumbiner Brothers have taken over the Rex theatre, which has been under the management of Adolph Powell for some time past.

Manager Harry Weiss of Superior Screen Service has closed for Illinois rights on "Mother I Need You," featuring Enid Markey, Edward Coxen and an all star cast, and also has purchased the Illinois and Indiana rights on the Wistaria production, "Neglected Wives." Other pictures handled by the Superior Screen Service include "The Confession," with Henry B. Walthall, "The Greater Sinner," with James K. Hackett, Ormi Hawley and Irving Cummings, "The Sport of Kings," and "Witches Gold" featuring Davide. It is Mr. Weiss' intention to supply exhibitors with twenty-six big productions per year.

Mrs. A. Lowey, who for some time has been booking for the Lowey and Schindler theatre on Milwaukee Avenue, has also taken over the booking for Bill's Model theatre at 69th and Halstead Streets.

Manager Aschmann of Pathe's Chicago Exchange reports keen competition among exhibitors to book the second series of Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, although the release date does not come until July 11th. An exclusive Chicago loop first-run contract has been closed with the Rose theatre on Madison Street, and bookings made in practically all the key cities of the territory.

M. A. Dodge stopped over in Chicago for a conference with the officials of the Capital Film Company last week and then proceeded to New York on business connected with his productions. Mr. Dodge has been in California for some time selecting locations and preparing to start work on the next of his feature pictures which will star Davide, the heroine of "Witches Gold," the oil picture which is causing much favorable comment.

John Cumberland, who is playing in Chicago on the legitimate stage, had his first view of "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," the third of the Drew comedies in which he starred, at the Pathe projection rooms in the Consumers building this week. Mr. Cumberland expressed himself as highly pleased with the photography and direction of the picture as shown in the completed reels.

Harry Gramp, well known Rockford exhibitor, is expanding his activities and it is reported is about to close the deal for a picture theatre in Muscatine.

Richard Kippling will make his headquarters in Chicago for the next three or four weeks before returning to California to resume his production work. He has considerable business to transact in Chicago, but hopes to find time to get a trip to northern Wisconsin and enjoy some fishing before heading for Los Angeles.

R. C. MacMullan, manager of the Kenwood theatre, Ascher Brothers' de luxe house in the fashionable South Shore district, roped off a block of two hundred seats Saturday afternoon for a theatre party of girls from two or three fashionable boarding schools in that neighborhood and their chaperons. The young ladies attended the matinee especially to see "The Flapper," featuring Olive Thomas. The principals of the schools which the young ladies attend are most particular as to the pictures the girls witness and the balance of the program was also chosen with care. It included a Carter de Haven comedy, first-run Heart's News reel and a Ford Educational.

Sid Goldman, well known exchangeman, has been appointed manager of the Associated Producers Chicago office and will take up his new duties upon his return from the Dells of Wisconsin, where he is enjoying a short vacation.

Lewis J. Guhl, formerly with Goldwyn, has joined the sales staff of Metro's Chicago office and will have headquarters in Milwaukee.

Max Goldberg, owner of the Harper Theatre Building, at 53rd and Harper Avenue, has purchased the adjoining sixty feet north of the Harper theatre site, from Robert W. Hall, and plans already are under way for rebuilding and enlarging the Harper theatre. When reconstruction is completed, the Harper theatre will have a capacity of 4,000 seats. According to George M. Goldberg, general manager of the theatre, the policy which will be inaugurated with the reopening of the house, will be to give the highest class of motion pictures, music by a fifty-piece orchestra and stage specialties. Architect George Rapp is supervising the plans for and reconstruction of the theatre.

"The Waterplug," featuring William Franey, the Reelcraft Picture Corporation comedy star, in its pre release showing at Barbee's New Loop theatre in Chicago, has proven one of the strongest and most satisfying drawing cards shown since the opening of this popular De Luxe house. The big success of this picture is regarded as convincing proof that clean, snappy, one-reel comedies please the most fashionable and fastidious audiences and are a source of strength on any program.

Impresario Andreas Dippel's pet enterprise of offering grand opera in miniature, combined with the best in moving pictures, got away with a bang at Chicago's huge Auditorium this week and there was no question that the audience liked the combination. The program started with "Gypsy Love," the melodious Lehar Operetta, in which Arthur Albro was featured, and Finita de Soria took the leading woman's role, and closed with Clara Kimball Young's feature pictlre, "For the Soul of Rafael."

Mr. Dippel is putting on shows every night, with Wednesday and Saturday matinees, at prices from fifty cents to a dollar, and judging from the crowds which practically filled the monster house, the four weeks' experimental run should prove a success.

Should the idea take hold of the public, Mr. Dippel will erect a five-million dollar theatre to house this style of entertainment in Chicago.

Book Entire Serial to Be Shown During One Week

Warner Brothers announce the receipt of a letter from the Celebrated Film Corporation, Chicago, which states that the Victory theatre at Kokomo, Ind., and the Starland theatre at Anderson, Ind., have booked the entire fifteen episodes of "The Lost City" serial, to be run in the course of a single week. The Victory has engaged the serial for the week of June 5 to the 12th; the Starland from June 26th to July 2d. They will use five episodes the first three days, five parts the following two days and the remaining episodes the first three days, five parts the following two days and the remaining episodes the last two days, it is stated.

Von Stroheim Engaged to Valerie Germonprez

The engagement of Erich Von Stroheim and Miss Valerie Germonprez was announced at a luncheon given at the Elks Club, Chicago, in honor of Universal's widely known director and portrayer of villain's parts, last week. William L. Senik, exalted ruler of the Chicago Elks, announced the engagement and presented a large bouquet of American beauty roses to the bride-to-be, who sat at Mr. Stroheim's right at the luncheon.

Miss Germonprez has appeared in several pictures, among them being "Heart of Humanity" and "Blind Husbands."

Educational Executive Sails for England

E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, sailed recently for England where he will spend a month arranging some plans which promise to accelerate the already rapid growth of the company. Mr. Hammons will confer with officials of the Hudson's Bay Company who are financially associated with Educational and inspect the offices of the Ideal Film Renting Company, Ltd., in which Educational is interested. This company operates twelve fully equipped exchanges in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, it ranking among the very largest British distributing organizations.

Hugh Hoffman Off for Coast with Eddie Polo

The Twentieth Century leaving New York on Wednesday afternoon carried a party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Polo and Hugh Hoffman on their way to begin production work on the next Universal serial, starring the dare-devil Polo.

Hugh Hoffman, formerly well known in the trade paper end of the business and recently active in advertising work in the East, is returning West to take up scenario work on the new serial with Eddie Polo. The subject will concern circus life, as was the case with the preceding Polo serial on which Hoffman also aided.

Chicago Exchange Building to be Started Soon

A $50,000 bond guaranteeing that the construction of the proposed film exchange building at Clark and Kenzie streets, Chicago, shall be started by June 13 has been filed with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Hallmark, Metro, Universal, Select, Superior Screen Service, Masterpiece and Celebrated Players have signed leases, and nineteen more exchanges, including George Kleine, Fox, Goldwyn, Robertson-Cole and Vitagraph, have signified their intention of taking space, according to E. G. Welsh, who is negotiating the deal. The building will cost $1,500,000 and will be complete by May, 1921.

Sam Atkinson and T. H. Butler, to whom credit is due for finally getting matters straightened out, are now hopeful that the City Council will allow the exchanges to remain in their present quarters until the new building is finished by extending the time of enforcement of the drastic fire ordinance.

Standardized Containers at Cleveland Exhibits

Specifications are being prepared for a standard container in which to ship motion picture films. This announcement was made by W. S. Topping, of the Bureau of Explosives, Interstate Commerce Commission, at a meeting of the executive board of the transportation committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Several cases made under the new specifications will be ready for exhibition at the annual meeting of the National Association in Cleveland, June 8.

For the emergency transportation of films it was decided to have prepared a box which will meet the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroad authorities and which can be checked as baggage.

Screen Aids Wage Fight of Postal Employees

The screen has come to the aid of the postal employees in their fight for higher wages. In connection with the campaign for this purpose, the International Film Service Co. announces that some remarkable motion-pictures have just been made showing the progress of the letter or parcel post package from the time it leaves the hands of the sender until it is delivered to the addressee. The pictures appear in the International News No. 28, which is released through Universal.

Franklyn Farnum's Western Reel in Big Sale

Mr. F. W. Thayer of the Merit Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn., has secured from the Canyon Pictures Corporation the rights for Minnesota, North and South Dakota for the two-reel western pictures, featuring Franklyn Farnum.

Griffith Buys Back Film from First National

D. W. Griffith has purchased from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit his production of "The Gamest Girl," scheduled to have been the third Griffith First National release, and formerly called "Black Beach." The price involved is said to be $400,000.

Under the contract by which Mr. Griffith was to make three productions for First National, "The Gamest Girl," as well as the two preceding pictures, "The Greatest Question" and "The Idol Dancer," were bought from Mr. Griffith before any of the pictures had been started.

When overtures were first made to purchase the film, First National is said to have rejected all offers, until Mr. Griffith told of his plans to take more scenes and enlarge the film to a super feature, an elaboration that will require several months.

According to announcement from the Griffith offices in the Longacre Building, "The Gamest Girl" will be shown at a prominent New York theatre in September, and will be presented with the usual Griffith care and atmospheric surroundings, with special music and other features.

The Griffith production of "'Way Down East" also will be presented about the same time, and there is talk of another Griffith repertory season in New York, with a number of surprises in store.

Pantages Circuit to Run Features with Shows

The Pantages Circuit of theatres, numbering more than thirty in the principal cities west of Chicago, is to adopt a new policy shortly of showing a feature film production in connection with the usual vaudeville program. The first theatres to try the new plan are those at Spokane and Tacoma. In two weeks this policy will be inaugurated at the Salt Lake theatre, and a little later at San Francisco. The new Pantages theatre at Los Angeles, which will be opened to the public on June 14, will adopt this policy, and the opening bill will consist of the Vitagraph special production made under the direction of David Smith, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone."

Post Office Urges Care in Addressing Films

The results of an investigation instituted by the Post Office to ascertain the cause of delays of insured and C. O. D. parcels containing films indicate that confusion is frequently caused by the use of containers from which address labels covering previous shipments have not been removed or upon which these old addresses have not been completely covered.

The postal officials urge that the greatest care be taken that the name and address of both sender and addressee are clearly written and all former labels be completely covered or obliterated.

This is Going to Be the Biggest Convention and Exposition Ever Held in the History of the Industry

An Acquisition

To the Staff of Motion Picture News and the Service of Exhibitors

¶ MOTION PICTURE NEWS announces the engagement of Charles D. Isaacson as its Music Editor. He will conduct a weekly department, which will be supplemented by the continuance of Mr. Winkler's music cue sheets.

Mr. Isaacson has been termed "the democrat of aristocratic music." A musician, and a member of a famous musical family, for many years he has been pioneering his way in the development of a larger interest in good music. While his main aim has been the creation of a larger music public, which would raise American art and art-appreciation, the importance of his work to the readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS must be considered primarily from a business point of view.

Mr. Isaacson, during the course of his propaganda, has, more successfully than any other man, sounded the appeal which has aroused the crowds to come to concerts and opera and all other musical enterprises. It is not an exaggeration to say that a large part of the present frenzy for symphonic concerts and operatic performances, must be credited to this man.

¶ In New York City he has been conducting the famous Globe Concerts. Although run under the auspices of the New York Globe, they are famous around the world. These Globe Concerts, now numbering 1050, have brought over 2,000,000 people, who never before heard or paid any attention to good music, to attend and grow intensely enthusiastic over the highest classical musical offerings.

These are the people who have responded to the musical programs of the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto and Strand Theatres—who made not only possible, but highly successful the season of opera comique of the Society of American Singers; who have forced the extension of the New York musical season three months longer this present year; who made it necessary to have another opera house, etc.

The Globe Concerts are the biggest factor in American musical development. When the 1000th concert was given recently at the Metropolitan Opera House, 100,000 persons demanded admission. On that night, the veteran music propagandist, John C. Freund, Editor of Musical America, said, in presenting a cup to Mr. Isaacson, that his work was unprecedented in the history of the world. Otto H. Kahn, America's leading musical patron, said that Isaacson's work was more significant than the opera house.

¶ Now the NEWS feels that it wants the best man in the country to tell its readers how to utilize the vastly growing musical interest; and Isaacson is the man to do it. He is an interesting writer, his contributions are highly paid for by such publications as Collier's, Hearst's, Pictorial Review, Theatre, Physical Culture, etc., etc. Thus his name is known in practically every community.

Under the scheme which will be evolved during the course of his contributing, it will be made possible for the individual exhibitor to capitalize Mr. Isaacson's local reputation.

We have read several of the opening articles in the series and can promise not only interesting reading, but mighty profitable advice. Before the series is far advanced, the reader will understand the philosophy and practice of musico-theatricals, and will realize why it is that music is becoming such an important factor in motion-picturedom.

Charles D. Isaacson is not unknown as a motion picture man. He was engaged by Goldwyn to develop its promotion, but resigned a lucrative job to devote himself entirely to his literary and musical propaganda. He is author of several motion pictures, the first "A Good Woman," directed by Frank Reicher; the second, "Democracy," in collaboration with Dr. Frank Crane, and the third on "Spiritualism." He is the author of "Face to Face with Great Musicians," a book now in its fifth edition, and on the list recommended by Boards of Education; the author of a novel, "The Music of David Minden," and countless short stories on musical subjects. He is the creator of the scientific use of music in hospitals, and is a visiting authority at Central Islip State Asylum; Sing Sing Prison; and is Honorary Member of the faculty of De Witt Clinton High School and several public schools. He is the inventor of the Story Music Roll, which in full page advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post, was recently indicated as being the most important development of the player piano music roll; as great in its improvement over the old style player piano roll as the new phonograph record is over the old.

Stauffer's Fashion Review Scores Great Success

Silver Horde Exploitation in New York Brings Great Results

Recent Campaign Proves Even Metropolis Not Too Large to Be Stirred

"THE SILVER HORDE" exploitation campaign, conducted in connection with the showing of the Rex Beach drama at the Capitol theatre, the week of May 9th, and followed up for two additional weeks when the picture was transferred to the Broadway theatre, is another indication of what may be done in the way of publicizing a picture in New York. Such campaigns are proof positive that thorough exploitation is feasible in the largest cities, as well as small towns, and that it is not necessary to spend a small fortune in order to make an impression.

One of the best of the stunts pulled was a tie-up with the United Cigar Stores, whereby 2,000 window stickers (11x22) were placed both inside and outside of every United Cigar store in the city. The stickers carried a large portrait of Rex Beach, author of "The Silver Horde," who expressed satisfaction with the Ricoro cigar. The advertising of these stickers, displayed the latter part of the week preceding the showing, might be estimated in thousands of dollars.

Another worth-while feature of the campaign put through at a nominal cost, was the placing of "Silver Horde" stickers on taxicabs, starting May 1st. A week later a count was taken over a space of two miles on Broadway and Fifth avenue and the estimate showed that one out of every six carried the announcement of the showing of "The Silver Horde" at the Capitol.

In the matter of window displays it is doubtful if any production presented in New York has done as well. An illuminated mechanical device, showing animated reproductions of fish caught in a net, was placed in stores, not only in Greater New York, but in outlying towns, such as Mount Vernon and New Rochelle.

A special window display that attracted thousands of people was placed in A. C. Weaver's store on 66th street, just off Broadway. From 3 to 5 o'clock every afternoon and from 7 to 8 in the evening an artist painted pictures in the window in full view of the throngs passing on the busy thoroughfare. His portraits were of Rex Beach, and Myrtle Stedman and Betty Blythe, the two actresses featured in "The Silver Horde." On Saturday night the crowd collected in front of the store was so great that the window was almost pushed in.

For advance publicity, starting about ten days before the opening, some 50,000 circulars announcing the engagement at the Capitol were distributed. These circulars, prepared in the manner of booklets giving a brief, vivid and dramatic account of Rex Beach's career, were also inserted in the Capitol theatre programs and passed out to all those entering the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand theatres.

The appropriation for special newspaper advertising was distributed in a manner likely to secure the maximum results in consideration of the circulation of the great New York dailies and the readers it was most essential to reach.

The billboard end of the exploitation was well taken care of with choice locations for eight-sheets all the way from the Battery to Mamaroneck. A trip through Washington Heights and the Bronx gave the impression that they were all "Silver Horde." The placing of cards in store windows also was thoroughly looked after in all sections of Greater New York.

On the Saturday preceding the transfer of the picture from the Capitol to the Broadway, the Goldwyn exploitation department put over a stunt that attracted a lot of attention in the theatre district during the afternoon hours when Broadway and Fifth avenue were thronged with people. Early copies of every evening paper published in New York were secured, and across the front page of each was stamped in flaming red type the announcement of the showing of "The Silver Horde" at the Broadway. More than 5,000 of these newspapers were distributed during the afternoon and early evening.

"Old Lady 31" Presents Opportunities for Education

"OLD LADY 31" in screen form is holding the principal place on the film bill at the Capitol this week and proving a most entertaining picture if we are any judge of audiences.

It is not so many years since a feature starring character leads was viewed askance by audience and exhibitor the latter because he knew that his patrons demanded some sort of a juvenile romance in their photoplay. Many a great picture of this type failed to meet with popular favor. But we have progressed and the patrons of picture theatres are becoming educated.

"Old Lady 31" hasn't but a ghost of a love story as movie fans were wont to view it, but it is getting more applause, and pleasing more people than most pictures we have sat through along Broadway this year which boasted of much love making and which didn't have anything greater as a theme on which it was based.

Exhibitors who complain that pictures are "old stuff" must educate their patrons into seeing that the romance isn't really essential in the picture drama any more than it is on the stage.

For a picture which will do much to bring about this much desired result "Old Lady 31" can not be excelled.

Great Idea for Advertising "Down on the Farm"

THOMAS PROFFITT, manager of the William Penn theatre, Chester, Pa., is a showman full of ideas. One of his recent exploitation stunts has been a publicity campaign in connection with the engagement of "Down on the Farm" at the William Penn that is extremely novel and unique in that he has established the fact that a production may be thoroughly advertised with neither the title of the feature or the name of the theatre at which it will play mentioned in a line of advertising.

Mr. Proffitt's method was to tie up his campaign with the local business houses by the use of specially printed signs. For instance, the grocer cards reading "Turnips Fresh from 'Down on the Farm'" were provided, and, of course, gladly used. There was a whole list of these cards, each apparently advertising only the merchants' wares.

The "Down on the Farm" signs were printed on oblong cardboard of good size and quality. A red border made the cards attractive and an appropriate link-up with the various commodities sold in Chester made it possible to insert a number in most of the stores of the city.

Besides this, Mr. Proffitt supplied all of the grocery stores with six pound bags on which was a scene printed of "Down on the Farm," and grocer's used them continually for the week prior to the opening of the production. Twenty-four sheets, six sheets and three and one sheets were used in profusion all over the city and not any of them contained the name of the theatre. Everybody wanted to know what it was all about, and a few days before the opening the newsboys selling papers all yelled some trite phrase about "Down on the Farm," never mentioning the William Penn theatre, however. Jitneys in the town were also placarded with "Down on the Farm" signs.

Two days before the show opened and every person in Chester had heard and seen "Down on the Farm" propaganda there bulged forth in the newspapers the announcement of Mack Sennett's production. People looked for themselves when they reached the main street for the theatre that was running the production, paying little or no attention to the opposition, with the results that the house box office record was smashed to smithereens.

New York Wakens to Effectiveness of Exploitation

One of the features of the engagement of "The Orphan" at the William Fox Audubon theatre, New York, was an "orphans party" which was a great success both from a publicity and presentation angle.

Mercantile Tie-ups Get Results

TIE-UPS with local merchants are generally categoried as "old stuff" but Ace Berry, field exploitation representative for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, in putting over "The Luck of the Irish" for the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., gave it a new wrinkle that brought big returns.

A string of pearls figures prominently in the action of the Dwan production, giving Berry his opportunity to hook up with Leo Krauss, one of the leading jewelers of Indianapolis. The usual procedure whereby the merchant runs an ad linking his wares with the picture attraction was reversed. In this instance, the Ohio theatre paid for the jeweler's ad, which occupied three columns in all of the local dailies.

From the standpoint of typographical novelty, the ad prepared by Berry was decidedly effective. The copy was in the form of a statement from the proprietor in which he gave his personal endorsement of the picture and called attention to the display of pearls in his window.

In return for the ad, the jeweler purchased from the Ohio, a block of tickets equivalent to the cost of the advertisements. These, he used as a business stimulant, giving one to each purchaser during the run of the picture.

Acting on the suggestion of Berry, the jeweler arranged a window display devoted entirely to pearls. The window was tastefully dressed and contained seven scenes from "The Luck of the Irish" and a neatly framed card calling attention to the showing of the picture at the Ohio theatre.

As a result of the campaign, the business done by the jeweler reached a high-water mark and he felt himself well repaid for the effort and expense entailed by the stunt. The Ohio benefited to the extent of capacity houses at every performance, a noteworthy occurrence in view of the fact that the expense borne by the theatre in the campaign was practically negligible.

Rivoli Stage Setting Decided Novelty

A VERY effective stage setting has been devised for the vocal number on the Rivoli bill this week, "The Sweetest Story Ever Told."

The back drop represents a side of a room with an oval opening about which is painted a frame such as would adorn an expensive mirror. Miss Anderson, the soloist singing the song stands back of this opening in a costume gown and white wig. Back of her another is provided to conform to that in the immediate view of the audience. Against this second backing and to one side of the singer a small fancy stand on which is a vase of flowers is placed.

The effect from the house is as if the singer was stationed somewhere else and that the audience is viewing her reflection and the articles mentioned in a mirror.

The coloring used for the backings is a dark crimson. The lightings are arranged back of the first drop to a great extent which heighten the "mirror" effect. The result is very pleasing.

Advertising Novelty Worthy of Imitation

An advertising novelty that is worthy of imitation was originated by Harry R. Guest, Goldwyn's press and service representative at the Detroit exchange, and used for the first time in connection with the exploitation of "The Silver Horde" during its showing in Bay City, Mich. The novelty has three things in its favor. It is cheap, original and carries an advertising message that is certain to be read.

A yellow cardboard about three by one and three-quarters inches was lettered at the top, "Learn to Read the Ticker Tape," and at the bottom, "The Grasping Fingers of Wall Street Greed—the Courage and Might of Strong Men Fighting for Fortune and a Woman's Love." Wound around the center of the cardboard was a paper tape about one foot and a half long. Lettered in type similar to that used for the news ticker, it read: "Don't pass up 'The Silver Horde'—Biggest entertainment investment of the year—A drama of firey hearts and frozen trails—Rex Beach wrote it—Goldwyn produced it—The Washington is playing it 5 days commencing Sunday."

Some 4,000 of these novelties were distributed on the streets of Bay City, and it is safe to venture that they were not thrown away before the tape had been unwound and the message noted. A still more effective variation of the same stunt might be secured through having the cardboard shaped to represent a ticker machine. But even in its present form, the novelty has proved very attractive.

Honesty Important Item in Exploitation

Pittsburgh Exhibitor Who Believes in Telling the Truth

WHAT part does honesty play in exploitation?

This question was put to Elmer Harris, manager of the successful Blackstone theatre, Pitsburgh, an exhibitor who has generally sacrificed promotion possibilities rather than "juggle the truth." Mr. Harris replied:

"Honesty is about fifty-one per cent of exploitation. And your other forty-nine per cent doesn't mean anything unless you've got the first quota. The popularity of the motion picture has eliminated the one-born-in-a-minute idea. The exhibitor who won't come clean with his audience is likely eventually to have no audience with which to come clean.

"The man who refuses to respect his customers and his own integrity had best not try out his theories on the show business. You can't sell a fellow something that is advertised to be something else. Not if you want to keep his friendship and patronage! When a man places his admission money through the box office of a motion picture house he usually knows what he is buying. His desire to purchase was stimulated probably by the exhibitor. If the exhibitor causes a patron to believe that his "stock in trade" is something out of the ordinary or "the best in the world" by means of fake and dishonest advertising methods he is leadpiping his customer by taking his money and allowing him to sit through a performance that is not what it was advertised to be. Such methods can not prosper in the exhibiting game any more than they can prosper in any other line of industry. For the simple reason there ARE pictures just as good and better than the exhibitor is advertising his ordinary attractions to be. And the patron who has been once deceived is likely to make it his business to search out the houses where the attractions are as good as they are advertised to be.

"A house may be able to get along without honest advertising methods for a little while. It may be able to stack up good looking receipts for one or two over-advertised features. But when the patronage finally catches on the exhibitor might as well take down the score board, rule the players off the diamond, dismiss the umpire and call the game. He's as lost without HONEST ADVERTISING as a ship without a rudder. He's simply floating along with a slight margin, nabbing the drifting customer who doesn't know any better than to buy something that is advertised to be something else.

"As manager of the Blackstone I have tried to carry out the policies of the house as they had been carried out before my advent. Mr. Guckenheimer, owner of the theatre, has established principles at the Blackstone which have been standing since the motion picture game was on a bottle. And one of these standards, pertaining to advertising as well as house methods was: 'If You Can't Make Your Ad Tell the Truth, Have the Paper Kill It.' And I believe that this system, rigidly enforced, has brought the Blackstone many hundreds of regular patrons."

Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis, Leads in Exploitation

The top half of the cut shows a very attractive window display. The bottom cut illustrates the way Mr. Koch decorated the lobby of the Ohio.

HARRY ("SUNNY") GOLDBERG, proprietor of the Sun theatre in Omaha, Neb., who has gained a great reputation as an originator of clever exploitation stunts for boosting his box office receipts, conceived and carried out a winner in connection with the Sun's recent showing of the new Nazimova picture, "The Heart of a Child." The exploit was nothing less than offering a child for adoption, and it set the whole town to talking.

Mr. Goldberg made arrangements with one of the orphan asylums of this city, to get a little fellow about four or five years old; then took him to one of the department stores and had him dressed in a velvet suit, with everything to match.

"The little boy was put in the sun room of the theatre every afternoon at two o'clock. Mr. Goldberg had made arrangements with Orchard and Wilhelm, one of the big department stores here, to furnish all kinds of toys and playthings for the little fellow's use each afternoon. 'Sunny' was on view from two until five o'clock each day, and was open for adoption by interested parties.

"Mr. Goldberg had taken the precaution of running teasers in the newspapers for the week previous to the showing of the picture. He simply printed a big heart with a heavy black border, with the words, 'Win the heart of this child' in the center of it. Naturally this created a great deal of curiosity among the residents of the city, and when he finally announced the opening of the picture, and the appearance of the little boy and invited those wishing to adopt him to make application at the theatre, it made the biggest kind of a hit with the public.

Reisenfeld Originates Presentation Novelty

THE manner in which film presentations and specialty numbers may be synchronized has been ably demonstrated at the Rivoli theatre, New York, several times during the past year but never to better advantage than this week when a colored strip released by the Colora Company under the title of "Bubbles" is attached as the tag of the Pictorial to be immediately followed by a dancing act which is an exact rendition of the performance shown in the film.

"Bubbles" is a strip several hundred feet in length showing a graceful young woman performing an esthetic dance while playing with a gently floating colored balloon, the movements of the hands in keeping the balloon in the air as well as the dance being in waltz time. The film is beautifully colored in life like tints.

At the finish of the Pictorial the drapes are drawn for a few seconds to be opened again with screen removed and a grey velvet backing in its place in front of which Miss Descha performs the same dance as that shown in the film, using the toy balloon in its rendition as the dancing girl of the film did.

The costume of both dancers are identical and the waltz played by the Rivoli orchestra for the film performance is used for Miss Gesha's dancing.

The set is artistically lighted by the use of light blue and other blended floods. The number is being enthusiastically received by Rivoli audiences.

Barrymore Essay Interests Waco, Texas

As exploitation for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" during its engagement at the Liberty theatre, Waco, Texas, an essay contest limited to 300 words each on the acting of John Barrymore was inaugurated with gratifying results.

A substantial prize was offered which interested a large number of Waco citizens. The date of the closing of the contest was set for a day after the picture had closed, not during the run, for the reason that it was figured that a great many people, not being familiar with Mr. Barrymore's professional ability and knowing only of him, would attend the picture to gain first hand information. In this the Liberty proved its theory to be correct, and through the attendance of the contestants hundreds of people learned of the extraordinary merits of the production, especially concerning the performance of the star.

In addition to the contest other special exploitation was put over to good advantage.

The merchants of Waco were quite willing to have window cards and other matter placed in their windows while two book stores gave window displays of the works of Robert Louis Stevenson, during the showing, with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" featured in the display, and with scene stills and other attractive advertising matter displayed in conjunction.

Rice Puts the Bloom In Bloomington

Exploitation Campaign for "Virgin of Stamboul" Astounds Illinois City

HALL and Griffin, owners and managers of the New Chatterton theatre, Bloomington, Ill., chose for the opening attraction after a thorough remodeling of the theatre, "The Virgin of Stamboul," and then set themselves for an exploitation which will be the talk of Bloomington for many a day.

Some weeks ago Bloomington Armenians were warned of the coming of the terrible Turk, Sheik Ach Me Hamid. These warnings appeared in the form of five and ten line editorial readers on the front page of local newspapers. So much interest was aroused by this form of exploitation that the local publishers were compelled to divulge the secret of the terrible Turk a week ahead of its schedule, announcing that the terrible Turk was none other than Wallace Berry, the terrible villain in "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Two days before the New Chatterton opened its doors, two Arabs (genuine) in full desert regalia, arrived in Bloomington. Hardly an inhabitant of the town but knew the object of this strange duo's appearance. The cry was immediately taken up by the youngsters around the station "Here Comes the Terrible Turks!" which gained momentum as Slayman Ali and his companion worked their way to the New Chatterton. To prove if the newspaper advertising was being watched and to stir up some noise and attract attention with a novelty, it was announced in the papers that all the children who would report at the theatre at a certain time, would be given a free street car ride. Two hundred of Bloomington's Young America were at hand at the appointed time and started on their journey about the city. The cars carried banners announcing the "Virgin of Stamboul" showing at the New Chatterton.

Each urchin was provided with some noise making instrument like a bell or horn and told to make as much noise as he liked. The result was a medley of sounds from vocal to cow bells that for three hours made Bloomington's principal streets resemble a bedlam.

For the presentation Hall and Griffin provided an elaborate stage setting and prologue number. The stage setting consisted of an 80-foot cyclorama of the Sahara Desert in front of which was placed a flower bedecked arbor. The orchestra was placed on the stage.

The prologue was opened by disclosing one of the Arabs who had been imported for the occasion sitting with the other standing with hand pointing to the star of Bethlehem. Lighting effects showed the rising sun with a caravan silhouetted against the sky, at which time the Arabs proclaim their faith in Allah in native tongue.

During the electrical process of bringing on the day, a local singer rendered "Somewhere Some One Is Waiting for Me."

The scene closed with the stage in darkness, the sun having passed below the opposite horizon.

The presentation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" is the most elaborate ever attempted in Bloomington. The orchestra totaled seventeen pieces where five players are usually used at the Bloomington theatres.

The stage setting exploitation and presentation was the work of Harry Rice, Universal's Chicago district exploitation manager.

Union Hill Exploitation Unusually Attractive

R. W. BAREMORE, of the Lincoln theatre, Union Hill, N. J., interpolated a novel stunt in the recent presentation in that theatre of "The Virgin of Stamboul," which went over big with the audience and caused much interested discussion.

"We engaged a Turkish dancer to 'go on with the picture,'" says Baremore, "We ran the film up until that portion of the second reel which shows the dance in the Harem, when the picture was stopped, screen raised disclosing a Harem set with the costumed girl ushers lying about in the background and the spotlight on the dancing girl who then performed her dance. When she was finished the picture was immediately flashed back on the screen and went through to the finish.

"This presentation made a great hit. It can be worked in with this feature to perfection, enhancing its value and providing a real novelty. We called our dancing girl 'Resha' after the Sheik's favorite as shown in the film and we billed her heavily as the girl who did the Harem dance in the feature, using such lines as 'Personal appearance of Resha' performing on the stage the dance she does in the feature picture.

"For a week in advance of the showing we exhibited large paintings in the lobby, arranged with electric drop lights shaded above them, in much the same manner as paintings are shown in an art gallery. Slides were also shown at each performance for many days in advance of the first play date and the Saturday preceding the Monday opening we used a half-page smash advertisement in the two daily newspapers of largest circulation in Hudson county, at the same time carrying readers and two inch ads on several different pages announcing a special Harem dance feature.

"From Saturday until the following Wednesday, the last day of showing, we saw to it that each newspaper carried a good amount of reading matter. Most of this was of the regulation amusement type but they also carried a re-written story of the Sheik in search of his lost fiancee under a news head.

"The girl ushers were costumed in Turkish outfits and set the whole town talking. The theatre was well perfumed with Garden of Allah incense and it was burning on the stage throughout the showing of the picture."

Daring Horsemanship Feature of Short Subject

UNDER the title of "Modern Centaurs" Educational Films is showing a short subject at the Strand Theatre, New York, this week which has some remarkable exploitation possibilities as well as entertaining qualities, in as much as it is made up of a variety of horse and horsemanship stunts performed by the famous Portuguese cavalry riding "up hill and down dale," through water, sliding down embankments, climbing inclines which would almost prohibit a squirrel and otherwise exhibiting themselves to be wonderfully trained animals and courageous skilled riders.

The exploitation possibilities are contained in letting your patrons know what to expect from the cavalry in the way of stunts and in depending on the almost universal love of horse flesh to assist in making them desirous of seeing the film.

Fine Lobby Display Idea for Lewis Feature

Stan Brown, managing director of the Met theatre, Grand Forks, N. D., is a thorough believer in novel exploitation ideas, and, whenever the opportunity presents, "puts something over." Recently he played "Other Men's Shoes" and as a lobby display arranged remarkable exhibition of shoes, which included snow shoes, shoes worn by Uncle Sam's boys in Siberia, the footwear of Calcutta Hindus, of Mexicans, Hollanders, and in fact shoes from all over the world were on exhibition in the lobby.

Tastefully arranged, the display attracted wide attention, and was of material assistance to Brown in making "Other Men's Shoes" one of the greatest box office attractions he has ever played. In telling of the stunt himself, Mr. Brown said:

"It caused lots of comment and also got plenty of comedy out of it. One old man wanted to know how much a pair we were selling the old shoes displayed at. Another one thought we gave a pair of shoes away with each ticket.

"I had window displays in all shoe stores—with cards attached calling attention to the fact that we were playing 'Other Men's Shoes' at the Met.

"The store had every size shoe in the window, ranging from baby shoes to a pair of overshoes, size 14.

"I had signs in all shine parlors and shoe repair shops. Had the sidewalk marked, so many paces to OTHER MEN'S SHOES. In the lobby we had strings of old shoes by the dozen, and on a bench had a pair of Mexican shoes, wooden shoes, Japanese, Hindoo, Russian and snow shoes.

Funny Week New Vogue in San Francisco

Imperial Theatre Program Made Up Entirely of Comedies

"FUNNY WEEK" is a new vogue in California

The Imperial theatre of San Francisco, Cal., started the ball rolling with the idea when they put on Mack Sennett's latest five-reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," and all the theatres along the line are following their example.

There's a real reason behind it however. The idea of running a "Funny Week" packed them in to capacity for a whole week, and every patron had such a gloriously good time that they not only complimented the management upon the idea but asked for more. The Imperial put over the idea with a resounding bang.

"Funny Week" the management tells us, made the whole town forget its troubles and act like kids on their first trip to the circus.

"Come on folks" the Imperial invited the people in their ads, "and see an all comedy show, the best durned thing that ever hit the town. Mack Sennett's "Down on the Farm" you'll bust laffin' over. Severi, the big little leader, has turned the Imperial orchestra into a hick band and the tunes he'll play'll make you want to get right out in the isle and swing your partner right and left."

All San Francisco accepted this unique invitation.

The opening number was a song written for the occasion by Ben Black, entitled "Howdy Folks," sung by a very pretty girl, in full farm regalia. The song asked everybody to throw care to the winds and join the crowd in the fun. After the song two comedies were shown, "Haunted Spooks" and "The Doughnut Lifter." They were followed by a prologue to "Down on the Farm" the setting of which was a scene of a farmyard at dawn with all the live animals from chickens to pigs roaming all over the stage, giving it a realistic and humorous touch which went over big, it is said.

Directors Roth and Partington, of the Imperial, converted the Severi's Imperial orchestra into one of the Hickville variety and one of the tremendous hits was the "yap" band and the manner in which it was led by Gine Severi. Soulfully it played discordant tunes in a setting designated on the program as "Si Scudder's Barn" and the audience at each and every performance couldn't slap hard enough to show their appreciation so they stamped. The entire orchestra was dressed as farmers and gave the most perfect imitation of a rube band at a village festival.

The "Funny Week" program at the Imperial contained nothing but comedies. Even the "news" and the customary "travel" or "scenic" were omitted, and the best portion of their advertising was confined to the bill-boards and newspapers.

California Theatre Originates Presentation Novelty

When the Imperial theatre of San Francisco played "Down on the Farm" a prologue and stage setting that was a good running mate for "The Old Homestead" was presented as a part of the entertainment. The stage setting is shown in the larger illustration. Miss Evelyn Francour sang a prologue song for the number.

Live News From The Producers

Two-Reelers for First Nat'l by H. Lehrman

Things are booming again at the Henry Lehrman studios in Culver City, where Mr. Lehrman is beginning work on a series of two-reel comedies under the business management of C. L. Chester, producer of Chester Comedies and the well-known travel pictures, Chester Outings and Screenics. The company has taken over a contract with the First National Exhibitors' Exchange to supply twelve of the Lehrman Comedies to this organization during the coming year.

Operations began last week on the first picture of the series, which has received the temporary title of "Springtime." Albert Ray, a juvenile who worked with Mr. Lehrman in Sunshine Comedies, and Charlotte Dawn, a seventeen-year-old ingenue, are being featured.

"Up in Mary's Attic" Wins Approval

"'Up in Mary's Attic' beats Mack Sennett at his own game," says the New York Review of May 22 in connection with the comedy-feature, which is now being distributed by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., on the independent market. "This facially melodramatic, human-interest picture has about all the elements necessary for a hilariously thrilling screen hour—a triumph for Eva Novak, Harry Gribbon and Elmer J. McGovern," adds the New York Review. "'Up in Mary's Attic' is something new in five-reel comedies and should be booked by every exhibitor because it is novel and artistic."

Cosmopolitan to Make Another Hurst Story

"Just Around the Corner," said to be one of Fannie Hurst's greatest stories, is now being put into scenario form for Cosmopolitan Productions. In view of the success Miss Hurst's "Humoresque" has achieved at the Criterion Theatre, New York, this news item carries with it a particular interest to exhibitors and picture lovers alike. Frank Borzage, who is responsible for the direction of "Homoresque" will also direct "Just Around the Corner."

Mayer Produces "Old Dad"

Mildred Harris Chaplin, Star of Woman's Home Companion Serial

"OLD DAD," the Eleanor Hallowell serial, which appeared in the Woman's Home Companion, is soon to be given to the public in motion picture form. The story was purchased by Louis B. Mayer, and Mildred Harris Chaplin is the star. George Stewart, brother of Anita Stewart, appears opposite Mrs. Chaplin, and the cast includes Myrtle Stedman, Irving Cummings, John Sainpolis, Hazel Howell and a number of others.

The picture is now in the course of production and is being directed by Lloyd Ingraham, who recently directed the comedy, "Mary's Ankle." Ingraham is being assisted by George Crone, with Pliny Goodfriend at the camera.

The Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Co. has the following to say concerning its newest acquisition:

"The story is one of the most gripping girls' school romances ever penned, and is filled with dramatic as well as comic situations. The sets have been designed on the most elaborate plans, and such homes as that of Vice-President Gartz of the Rock Island Railway are being used as locations. This picture will be the charming star's third First National release and is to follow "Polly of the Storm Country."

"Mrs. Chaplin's fourth production (yet unnamed), directed by John M. Stahl, is not to be released until fall, and will then be specialed in the best theatres throughout the country. So successful is this picture that Louis B. Mayer has exercised his option with Stahl for two more super-productions."

"Trumpet Island" Coming

Vitagraph Announces Big Special Production by Gouverneur Morris

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, announces this week that "Trumpet Island," by Gouverneur Morris, will be the next special of that company. The first of this series, James Oliver Curwood's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," has been booked at New York's Capitol Theatre. Final scenes of "Trumpet Island," requiring the Hudson River as a background for airplane scenes, will be taken in New York, and Director Tom Terriss and several members of his company will shortly leave for the east.

This is believed to have been the first picture ever made in which airplanes supplanted trains and automobiles in transporting players and technical staff from the studio to locations. This air commutation service was maintained between Vitagraph studios in Hollywood and Catalina Island, Long Beach and Palm Springs during the course of the production and while these locations were being used.

The use of the planes in this service was not designed merely to be spectacular. Six were used almost constantly in the picture, so the double duty of transporting people to locations was a logical and modern idea.

This special production will introduce Marguerite De La Motte in the most important part she has had, and one that she fits admirably. Before appearing in this picture she played important leading parts in "The Sagebrusher," "The Hope" and numerous other big productions of the past year.

The production cost on this picture is said to have already exceeded the $300,000 mark.

Pioneer Dallas Office Opens for Business

The Parker Film Company, belonging to the Pioneer Distributing System, began business last week at their new exchange at 1810 Commerce Street, Dallas, Texas, under the management of Tom N. Parker

New England Rights on Canyon Films Sold

Mr. H. Hursch, of the Lightning Photoplays Service of N. Y., 20 Melrose street, Boston, Mass., has just closed contract with the Canyon Pictures Corporation, for twelve two-reel western pictures, starring Franklyn Farnum, for the territory of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. The Lightning Photoplays Service intend to exploit these two-reel pictures in the same manner as some of the large productions they now control.

Sidney Franklin Starts Editing of "Athalie"

Sidney A. Franklin, who recently completed the filming of "Athalie," the Robert W. Chambers' story, for Mayflower, has abandoned his vacation plans and will start to work cutting, editing and titling the picture. William Shea has been engaged by Franklin to assist him in the cutting room. Franklin believes that "Athalie" will be ready for shipment to Mayflower's New York offices within the next three weeks, it is stated.

Universal Exchanges in Spring Sales Drive

Universal is going to cut another melon among its leading salesmen, it has been announced by H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the big film company. The leading salesman in each of the Universal exchanges now participating in its Spring sales contest will receive $100 as a bonus. An individual efficiency reward is a new feature of the Universal's $7,000 sales contest.

Famous Players Opens Albany Exchange

Plans made by Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, call for the opening of the new Famous Players exchange at Albany, by June 7. The new exchange, which will be a model of exchange housing and facilities, will be at 33 Orange street. Joseph H. Seidleman has been appointed exchange manager.

Sunshine's Special Thrills

Daring and Fun Said to Be Mixed in the New Fox Five-Reel Farce

WHILE still withholding the date for release of the special comedy in five reels, the advance guard of Fox Film Corporation's Sunshine Comedy Brigade continues to forward snatches of information regarding this super-comedy. Little has been published regarding the exact nature of this production—which is still without a title—except that it will be interpreted by a big cast, including all the Sunshine comedy artists on the Fox lot in Hollywood; that a bevy of beauties has been recruited for the picture; and that the costuming will be of a character unusual for a five-reel farce. Hampton Del Ruth is supervising director.

The Fox Film Corporation has the following to say about its forthcoming production:

"As an example of the type of thrills with which the comedy fairly bristles, Del Ruth is laying special emphasis upon the scenes in which Miss Alta Allen, the attractive little leading woman, faces almost certain death to obtain the realism demanded by the director.

"The producer's representatives claim that nothing ever has been done by daredevils in pictures to equal the sensational work by the Fox players in these scenes. The action was photographed at Pomona, near Los Angeles, and in neighboring territory, and for this purpose a special spur of the railroad was secured by the concern.

"Further co-operation was received from the executives of the Mercury Company, a prominent air-transportation company from which the Fox director obtained the use of several racing planes. One of these planes, which plays the most important part in the big scene, was driven personally by Lieutenant Thompson, an army flyer. Chester Conklin, famous Sunshine comedian, is the daring hero who saves Miss Allen from the clutches of Jack Cooper by use of the plane.

"Cooper has kidnapped Miss Allen and escaped with her in the cab of a locomotive attached to a four-car train. Conklin goes to the rescue in the airplane, overtaking the train. Then occurs the stunt that will force cold chills up and down the spine of the biggest iceberg of 'em all. The Fox folks in Hollywood are all excited over it and have passed the word to headquarters in New York."

DeMille in West Gets Back to Work

Cecil B. DeMille's return to Los Angeles from New York, following the signing of his latest five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marked renewed activity on the final work of whipping "Something To Think About" into shape for release. The latest Cecil B. DeMille special production was completed some weeks ago, but the task of cutting and titling the picture has required weeks of intensive labor, it is said.

Alice Brady Deserts Stage

Realart Star Will Devote Entire Time for One Year to Pictures

ALICE BRADY has decided to discontinue temporarily her work on the speaking stage and to devote her entire time and energies to the making of pictures for Realart. The decision comes after two seasons as the star in Owen Davis' successful play, "Forever After."

Miss Brady is now in Chicago where in addition to playing at the Princess Theatre in "Forever After," she is working on her third Realart picture, "A Dark Lantern," under the direction of John S. Robertson.

As soon as her stage engagement is finished and the final scenes for "A Dark Lantern" taken, Miss Brady will return to New York City and will take a rest before starting work on her next season's productions for Realart release.

For several seasons, Miss Brady has devoted almost her entire time to the stage. Her return to the screen, therefore, for a year at least, during which time she will appear solely in Realart Pictures, will be of considerable interest to exhibitors who in past years have built up large Brady followings.

It has not been definitely decided whether Miss Brady will produce her pictures on the coast or in New York City, but it is believed that the latter will be the choice. This will enable the star to have the range of the country's fashion center and to maintain her reputation as the best and most stylishly dressed woman of the screen.

Progressing on Star Series

Universal Has Already Completed Two of Series; Three More on Way

UNIVERSAL is well launched into the production of its Star Series, the new schedule of feature releases for the 1920-1921 season, word comes from Universal City, California. This series, announced several weeks ago, contemplates forty-eight five-reel specials, turned out by six popular stars. Each star is to produce eight high-class photoplays.

The stars are Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran (working together), Frank Mayo, Carmel Myers and Anne Cornwall. Two of the new series already have been completed. They are "The Girl in the Rain," featuring Anne Cornwall and "The Red Lane," with Frank Mayo.

"The Girl in the Rain" is an adaptation of Varick Vanardy's popular novel, "The Girl by the Roadside." It was put into continuity form by Doris Schroeder, and directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

"The Red Lane" is a picturization of Holman Day's novel by that name. It is an action story of the Canadian border. Lynn Reynolds was the director.

Three other Star Series pictures are under way. Edith Roberts is doing "Marama," a South Sea story by Ralph Stock. Every indication points to an unusual picture, says Universal. Norman Dawn is directing it. Lyons and Moran are producing "La La Lucille," a film version of Fred Jackson's roaring stage success of last season. "La La Lucille" was a hilarious musical farce. Harry Carey is working on "Fightin' Job" an original screen story by H. H. Van Loan, the author of "The Virgin of Stamboul" and other highly successful photoplays.

The first of the Star Series to be released will be "The Girl in the Rain," with Anne Cornwall, which is scheduled for July 12. "The Red Lane," with Mayo, will be released July 19, and "Fightin' Job," with Harry Carey, on July 26.

Director Stanton Gets Unusual Offer

Richard Stanton, the director of "Checkers" and other box office successes, has received an offer from the largest Italian film organization, which calls for a series of film features to be produced by him under most unusual conditions.

The company in question has constructed a floating motion picture studio. A large ocean-going steamship has been converted into a veritable production palace. Two decks are devoted to the stages and an elaborate array of dressing rooms, laboratory equipment and living quarters for the studio personnel have taken the place of the former staterooms of the ship.

The ship will house three producing companies and will spend a year in cruising among the beauty spots of Europe. Mr. Stanton is offered the post of director general.

Neilan Reissue Is Put on the Market

Exclusive Features, Inc., of 130 West 46th street, announces that it is state-righting a revival of "The Country That God Forgot," directed by Marshall Neilan. Exclusive Features states that in this picture the exhibitor and state-right buyer have the opportunity to take advantage of the popularity now enjoyed by the director of this production, following his recent releases of "The River's End" and "Don't Ever Marry." The cast, too, in the opinion of Exclusive Features, adds additional power to the picture. Tom Santchi, Mary Charleson and George Fawcett are seen in the line-up of the players.

Morris Rose Returns From Western Trip

Morris Rose, who was recently elected vice-president of the Pioneer Film Corporation has returned from a trip through the Middle West, during which time he spent several days at the Pioneer Exchanges in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Buffalo, Baltimore and Washington. Throughout his tour, Mr. Rose stated, he found independent exhibitors up in arms against the encroachment of the producer-exhibitor.

Anita Stewart Picture Nears Completion

Anita Stewart's latest Mayer-made First National production, "Harriet and the Piper," is fast nearing completion in the Los Angeles studios of Louis B. Mayer. Only a few of the scenes remain to be photographed and cutting will begin by the end of the week. Supporting Miss Stewart in this production are Irving Cummings and Ward Crane.

A Change in Title for Melford Production

George Melford's production for Paramount of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel "The Translation of a Savage," now nearing completion at the Lasky Studio, Hollywood, has just been given the new screen title, "Behold My Wife!"

Summer Drive by Paramount

New York Exchange to Start Campaign Under Buxbaum

WHEN summer begins to exert a depressing influence upon the show business, the New York Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will have a remedy ready, according to H. H. Buxbaum, manager of the exchange, who has proclaimed July to be Paramount month for his territory. Mr. Buxbaum's theory is that the usual falling off of business at the theatres during the summer months can be counteracted if exhibitors will make the period a special occasion for showing the best pictures producers have to offer.

"The idea that summer is a good time to work off poor films on the public, with indifferent patronage as the excuse, is entirely outworn. Our experience last year, when live wire exhibitors responded to the appeal to play first class pictures at this time, and made a good profit during these months in doing so, was convincing," he stated.

During July, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's New York Exchange will conduct an intensive sales campaign to bring Paramount pictures to every house in New York City and the eastern and southern part of the state covered by the exchange as well as eastern New Jersey. One of the prime objects will be to give exhibitors a chance to make up for skipped bookings and to play specially big productions that they were obliged to pass up earlier in the season because the pictures had been previously booked by another house. Among some of the big specials which will be available for exhibitors during Paramount month, Mr. Buxbaum declared, are: Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," "Everywoman," "The Copperhead," George Fitzmaurices' "On With the Dance," "Treasure Island," John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," George Melford's "The Sea Wolf" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife."

In response to the first Paramount month campaign inaugurated by the New York Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last year the business of the exchange, instead of falling off, showed a marked increase for the hot season. The number of houses at which Paramount pictures were exhibited also increased materially and the exhibitors who took advantage of the sales campaign to run big pictures in the summer reported that their business, instead of decreasing, showed a substantial gain. Preliminary reports to date have indicated, Mr. Buxbaum declares, that an even larger number of exhibitors are preparing to follow this course during the coming summer.

"My one suggestion to aggressive exhibitors," he said, "is to keep their theatres clean and wholesome; to have them cooled with air fans; to serve refreshing lemonade and to advertise these facts. It's a lot more cheerful to sit in a cozy, comfortable theatre watching a good picture than to stroll around the hot dusty streets in the middle of the afternoon. Motion picture patrons will respond to this line of reason if it is only presented to them in a clearent fashion."

Carpentier Press-Book Out

Robertson-Cole's Campaign Book Available in All Branch Offices

ROBERTSON-COLE announces the publication of a press-book for "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist. The publication is of a most elaborate character, including a sales-talk by General-Manager A. S. Kirkpatrick, a complete set of display advertising, a page of press comment made upon Carpentier by the papers of the country following his arrival in America, lobby displays, eight pages of exploitation, program copy, a list of posters available for the exhibitor and a twelve-page newspaper publicity insert accompanied by a complete line of cuts.

The Robertson-Cole Company has issued the following statement concerning its campaign-book for the Carpentier picture:

"About two months ago, while "The Wonder Man" was being filmed at the Solax studio, Ft. Lee, N. J., a publicity campaign was outlined which included the embodiment of the best publicity ideas possible concerning Carpentier, in a large press book. This press book which has been forwarded to the twenty-five Robertson-Cole branches during the past week, is one of the finest ever issued on any production.

"The front cover of the book is to be used as a lobby display. It contains in the centre a large smiling likeness of Carpentier with the famous Frenchman at each corner, smaller, in different garbs. In one place he is a gentleman with evening clothes and high silk hat, in another pose a sportsman with his arms around a dog. In the third he is a soldier with the uniform in which he won honors in the great war, while in the fourth he is seen in fighting pose in ring togs."

A feature of the book is a picture of the star in evening dress before a background of the French tricolor. This is tipped in so as to be readily removed for lobby display. The newspaper publicity section is also a separate unit so attached as to permit its ready removal for use by the exhibitor.

"Silent Barrier" to be Released in Summer

"The Silent Barrier," first motion picture play by a member of the British aristocracy to be produced in America, is now titled and ready for early summer release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. This is the first of fifteen Sir Louis Tracy novels, rights to which were purchased by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., to be completed for Gibraltar Pictures.

Pathe Releases Commended

Letters Lauding All Classes of Releases Arrive Daily, Is Report

IN a statement recently issued Pathe announces that a great many letters, reflecting favorable exhibitor comment on the character of the recent Pathe releases, are being daily received at headquarters. These expressions of favor are not restricted to any particular class of pictures, states Pathe, but include serials, comedies, the Pathe News and the big features now being distributed.

One letter submitted comes from K. Moreland, general manager of the Moreland Circuit in Nebraska and Iowa. He writes as follows of Edgar Lewis's "Other Men's Shoes":

"We have just completed showing this wonderful production over our circuit. This is the only 100 per cent picture I have ever seen. It pleased every one who saw it in any of our theatres. It will be shown in all our houses again, and I want to tell you now that this will be the only picture we ever thought worthy of a repeat showing."

Writing of Harold Lloyd's two-reeler, "Haunted Spooks," A. C. King of the Empress theatre, Zumbrota, Minn., says:

"'Haunted Spooks' which I showed Saturday and Sunday is the best comedy I have played, and it brought in more money than anything I have given on Saturday and Sunday, with one exception. That was a $150 special. I raised my prices and I believe I had more satisfied patrons than ever before."

William F. Kuschke, manager of the Royal, in Caddo, Okla., doubted the drawing ability of Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack," states Pathe, but here's what he writes of the opening episode:

"I wish unsolicited to express my appreciation of your wonderful serial, 'Daredevil Jack.' I broke all attendance records. In fact, I opened to capacity business and paid for my entire fifteen weeks on the opening night."

The Pathe News wins a boost from Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the new Garrick theatre, St. Paul. "On the Pacific" of Pathe News, No. 37, was the subject of the following:

"It is an unusual piece of work and the photography and everything connected with it is so exceptional that it stands out like a searchlight. It is this kind of stuff that makes Pathe News what it is."

Rosalie Ashton Writes for Eugene Spitz

Rosalie Ashton, continuity writer and playwright, is now engaged on a series of special stories for Eugene Spitz, independent producer, with studios at 361 West 125th street and 219 East 124th street. According ao Mr. Spitz's announcement, Miss Ashton is writing a special production, which he will produce in the near future, and is also preparing material for a series of short productions.

Picture Has Unique Theme

"Trip to Mars," Tower Feature, Built on Oft-Discussed Question

THE recent discussion concerning communication with Mars, started when the claim that dots and dashes caught on Marconi's wireless apparatus in London were signalled from the Martians to Mother Earth, has caused unusual public interest. Ever since, scientists have been racking their brains thinking out ingenious means of signalling through the 50,000,000 miles of ether that separates the earth from Mars when those two planets are closest together.

A captain in the United States Army recently volunteered to be shot to the planet in a projectile propelled by a huge cannon, provided it were previously demonstrated to his satisfaction that a projectile not containing a human being had been successfully landed on the planet.

Furthermore, one of the most ingenious suggestions that has been made up to date is realistically depicted in "A Trip to Mars," a special production which Tower Film Corporation is about to release on the Independent Market.

"A Trip to Mars" has been produced under the guidance of a group of some of the greatest scientists in the world. It is as scientifically accurate as is possible in view of our limited knowledge of our nearest neighbor among the planets.

It is a fascinating and an intensely interesting melo-drama—with thrills from beginning to end. It tells the story of a daring party of explorers making the trip through almost limitless space in a specially constructed airship, showing their thrilling adventures before and after their safe arrival on the planet. The love element is not neglected and a dramatic romance runs through the story.

Clara Kimball Young Feature Has Trade Showing in Hotel Astor

AFTER a wait of many months, during which time a score of technical and productional experts worked at the Los Angeles plant of the Carson Studios, Equity Pictures Corporation announced this week the world premiere of "For the Soul of Rafael" in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, New York, Wednesday, May 26th.

Much interest is attached to "For the Soul of Rafael," Marsh Ellis Ryan's romance of early California life, since its first edition, published in 1905, more than two million copies of Mr. Ryan's book have been sold, and according to the estimates of the publishers, there is a copy of "For the Soul of Rafael" in every fifth family in the United States.

"For the Soul of Rafael," in addition to boasting Clara Kimball Young in the important role of Marta Raquel Estavan, announces as members of the supporting cast some of the best known stage and screen players. Miss Young's work surpasses anything she has done in the past, and she brings to the screen a role that will live forever. Mr. J. Frank Glendon, in the part of Keith Bryton, brings to the screen a noteworthy contribution. The remaining members of the cast—Bertram Grassby, Eugenie Besserer, Juan de la Cruz, Ruth King, Helene Sullivan, Paula Merritt, Maude Emery and Edward M. Kimball—compose a cast of more than ordinary excellence.

"For the Soul of Rafael" will be seen at a prominent Broadway theatre about May 30th, when it opens in sixty-three cities throughout the country.

Al. St. Johns Comedies Selling Rapidly

True T. Thompson of the True Film Co., Dallas, Texas, has closed for Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas on the Al. St. John Comedies. Richards and Flyn, of Kansas City has bought Western Missouri, and the First Nation Exhibitors Circuit of Denver has acquired Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Southern Idaho, and New Mexico.

Realart Star Growing in Popularity

Dan Michalove, director of theatres for Southern Enterprises, Inc., declares that when "Nurse Marjorie," and "Jenny Be Good," have concluded their run over that circuit, Mary Miles Minter "will be second to none in drawing power in our territory." He has proved his faith in this by scheduling the pictures for the maximum play dates for the circuit.

M. L. Finkelstein of Finkelstein and Ruben, managers of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate, personally viewed the two pictures and considered them the best Mary Miles Minter had ever made. Finkelstein and Ruben recently staged a record exploitation campaign for "Anne of Green Gables," Miss Minter's first Realart picture, and are planning to follow through with the stars' latter pictures.

Private Showing for "The Restless Sex"

A special private showing of Marion Davies' latest starring feature, "The Restless Sex," a Cosmopolitan Production released by Paramount-Artcraft, will be held Wednesday evening, June 2nd, in the grand ball room of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York. A representative audience of well known feminists, jurists, and artistic and theatrical people will be invited.

"The Restless Sex," is by Robert W. Chambers, and appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine. The star is supported by Ralph Kellard, Carlyle Blackwell, Corrine Barker, Charles Lane, Robert Divian, Etna Ross, Stephen Carr, and Vivian Osborne. Robert Z. Leonard is the director.

AuthorWitnesses Showing of "Silent Barrier"

Sir Louis Tracy, author of "The Silent Barrier," witnessed a private showing of the feature production just finished by Gibraltar Pictures for W. W. Hodkinson release, before his departure from New York a few days ago, and expressed himself as being delighted in the pictorial results achieved by Director William Worthington.

Expects Ovation for Premiere

How Campaign for "The Wonder Man" Was Conducted

AS has already been announced, "The Wonder Man," which stars Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist and war-veteran, will be presented by Robertson-Cole in the Grand Ball-Room of the Hotel Astor for one week, beginning May 29th. The premiere of the Robertson-Cole production is made the subject of a lengthy statement just issued by that organization. The statement follows:

"The showings are under the auspices of the American Legion of New York County, and Legion men throughout New York City are exerting every energy to make the affair something that will write a page in the history of their organization. Carpentier is extremely popular with the Legion not only because of his war record —he was decorated three times and wounded twice—but for other reasons. Therefore, the American Legion of New York County intends that the French fighter, a stranger in a strange land, shall receive a send-off that will be heard across the water.

"One week before the initial showing on the evening of the 29th every seat for it was sold out, and the advance sale of seats for the other performances was progressing satisfactorily. Exhibitors will be interested in knowing how enthusiasm for the picture was worked up and the way paved for the heavy advance sale at prices ranging from $1 to $2.

It is estimated that 4,000,000 ex-soldiers, and their friends and families, aggregating several more millions, all will want to see Carpentier. This is one of the strongest angles of exploitation on which the exhibitor can dwell. Here is the way the Robertson-Cole home office in New York put over the premier showing of 'The Wonder Man.'

"First, when the New York County Committee of the Legion decided to hold the world's premier Carpentier showing under its auspices, Henry Buxton, president of the County organization appointed a committee of representative business men to take charge of the affair. This committee is composed of Col. Nicholas Engel, chairman, William K. Doggett, Edgar H. Felix and S. G. Gumpertz. Members of the committee proceeded to work in co-operation with Robertson-Cole, which is distributing 'The Wonder Man,' and which has just signed Carpentier for three years in motion picture work, as the result of his great success in his first picture.

"Through the Legion committee it was arranged to have the tickets to the affair placed on sale with all of the branch agencies of Tyson's and McBride's, the biggest amusement ticket sellers in the city. The committee also obtained decorated booths from the Liberty Loan committee and placed women members of the Legion in them in the lobbies of the big hotels. These women acted as voluntary workers in selling tickets.

"Advertising accessories for the showings were distributed by the County organization to the various Posts of the Legion in New York City, and members of the Posts saw to it that the advertising was displayed in their sections. The accessories consisted of door hangers, specially made window cards and dodgers. Fine oil paintings of Carpentier also were placed in the windows of big stores, along with matter advertising the showings.

"A specially mapped out campaign was followed in newspaper and trade paper advertising. The newspaper campaign began the Sunday before the showings and extended throughout the week."

ReichenbachwithGoldwyn

Will Take Charge of the Exploitation for New "Tarzan" Picture

GOLDWYN has decided to make a summer release of the sensational Numa production, "The Return of Tarzan," which opens for an indefinite run at the Broadway theatre next Sunday. This is the second of Edgar Rice Burrough's tales of the African jungle.

In connection with the early release, Goldwyn, in cooperation with Numa Pictures Corporation, have secured the service of Harry Reichenbach, and placed him in charge of all exploitation for the production; and Reichenbach, who was responsible for the widespread interest in all the Tarzan subjects previously produced, announces an elaborate publicity and advertising campaign far overreaching that which characterized his former Tarzan activities, and which will carry all over the United States.

"The Return of Tarzan" was produced by Numa Pictures under the direction of Harry Revier, with Gene Pollar in the role of the giant white jungle man. It is far and away more sensational than the former Tarzan stories in that Director Revier had the resources of the Weiss brothers zoological collection at his disposal and made good use of the many beasts in that collection.

New York, London, Paris, Algiers and the African coast are in turn, locations for exciting action and the unusual plot is studded with such exciting incidents as a fight between Tarzan and a horde of ruffians, a duel between Tarzan and a jealous husband, hand-to-hand fighting between Tarzan and a crowd of fanatics, a ship afire at sea, the life boats filled with tortured derelicts and fights between Tarzan and wild beasts.

A cast of prominent players, including Ormond Cortez, E. L. Sterne, Estelle Taylor, Karla Schramm and others are seen in support of Gene Pollar. Release dates will be announced within the next few days at which time the Goldwyn exchanges will be equipped with advance copies of the film.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal

R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal Manufacturing Co.

Abe Stern, treasurer of the Universal Manufacturing Co.

Emanuel H. Goldstein, assistant to President Laemmle, of Universal

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges of Universal Film Mfg. Co.

Trio of Universal officials who will direct the general affairs of that company and unburden its president and vice-president of its intricate details

Three Men Govern Universal

MANAGEMENT of Universal activities hereafter will be directed by a commission of three high officials of that organization, it is announced by Carl Laemmle, president of the corporation. The commission form of management, inaugurated recently at Universal City, has proved such a success that Mr. Laemmle decided to install a similar body in the Universal home office.

The newly formed committee consists of Abe Stern, treasurer of Universal; E. H. Goldstein, secretary to the president, and H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges. Their word will be final in most of the general affairs of the film concern. By the formation of this commission, Mr. Laemmle hopes to unburden himself and his chief aid, R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, of much of the routine details of the business. Hereafter these two officials will confine themselves to important qustions of policy and picture betterment.

The formation of this commission was possible by reason of several important changes just announced in Universal's executive staff. Daniel B. Lederman, formerly assistant to the president, has resigned, and E. H. Goldstein has just been appointed to a newly created executive position, secretary to the president. Among other activities he will assume the duties formerly shouldered by Mr. Lederman. Mr. Goldstein has been general sales manager of Universal for two years. Previous to this he was manager of the Big "U" (New York) Exchange for several years.

Commission Formed by Laemmle Will Distribute Work

Another important change in the Universal organization is the appointment of Samuel Sedran as purchasing agent. Sedran also is the head of the Universal supply department. The new appointment consolidates the co-functions of the two positions and is expected to be a far-reaching step towards maximum efficiency. Mr. Sedran's appointment follows the recent resignation of the former purchasing agent, Albert Tuchman.

Mr. Laemmle believes that the commission form of management is the only efficient way for handling the affairs of an organization of the magnitude of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

"Trial of the commission form of government for Universal City has convinced me in less than a month that it is the ideal method for handling the many phased activities of a film company," explained Mr. Laemmle in a recent interview. "For years I had difficulty at Universal City. Manager after manager had to give it up. The absolute rule of the vast studio plant was too much for one man. When I established a Commission of three there this Spring, I must confess that I was skeptical. The three Commissioners, Isadore Bernstein, Sam Von Ronkle and Louis Loeb, assisted by my personal representative, Irving Thalberg, have accomplished wonders, however. Production is now at high tide and what is more important, everyone is contented and enthusiastic.

"Naturally such a state of affairs caused me to consider the same plan for the Universal executive offices. There are too many matters of more or less importance coming up continually for one man to pass upon effectively. That is why I have created this new triumvirate for Universal.

"I have taken many steps to improve the standing of Universal in the last few months. The first, of course, was the acquisition by R. H. Cochrane and myself of the Universal stock held by P. A. Powers, my former associate. That gave me my power to put my plans for Universal into effect.

"The second important step was the reorganization of the management of Universal City and the placing of the studios on an efficient and harmonious basis. The third step was the building up of the scenario department and the assurance that Universal will put out the best possible stories by the best writers."

Dwan Fits Continuity to the "Location"

Fitting the continuity to the scenes on "location" rather than seeking "locations" that fit the continuity is the scheme that Allan Dwan has adopted in the filming of his new production for Mayflower, which features Mary Thurman and Niles Welch. The "shooting" schedule was worked out more than two weeks before the picture was started.

Montagu Love Signed for Farrar Picture

Montagu Love has just been engaged by Edward Jose to play an important part in Geraldine Farrar's first Associated Exhibitors production, "The Riddle: Woman," which will be distributed by Pathe. Coincident with this announcement, Associated Exhibitors reports that Miss Farrar has returned from her Southern operatic tour and that preparations have been completed for her to begin work on "The Riddle: Woman."

Goldwyn to Distribute New Comedy Series

A new series of twenty-six two-reel comedies, produced by the National Film Corporation of America, will be released through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, according to an announcement received from Goldwyn this week. The first four releases, "The Road to Ruin," "His Wife's Husband," "In and Out" and "Knocking 'Em Cold" have been completed and prints soon will be in the hands of Goldwyn exchange managers.

Colorado Man Acquires Rights to Features

Charles F. Schwerin, general sales manager of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., announced this week that Willis Kent, head of the Quality Pictures Company of Denver, Colorado, had purchased rights to "A Dream of Fair Women." Mr. Kent also purchased "Up in Mary's Attic" for his territory, which consists of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

Joe Brandt Terminates New York Visit

Joe Brandt, director general of the National Film Corporation and eastern representative of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, is now well on his way from New York to the coast, for conferences with his company officials.

It is understood that the National Film Corporation is about to inaugurate a new production schedule including the new series of Hoxie five-reel westerns.

"Illiterate Digest" at New York Strand

With the endorsement of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, still hot on the press, Joe Brandt, general representative of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, now reports that the "Illiterate Digest," by Will Rogers, has been booked for a run at the New York Strand theatre. This will be the first showing of this Kohn Novelty weekly in New York.

Preacher Signs Contract with Paragon

Rev. George LeRoi Clarke, the preacher-actor, has signed a year's contract with the Paragon Pictures Corporation, with studios at Long Beach, Cal. The minister's first venture in motion pictures was of a "free lance" nature, with considerable financial backing if his productions were a success. The minister's first seven pictures will soon be releasd by Paragon.

Kent Buys Rights for Fine Arts Picture

Charles F. Schwerin, general sales manager of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., announced this week that Willis Kent, head of the Quality Pictures Company, had purchased rights to "A Dream of Fair Women," for Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico. He has also purchased "Up in Mary's Attic" for the same territory.

"Humoresque" on Broadway

Fannie Hurst Story at Criterion in New York City

"HUMORESQUE," Fannie Hurst's story of mother love, done in motion pictures by Cosmopolitan Productions will be shown for the first time at the Criterion theatre, New York, beginning Sunday, May 30th, where it opens for an indefinite run.

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Criterion theatre, who selected "Humoresque" as his next attraction, made the following statement.

"If everybody feels as I do, they will like 'Humoresque.' As a portrait of a fascinating part of New York's and therefore America's life; as a portrait of the spirit of the ghetto, it surpasses any cinema description of that field that I have ever seen.

"The sympathetic drawing of the Jewish character with its strength, its meekness, its idealism and its proverbial love of all that is of the family, is interpreted by the actors with a skill that makes me believe they have lived and breathed in the spirit of that race.

"As I sat and watched Miss Hurst's effort on the screen, I felt that I was seeing my own youth revealed; the never ending struggle for an education, in my case musical, as in the case of the hero of this picture; the recurrent sacrifice of the Jewish mother that her child may have the place denied to her and the crusty old father who protests against these sacrifices and labors even more than she to see that the sacrifices are made possible.

"As I saw myself in the photoplay so will thousands of others see themselves. The picture is great because it reflects reality."

Hailed by some critics as the logical successor to "The Miracle Man," "Humoresque" was originally published in Cosmopolitan Magazine where it was read by more than 5,000,000 people. In the screen version, Alma Rubens, the featured player, is supported by a splendid cast of players including Vera Gordon, Dore Davidson, Gaston Glass, Miriam Battista, and Bobby Connolly. Vera Gordon, who plays the role of the Jewish mother, will be remembered for her fine work in such stage productions as "The Gentile Wife" and "The Land of the Free." Dore Davidson has been an interpreter of Shakespearian role and other dramatic parts for more than a quarter of a century, and Gaston Glass has had wide experience in the playing of juvenile roles. Miriam Battista and Bobby Connolly are among the best known child players in the country. Miriam even now is in "Florodora" in New York. The scenario was done by Frances Marion, famous for her Mary Pickford scenarios, and Frank Borzage is responsible for the direction.

"Humoresque" is the story of sublime mother love, of a poor Jewish mother who rises to the extreme of sacrifice so that her son may develop his latent musical talent. The consensus of opinion of those who have seen it at a recent private showing is that it has more pathos than "The Music Master" and more humor than "Potash and Perlmutter." All through the picture is evident the spirit of the old adage "God could not be everywhere and therefore He made mother." That is the keynote of the picture, the beacon light that guided Frank Borzage in his masterful direction.

A story of universal understanding and appeal, treating of a theme that knows nothing of the narrowness of creed, color, race, language, or social strata, "Humoresque" is described as a picture that will never be forgotten because mother love is forever living.

An interesting moment in "Humoresque," a Cosmopolitan production

Albert Smith Returns East

Especially Pleased with Interest Shown by Famous Authors in Screen

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has returned to New York after a ten weeks' stay in Hollywood, where he combined a rest with work in the production plans for his company's western studios. Mr. Smith also completed "Hidden Dangers," new serial, in collaboration with Cleveland Moffett, famous fiction writer, who went West at the same time. This serial is now being produced with Joe Ryan and Jean Paige in the leading roles.

Mr. Smith's plans for Vitagraph include the production of specials from books by well known authors for release at regular intervals. "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," by James Oliver Curwood, has just been completed by Director David Smith, who is now preparing another Curwood story for the screen.

Another special adapted from "Trumpet Island," by Gouverneur Morris, is being completed at the Hollywood studios under the direction of Tom Terriss. Marguerite De La Motte and Wallace MacDonald head the all-star cast. Earle Williams will continue to make his features in Los Angeles, Mr. Smith announces, under the direction of Chester Bennett.

In interviews granted to newspapers on the Coast before leaving for New York, Mr. Smith spoke chiefly of the problem of obtaining stories for the screen something that has not yet become a serious obstacle to Vitagraph because of its large purchases of rights to standard fiction classics and plays, it is stated.

He says that the altered attitude and growing interest shown by famous authors toward motion pictures offers a promising future to the industry.

"They are learning to write action, not merely words," said Mr. Smith. "Authors of the greatest art and skill have now discovered that a thousand words of description can be duplicated in a few seconds on the screen; also that characters must be doing something all the while in front of these beautiful backgrounds."

Mr. Smith has written nearly a score of serials and numerous other works for the screen and has had as collaborators some of the best fiction writers. And he thinks that the new attitude of standard writers is the best step forward in motion pictures of the past year.

Roland Serial Will be Finished on Time

Despite several days of practical idleness imposed upon the Ruth Roland Company by the recent railroad strikes, which made it impossible to film a number of railroad scenes called for by the script, production of "Ruth of the Rockies," the fifteen episode serial in which Ruth Roland is to make her seventh appearance as a Pathe star, is still up to its time schedule and it appears certain that the picture will be completed before August.

While the Ruth Roland unit is working at the Astra studios, in Glendale, Pathe's other West Coast producing company, making the serial in which Charles Hutchison is to star, is at the Brunton studios.

Hope Loring Has Man-Sized Job on Coast

Hope Loring, a slip of a girl, has one of the hardest, man-sized jobs in the entire motion picture industry.

She is production manager of serial, western and short reel features at Universal City and has complete charge of six of the most important producing units at the big studio. Her job entails the selection of stories for six stars, the arduous task of keeping six directors "shooting" on schedule and the thankless business of passing final judgment on the films when they are ready for the screen.

Metro Changes Its Schedule

"The Best of Luck" Will Be the First Out of Drury Lane Plays

UNDER a rearrangement of its releasing schedule, Metro Pictures Corporation returns to its original intention of issuing "The Best of Luck" as the first of its five all star picturizations of famous Drury Lane melodramas. "The Best of Luck" was the first of this quintet to be put in production, but suffered a slight delay in the making by reason of the extra time required in shooting a series of submarine scenes.

These scenes under water, photographed with the aid of a diving bell, sub-surface lights and other elaborate paraphernalia, have been finished to the entire satisfaction of Richard A. Rowland, president, and other officials of Metro, who, after viewing "The Best of Luck" at a private projection declared it in every respect worthy of the distinction of being the first of the Drury Lane plays to reach the public.

Kathryn Adams, Jack Holt, Lilie Leslie and Fred Malatesta are featured at the head of the all-star cast interpreting "The Best of Luck" for the screen. Miss Adams was selected for the role of Leslie Macleod, an intrepid Scottish girl because of her willingness and ability to undertake a number of thrilling stunts which placed her in grave peril more than once during the filming of the production, it is stated by Metro in the following announcement.

"For instance, in the course of unfoldment of the plot of 'The Best of Luck,' Miss Adams makes several airplane flights; she rides a high-powered motorcycle at night at breakneck speed, winding up by dashing madly across a narrow suspension bridge that spans a chasm; she submerges in an undersea craft and engages in a terrific physical conflict with Fred Malatesta in one of the tremendous scenes of the melodrama."

Holmes Sails to Take More Travelogues

Burton Holmes, author, lecturer and creator of the Paramount Travel pictures bearing his name, sailed recently on the Royal George for Cherbourg as the initial step of another film expedition. Mr. Holmes' first destination is Jerusalem. From Jerusalem he will travel to Constantiuople, and possibly Spain, Italy and Switzerland.

Robert F. Rodin Resigns from Universal Staff

Robert F. Roden, assistant to John C. Brownell, Universal's scenario chief, has resigned to devote his time to the writing of original stories, continuities and reconstruction work. His resignation was reluctantly accepted.

Prepare Campaign for Summer Season

H. H. Buxbaum, manager of Famous Players-Lasky's New York exchange, is out to annihilate the jinx that besets the show business when the torrid summer begins to exert a depressing effect. Here's what he plans to do, as he himself describes it. During July, the New York exchange will conduct an intensive sales campaign to bring Paramount-Artcraft pictures to every house in the territory. Exhibitors, he says, will be given the chance to make up for skipped bookings and to play especially big productions that they were obliged to pass up earlier in the season owing to previous engagements for those pictures.

"Forbidden Trails" Fits Fox Star Perfectly

In the selection of "Forbidden Trails" as the second vehicle for his sensational new cowboy star, Buck Jones, William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, exhibits a consistency which, if adhered to, should insure the popularity of all films in which this star appears.

"Forbidden Trails" in novel form is said to have surpassed in sale many other works by the same author, Charles Alden Seltzer—whose stories of life in the open West are said to be probably more in demand by readers of popular fiction and by editors of magazines and periodicals than those of any other writer of similar tales.

Hampton Picturizing Sinclair Novel

"The Money Changers," by Upton Sinclair, is the latest novel to be put into photoplay form by Benjamin B. Hampton. An elaborate production will be given the story and the cast includes Slaire Adams, Roy Steward, Robert McKim, Audrey Chapman, George Webb, Betty Brice, Frederick Starr and Harvey Clark. Hugh Ryan Conway will direct. Upton Sinclair was a recent visitor at Los Angeles and witnessed the filming of his story.

Lewis Gasnier Directs "Kismet"

FOR the first time since organizing his own company, Louis J. Gasnier, head of Gasnier Productions, will take up the megaphone and assume personal direction of the coming production of "Kismet" with Otis Skinner in the leading role. Announcement of Mr. Gasnier as director for "Kismet" is made by Robertson-Cole, which will distribute the picture.

Mr. Gasnier, who was schooled under French masters of the motion picture before he left France, and who later directed American stars, has been in New York in conference with Mr. Skinner, who appeared for three years in "Kismet," in which he had the central role of "Hadji." All arrangements have been made, and the director and the famous stage star will soon begin work.

Exhibitors who were interested by the Robertson-Cole announcement that it has engaged Mr. Skinner to appear in "Kismet" will feel a further satisfaction in the contract obtaining the services of Mr. Gasnier as personal director. They can sense the possibilities of a production personally directed by Mr. Gasnier from the artistic successes of such pictures from his studio as "The Beloved Cheater" and "The Butterfly Man."

"There has never come to my attention a stage play more adaptable for motion picture purposes, than 'Kismet' says Mr. Gasnier. The story with its delicate blending of light and shadow, its wealth of delicious humor, and the whimsical figure of 'Hadji' the role played by Mr. Skinner, has tremendous screen value. Then too, the rich, picturesque atmosphere of the land of the Arabian Nights, merely hinted at on the stage, will on the screen find an expression that will enhance the dramatic value of 'Kismet,' to an extent undreamed of by those unfamiliar with the magic power of the motion picture.

Louis J. Gasnier, who will film "Kismet" for Robertson-Cole

"In producing 'Kismet' every care will be taken to give only of the best. Players of unquestioned ability will support Mr. Skinner, and if necessary we will send to New York for those who appeared in the original play.

"Great attention will be paid to the detail and we have already secured the services of Mr. Frank Ormston, one of the leading art directors in motion pictures, who is now on his way to New York with a view to securing some unusual material for settings to be used in 'Kismet.'

"In every way possible, the main purpose in transferring this beautiful play to the screen, will be to retain the spirit and the soul of its theme, in which Mr. Skinner has scored the greatest triumph of any actor on the legitimate stage," concluded Mr. Gasnier.

Mr. Gasnier is declared to be peculiarly fitted to supervise the filming of "Kismet," because of his vast knowledge of both stage and screen technique.

Lloyd Starts on Second Series

HAROLD LLOYD has started on his second series of multiple-reel comedies for distribution by Pathe. The inauguration of this new series by its star comedian, under the auspices of the Rolin Film Company, is made the occasion of the publication of a lengthy statement by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The statement which follows announces the title of the first of the new series as being "High and Dry."

"Having risen to a preeminent position as the leading exponent of the better type of comedy, in two reel productions, through the sheer merit of high ability and the big financial outlay for production by the Rolin Film Company, Harold Lloyd has embarked on his second series of multiple reelers for distribution by Pathe. High and Dry is the title of the Lloyd production that will inaugurate the second series of mirth makers. If further proof of Lloyd's claim to leadership in the field of comedy is needed, it will be supplied by "High and Dry," which, from all reports received from the Rolin studio, where the picture has just been completed, is the best comedy Lloyd has ever made.

"While the books for the second Lloyd series have virtually just been thrown open, it is a foregone conclusion that almost every prominent exhibitor in the United States will be playing them. Already such outstanding names as the following are subscribed among the exhibitor patrons of the new Lloyds; Eaton of the Strand, Bowes of the Capitol, Clemmer of Seattle, Shea of Buffalo, Harris of Pittsburgh, Gustanovic of Cleveland, Moss of New York, Talbot of Denver, Keith of New York, and scores of others as representative in their territories as are exhibitors just named.

"This list is growing daily. The thousands of exhibitors who played the first series of Lloyds, which marked among their number such impressive comedies as Bumping Into Broadway, Haunted Spooks, Captain Kidd's Kids, His Royal Slyness, From Hand to Mouth and An Eastern Westerner will be augmented by other thousands."

"Lloyd has reached the stage in his meteoric career where his comedies are being featured over all other attractions. His definite value as a box office attraction has been established, and exhibitors throughout the country are capitalizing this fact. The reason for this definite box office value is set for in a remarkable tribute paid to Lloyd in the following editorial comment appearing in the New York Times of Sunday, May 9th.

"Those Harold Lloyd comedies—a word about them. Spectators have seen His Royal Slyness, Haunted Spooks, and last week An Eastern Westerner. There has been more laughter and better laughter on Broadway because of them than there would have been otherwise. Because they are funny. Every one must admit that, those who are bored by the usual slapstick as well as those to whom horse play is the soul of wit. Some parts of them may be a little too full of the rough and tumble stuff to amuse one class of spectators, and some parts may be too subtle to provoke the guffaws of another; but take any one of them, and just as soon as it becomes too dully violent to be amusing for some, Mr. Lloyd will do something as witty as absurd, and they will laugh in boisterous relief; and then, just as the comedy is becoming so delicate that others are beginning to wonder what it is all about, Mr. Lloyd will smash something or break his neck and they will roar in blatant satisfaction.

First Run Exhibitors Book "Sagebrusher"

Frank L. Newman, the Kansas City showman, and his general manager, Milton H. Feld, have booked for immediate presentation at their Regent theatre Benjamin B. Hampton's Emerson Hough production, "The Sagebrusher," the W. W. Hodkinson release.

Ben Blotchy, Hodkinson Kansas City manager, also contracted for a late May week's showing of "The Sagebrusher," with G. L. Hooper, managing director of Topeka's big first-run house, the Isis. Other big Kansas first-run bookings on "The Sagebrusher" are the Electric, Emporia, the Star, Newton, the Empress, Fort Scott and the Novelty, Winfield.

Billie Burke to Star in Paramount Comic

Marking a departure from the type of plays in which she has been appearing, the first picture which Billie Burke will make under her new contract for a series of Paramount Artcraft pictures will be "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," an adaptation of the comedy by Clyde Fitch, which, when it was first produced in 1902, was one of that season's successes.

"Movie Madness" Next Hallroom Comedy

The moving picture craze will be the basis of the theme for the next Hallroom Boys comedy, according to an announcement from Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of these two-reelers. "Movie Madness" is the title of this picture.

Metro Exchangemen Meet

District and Branch Managers Convene in Annual Get-Together

THE annual get-together convention of the branch managers, district managers and special representatives of the Metro Pictures Corporation was held this week in New York City. The gathering met at the Hotel Astor on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 26th, 27th and 28th, for a discussion of the company's plans and to render reports on the year's business; while for the leisure hours of the visiting film salesmen, Metro prepared an elaborate schedule of entertainment designed to appeal to every taste.

Metro's announced determination to maintain its high place in the industry this year was the keynote of the convention. The company's production policy and general expansion will also be outlined to the visiting exchange managers, and subjects such as the contemplated new booking arrangement and adjustment of the flat rental versus percentage system of releasing pictures was threshed out in detail.

The district and branch managers attending the convention were S. A. Shirley, district manager, Chicago; W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager, Cincinnati; H. Lustig, district manager, Los Angeles; and branch managers, C. E. Kessnich, Atlanta, Ga.; E. A. Golden, Boston, Mass.; Charles Stern, Bangor, Me.; H. W. Kahn, Buffalo, N. Y.; J. S. Grauman, Chicago, Ill.; C. E. Almy, Cleveland, O.; W. W. Rowland, Cincinnati, O.; L. Bickel, Dallas, Tex.; Fred P. Brown, Denver, Col.; C. H. Townsend, Detroit, Mich.; S. L. Haldeman, Kansas City, Mo.; B. F. Rosenberg, Los Angeles, Cal.; A. Fischer, Minneapolis, Minn.; William Scully, New Haven, Conn.; W. J. Conners, New York; C. J. Briant, New Orleans, La.; S. Julien Josephson Signs Up

F. P.-Lasky Puts Scenarist of Past Successes Under Contract

JULIEN JOSEPHSON, one of the most successful scenario writers in the profession, has just been engaged under a long-term contract to write original stories and the continuities therefor for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Josephson will have his headquarters at the West Coast studio of the organization.

Those who have seen the Thomas H. Ince productions in which Charles Ray starred for Paramount Artcraft, will recall that many of the most pleasing of those pictures were written by Mr. Josephson. These include "The Hired Man," "Bill Henry," "Crooked Straight," "The Egg Crate Wallop," "Hay Foot, Straw Foot," "Playing the Game," "String Beams," "Paris Green," and "Red Hot Dollars." He also wrote "Fuss and Feathers" for Enid Bennett.

Mr. Josephson declares that one of his strongest motives for becoming affiliated with Famous Players-Lasky organization was the assurance that the highest possible quality of production would be accorded his stories. He came to the screen world from the marts of trade, and in the beginning made the same mistake that numerous others have made in their early careers of trying to write on subjects with which he was unfamiliar.

"When," said Mr. Josephson, "I started writing about the small town people, among whom I had been born and bred and with whose world I am so entirely familiar. I found that the producers and the public alike were willing to accept these stories. I intend to adhere to this original idea though I will naturally broaden my scope, and the characterizations I will provide for the stars selected will be of the purely human type, always marked by droll comedy.

Joy Comedy Company Busy in Florida

According to a statement just received from Nathan Hirsh, president of The Aywon Film Corporation, the various members of the Joy Comedy company are busily engaged in Florida completing the series of fifteen two-reel Joy Comedies which the Aywon organization is state righting. In addition to working on the series of two-reelers Mr. Hirsh is having made what seems destined to be a decided novelty in the way of films. His players are now making a five reel travesty on a well known film drama that has recently created a sensation.

Von Stroheim Ready to Start on Another

Erich von Stroheim, Universal director, has returned to Universal City after a month passed in New York supervising the final editing of his latest screen production, "The Devil's Pass Key." Immediately upon arriving at the coast he will begin work upon a new picture, the third under his contract with Universal.

Although he had not made public the details of the projected picture, it is known that it will be laid in Europe.

Louise Glaum Picture Ready This Week

The Louise Glaum company under the direction of Wesley Ruggles has just returned from a week's location trip at Coronado, where exterior scenes for Miss Glaum's latest J. Parker Read Jr. production were "shot." The company are back at the studio finishing the remaining interiors. The picture, it is expected, will be completed this week.

Walter Long Is Cast in Character Part

Walter Long, one of the most talented character actors on the screen, makes his debut in Marshall Neilan Productions, in the third independent production of the young director. Mr. Long, according to the Neilan offices, has one of the most unusual characters in this picture, ever disclosed on the screen.

Associated Exhibs Bar Screen Advertising

With the date for the Cleveland convention drawing near, exhibitorial circles throughout the country are buzzing with conjecture and exchanges of ideas regarding the existing situation. Independent exhibitors are re-iterating their endorsements of such co-operative exhibitor organizations as Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Interest attaches to such endorsements in that the general trend of thought is to the effect that co-operative organizations conducted on a basically sound and equitable plan will also prove weapons powerful enough to swing the balance of control of the situation into the hands of the independent exhibitors.

One of the plans of the Associated Exhibitors' platform that is attracting favorable comment is its stand in regard to advertising on the screen. According to Associated's officers, no picture carrying the Associated trade-mark will contain even the slightest hint of commercial advertising.

Art Titles for "Peggy Rebels" Attractive

The "Flying A" art titles for "Peggy Rebels" in quaint designs are treated like tapestry, the effect being derived from straight line technique which appears to follow the weave of the fabric by parallel lines. The decorative treatment of the subjects is artistic to the last degree, with fade-in-lettering on a soft, harmonious background. The titles are said to eliminate all eye-strain.

Advance Bookings for "The Little Cafe"

According to reports received from Pathe on the early bookings accorded "The Little Cafe," in which Linder again makes his American appearance as a star, the French star has not been forgotten by the American public. Pathe, on June 6th, is to release the screen comedy which was adapted from the great Klaw & Erlanger legitimate success of the same name.

Lillian Gish Leaves D. W. Griffith

Star Signed by Frohman Company for Three Years

LILLIAN GISH, who, during her entire screen career appeared under the direction of David W. Griffith, has severed her connections with the Griffith organization and signed a contract with the Frohman Amusement Corporation, to star in productions to be made by that company for a period of three years. This announcement has upset a tradition which was commonly accepted to be irrevocable, namely, that Miss Gish would, during the balance of her screen career, appear solely under the Griffith management.

The severance of her business relationship with the Griffith organization was determined upon only after numerous conferences between Albert Gray, representing both Mr. Griffith and Miss Gish, and William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. In face of the liberal offer made by Mr. Sherrill and the advantageous terms of the contract Mr. Griffith did not feel that he was justified in standing in the star's way.

Miss Gish was born at Springfield, Ohio, in 1895, and inaugurated her stage career in 1902. In 1912 she was engaged by Mr. Griffith for the Biograph stock and went with him to Reliance-Majestic and Fine Arts. Hers was the featured part in every big Griffith production and exhibitors and the public associate her extraordinary ability and marked service with "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "The Great Love," "The Greatest Thing in Life," "Romance of Happy Valley," "True Heart Susie," "The Greatest Question" and "Broken Blossoms."

The Frohman Amusement Corporation will produce only special productions in which Miss Gish is to be starred, and the entire investiture will be in keeping with the stars reputation. There will be no more than five productions a year; the first production to be commenced between August 1st, and August 15th, 1920, after the completion of Miss Gish's services in "Way Down East," now nearing completion under Mr. Griffith's direction.

William L. Sherrill, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, waxed exceedingly enthusiastic concerning Miss Gish. He said:

"I have been considering every available star in motion pictures and narrowed the selection down to but three, and Miss Gish is the first one of the trio with whom I opened negotiations. I believe that her wistfulness, her unique and inherent dramatic ability places her in a class entirely alone. Exhibitors and the public may expect that we will be exceedingly cautious in picking the vehicles in which Miss Gish is to appear, having in mind the necessity of dramatic productions that will permit the public to have the full benefit of her talents. Miss Gish possesses every qualification that justly stamps her as the most competent dramatic ingenue in America, if not in the world.

"This announcement is merely the first of several that we hope to make within a very short time and each of them will be in line with our announced policy of 'Bigger and Better Productions' and a larger output. We expect to have two producing units in the east and two in the west and whether Miss Gish will start her first picture in New York or Los Angeles depends upon the story in which she is to appear."

New Exchange Opens June 20

EDUCATIONAL Films Corporation will inaugurate its own releases through its own exclusive short subject exchanges with the week of June 20th, according to announcement of E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager. It is expected that by that date the various offices will be able to serve exhibitors.

Associated with Educational in these exchanges and participating in the ownership of the individual territorial offices are some of the most important exhibitor interests which, it is said, assures first run in the greatest group of theatres ever made available for a single company's short subject product.

Even greater stress is placed by Educational on the fact that since these men representing leading theatres will be vitally concerned that the exchanges in which they are interested handle the best product, and also that their association represents a careful study of the product to be offered and the soundness of Educational's plans.

A roster of the interests affiliated with Educational in its various exchanges supplies a list of theatres that, it is said, will be hard to equal. For instance, Robert Leiber, chief owner of the Circle theatre, is interested in the Indianapolis exchange. In Detroit, J. H. Kunsky, owner of one of the finest theatre systems in the whole country, is the partner of Educational in the Michigan exchange. Finkelstein and Ruben who control the theatre situation in the twin cities are concerned in the Minneapolis office.

Pittsburgh's leading theatres are represented by Rowland and Clark. In Chicago Balaban and Katz, who have in the past few years built probably the finest group of motion picture theatres in the entire world, are participants in the exchange ownership, and a great share of the releases will be seen in the Riviera, Central Park and their other fine houses. In Des Moines and Omaha, A. H. Blank, who has invested millions in new houses in the past few years, will be interested. In Louisville, Col. Levy is part owner of the exchange while in Washington and Philadelphia, Harry O. Schwalbe is devoting a considerable portion of his time toward Educational's short reel system.

On the coast Sol. Lesser will share the exchange supplying southern California and Arizona. Mr. Lesser now conducts the Kinea, Los Angeles, and will direct the new three-million-dollar theatre to be erected there. In San Francisco Turner and Dahnken, one of the largest exhibitor organizations in the entire country shares in the ownership. The northwest territory will have the participation of Jensen and Von Herberg. As a matter of fact recital of the names of those having interest in the various exchanges continues to list leading names in each territory.

While all of the signed contracts have not yet reached the New York office the whole exchange system has been completed. Negotiations are now in progress for Canada and these will be closed within a short time. In England Educational is associated owner of Ideal Film Renting Co., Ltd., which has exchanges all through the British Isles while other companies which Educational dominates assures its distribution through the remainder of the world.

"We are announcing the names of the men associated with us," said Mr. Hammons, "because we want to show exhibitors generally that we have made good on our promise to offer them an exchange system that would represent the greatest development in motion picture distribution. We feel that the association of leading exhibitor interests in practically every territory not only assures a perfect sales organization, but guarantees to every exhibitor the best in quality and ultimate in service."

Original Title to Be Kept

To Retain "The House of Toys" as Name of American Film Production

DESPITE some pressure brought to bear for a change of title for "The House of Toys," the American Film Company has decided to retain the title given the novel by its author, Henry Russell Miller. It was argued that the name might suggest a story verging on the juvenile, when in fact it is a dramatic portrayal of the vital, throbbing problems, which enter into every home founded by a young man and maiden who love each other.

"Is your husband true?" is the keynote of the plot, yet, according to the American Film Co., it is not the usual "other woman" or "vamp" story. "With searching analysis the director, George L. Cox, following the lead of the author, who, by the way, is a practicing lawyer in Pittsburgh, Pa., points to the season for the first divergence between husband and wife," states the American Film Company, "and shows how and why the chasm widens between them. The drama shows how a good woman with eyes that see not and ears that hear not, works steadily toward her own unhappiness and the loss of love and home and husband. It shows how a good man, not a profligate nor a sensualist, follows the line of least resistance and builds, not for the girl he swore to keep and cherish, but for another who understood and met his longing for sympathy and home in its highest sense.

"One critic said, Folks who like to see buckets of blood will not like "The House of Toys!" True, in it there is nothing of the melodramatic, nothing sordid, nothing impossible. But there is heart rending emotion, with the tragedy of a broken home averted by a hair's breadth, a hair's breadth which is sufficient, however, for a happy ending.

"A special which all women will want to see," says S. S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Company, "but just as surely it is a special which all men will want to see, for the problems presented are questions of humanity and not of sex, even though sex plays an important part in the beginning and development and ending. It is a constructive drama which holds the audience in tense interest."

Foreign Studio Is Ready

Famous Players Expects to Start "Shooting" in English Plant Soon

THE London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is ready for the beginning of production activities, according to advices received by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. No announcement has been received as to the first story to be filmed, but it is expected that work will be begun in the near future.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has the following to say about its new producing plant:

"The new studio in which Paramount Arteraft pictures will be filmed is hailed by London experts as one of the most complete and best equipped studios in the world. In size it compares very favorably with the largest American studios, sufficient room having been provided on two stages for the filming of five large productions at one time. Every modern convenience for the efficient production of motion-pictures has been installed, and the company of players which will start work shortly under the direction of Hugh Ford will find many features in studio equipment not duplicated on this side of the Atlantic.

"The transformation of an old and dilapidated structure in Islington, which served for many years as the central power-station of a large London electric power company is generally acknowledged as accomplishing the almost impossible. The work of converting the power plant into a modern studio was in charge of Major C. H. Bell, a prominent London engineer, who, it is said, found the task of transformation one of the most difficult engineering feats he had ever attempted. This task was made doubly difficult when the London County Council ruled that the work of reconstruction should be conducted under the regulations required for theater-building instead of those applying to factories. This ruling was at variance with other decisions handed down by the council and added an enormous burden to those already carried by the company."

Pathe Product Sold in Latin America

Francisco di Domenico, senior partner of Domenico Hermanos and Cia of Bogota, Columbia, S. A., has contracted for the Pathe productions for several years to come in the territories of Columbia, Venezuela, Central America, Panama, including the Canal Zone, Jamaica, Guiana, the Lesser Antillies and Hayti.

Mr. di Lomenico said that his organization is already in control of a chain of theatres in Columbia and work would soon be started on several new theatres. The great theatre of the company in Barranquilla has a seating capacity of 6,600, and it is the intention of the owners to increase it to 12,000.

Metro Promises Many Laughs in New Farce

Metro's all-star picturization of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," the boudoir comedy by C. W. Bell and Mark Swai, which ran on Broadway, promises to develop far more laughs than did the original stage production, according to reports from Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, where the production is being made.

Finishing touches are being added to the picture this week. It was prepared for the screen by Miss Mathis and A. P. Younger. W. M. Esmond is the cameraman, and Sidney Ullman designed and executed the special art interiors.

Among the cast are Eugene Paullette, who played in "Fair and Warmer," and Ruth Stonehouse, who plays a dealer in society scandal for a daily newspaper, and Katheleen Kirkham. Both these young ladies, according to reports from Metro, will surprise the fans with a variety of elaborate costumes. Edward Dillon is directing the production.

Mon Randall to Draw Universal Stars

Mon Randall, noted pen and ink artist, whose sketches of motion picture stars are familiar to many fans, is now confining his talents to reproducing the features and characteristics of Universal players.

All future Universal advertising will be illuminated by Randall's drawings, and some unusually brilliant work may be expected from this artist now that he is at work at the studio and able to sketch the Universal stars from life.

Christie Comedies for Educational Release

Scores of congratulations were received during the past week by E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation on acquiring the distribution of Christie Comedies, which was announced last week in the Motion Picture News. Many of these inquired the dates of the first release.

"Kiss Me Caroline" will be released on July 4th. Bobby Vernon is the featured player while the cast includes Neal Burns, Vera Stedman and Teddy Sampson. "A Seaside Siren" is the second production, this featuring Fay Tincher and introducing the Christie Bathing Girls.

Thomas Ince Conducts Picture Tests

Thomas H. Ince is conducting a number of free picture tests in conjunction with the Los Angeles Record and Sid Grauman to obtain material to be cast in forthcoming Thomas H. Ince pictures. This innovation has given marked impetus to the publicity campaign that has been inaugurated for Ince's special, "Below the Surface." On May 15th, it is stated, almost a thousand candidates presented themselves for the tests. Hobart Bosworth and Director Del Andrews conducted the try-outs, which entailed the exposure of seven thousand feet of film. May 22nd marked the close of the tests. The selection of the ten most promising aspirants will follow a review of the film by Mr. Ince.

Goldwyn-Bray Acquires Wild Bird Pictures

A recent visit to New York by William L. Finley, nationally known as a naturalist, has resulted in the Goldwyn-Bray organization's acquiring 16,000 feet of Mr. Finley's motion pictures of wild bird and animal life. The pictures represent the work of Mr. Finley and his wife for the past three years.

The work of Mr. Finley is unique, as few lovers of wild life hunt with the camera. Through his painstaking work, a careful record has been compiled on the motion picture screen of the actual conditions under which wild birds and animals live.

Unusual Exploitation for Brentwood Film

Some unusual angles of exploitation have been mapped out by Robertson-Cole on "The Heart of Twenty," the Brentwood picture, soon to be released, featuring ZaSu Pitts, the distinctive little actress of quaintly human parts.

The exploitation section of the campaign book which has been issued on this picture shows a dozen ways of increasing box office receipts, with a minimum of expense, and exhibitors who give consideration to the plans outlined will certainly squeeze extra dollars into their pockets, say the producers.

Bebe Daniels New Realart Star

MORRIS KOHN announces another leading woman for stardom under the Realart banner. This time it is Bebe Daniels, who has attracted considerable comment lately in leading roles for Cecil B. DeMille productions and with Wallace Reid in several of his most recent pictures.

The new star is the fifth in the Realart gallery. The announcement that she has been signed comes within a few months of the deal by which Wanda Hawley was added to the Realart list and just as the company's sales force had concluded one of the most noteworthy and successful campaigns of motion picture history in behalf of Miss Hawley's first picture.

Announcement of the new star was made by Morris Kohn, president of Realart, to the managers at their recent convention in New York City. "As the end of the first year of Realart's existence draws to a close," said Mr. Kohn, "the actual accomplishment of the aims of the new company begins to develop. We started the year with an entirely new organization, and a limited but brilliant list of productions. Things have developed swiftly and as we approach the threshold of the new year we find ourselves in a position to announce a larger and far more diversified program.

"The addition of Bebe Daniels means a step forward in motion picture production - one which will not be fully appreciated until her first picture is seen. We might have obtained the services of an established star to carry out this new idea we have, but such a course would only have allowed an approximation of what we had in mind.

Bebe Daniels, who will soon be elevated to stardom in Realart pictures

"Changes come swiftly, especially in motion pictures, where the public taste is continually shifting. We have noted and marked one particular movement and have prepared ourselves to anticipate a new demand. The old vampire star has passed, as every one knows, but not without a struggle and not without leaving her mark on the public taste.

"For a time there has been quite a demand for what is known as the 'baby vamp' style of acting. But for the most part that type of production has been unsatisfactory, running to a light and vapid sort that failed to impress anybody. The real product lies somewhere between the two styles.

"Understand me, however, that Realart is planning no backward step to salacious and unclean productions. We have never stood for this type of picture and we do not mean to begin it now. Our eyes are fixed ahead and we can promise exhibitors something that we are confident will strike a new note of popularity.

"We are also confident that we have selected exactly the right person in Bebe Daniels to portray the type we have in mind. Exhibitors who examine her record will undoubtedly discover exactly the same characteristics that influenced our judgment. There is not a star in motion pictures who could have qualified for this job as does Miss Daniels.

"Of course, Miss Daniels has never done precisely this sort of thing before. But her record shows her possibilities. Under the direction and handling which Realart can and will give her, she is bound to meet this promise and that quickly. Here is youth, beauty and ability and with the ideals and strength of the Realart organization behind her Bebe Daniels will quickly become one of the country's most distinguished and distinctive screen artists."

Bebe Daniels has a featured role in Cecil B. DeMille's picture "Why Change Your Wife," which is at present scoring a big success. Almost simultaneously she is appearing as Wallace Reid's leading woman in "The Dancin' Fool." These two important roles combined with her other recent work have served to attract popular attention and approval with almost incredible swiftness.

Metroites Arrive In New York

WITH the arrival of Bert Lytell, star, and June Mathis and Lois Zellner, scenario writers, at Metro's New York studios from Hollywood, the last of the principals in Metro's Western migration of two years ago are back to work at the old stand.

Mr. Lytell, who has just completed his work before the camera in "The Price of Redemption," adapted by Miss Mathis from I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Temple of Dawn," which was done in California under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald, is to take a short rest before going to work on the first of a series of four pictures, which will be made at the New York studios. His brother, Wilfred Lytell, who is playing the leading role in Metro's production of Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriage of Mayfair," adapted by Julia Burnham, came in from Stamford, Conn., where the company is on location, to meet him.

Miss Mathis, who is Director-General Karger's "right hand man," got to work an hour after her arrival in the office next to Mr. Karger's overlooking Central Park.

Bert Lytell, star of Metro pictures, who is fast becoming one of the most popular juveniles of the screen

Miss Mathis heads the scenario department and Metro generally regards her opinion as final in the selection and adaptation of plays. She has just completed the scenario of "Hearts Are Trumps," the latest of the Drury Lane melodramas by Cecil Raleigh, which is under production in California.

Lois Zellner was met at the station by her husband, Arthur, who came to New York in April to assist Maxwell Karger. The Zellners had just bought a house in Hollywood when Mr. Zellner was called to New York. Now the Zellners will be permanently in New York. They came to New York from the South several years ago and started work together in motion picture advertising. Since then each has done more than a score of motion picture scenarios.

Mrs. Zellner's last picture was "A Misfit Wife," an adaptation of Julie Herne's drama. Mrs. Zellner expects the first picture she will scenarioize here will be "Polly with a Past," the George Middleton-Guy Bolton drama which scored such a success in the Belasco production starring Ina Claire on the stage. The Metro production of "Polly with a Past" will signalize Ina Claire's screen debut.

Ida Park Heads Company

Director of Bessie Love Will Produce Under A. Callaghan's Auspices

Ida May Park, for whom a production unit is being organized by Andrew J. Callaghan

ANDREW J. GALLAGHAN, head of the Los Angeles producing company, which is starring Bessie Love, announces this week plans for the formation of the Ida May Park Productions. Miss Park has already been engaged, together with Joseph de Grasse, to direct the second film offering of Bessie Love. The projected formation of an Ida May Park Productions unit, states A. J. Callaghan, is in recognition of the distinguished work accomplished by Miss Park in the adaptation of "The Midlanders" to the screen as the first Bessie Love film for the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc.

The statement of Andrew J. Callaghan regarding the formation of the new producing outfit is as follows:

"The Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., is pleased to announce the projected creation of a new unit to be known as the Ida May Park Productions which is now in process of formation. Officials of this company have long been aware of the distinctive quality of Miss Park's directorial work, and now with the definite results of 'The Midlanders' which is rapidly nearing completion, to confirm our highest faith in Miss Park we are able to take this step as a means of recognition and announce the plans for the organization of her own producing unit.

"Miss Park, in cooperation with Mr. Joseph de Grasse, has vindicated our belief in the rare screen possibilities of Bessie Love. Their photoplay adaptation of 'The Midlanders' brings out the charm and uncommon dramatic ability of the youthful actress in a great big way.

"The unmistakable feminine hand is plainly felt in Miss Love's first Callaghan production. And now she will have the chance to devote her splendid talents and dramatic intuition to production, conceived, developed and directed by herself, productions that might be called 'directors' pictures' in which the play is the thing."

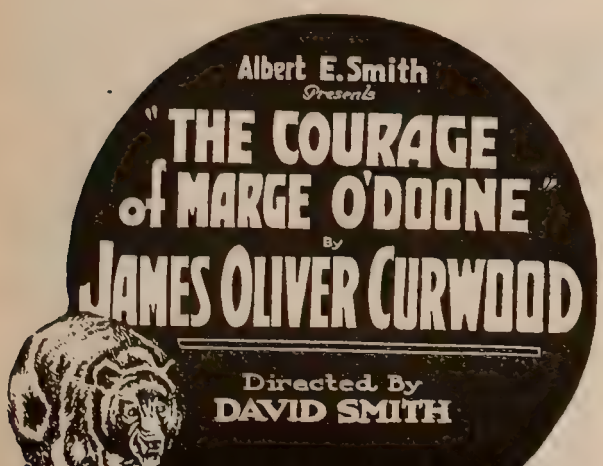
Ray's Choice Pleases Cohan



George M. Predicts Success of Film Version of His Stage Play

GEORGE M. COHAN, the actor-playwright, expressed extreme gratification over the picturization of his well known comedy-drama, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," in a letter this week to Charles Ray, who is now engaged in Los Angeles adapting the famous stage piece to the screen. The Cohan play is the first of the new series of big photoplays in which Arthur S. Kane is presenting the star for First National release.

"It is with the greatest pleasure," wrote Mr. Cohan to the First National star, "that I learn you are now working on the picture version of my play, 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway.' As one of the most popular of my dramatic pieces to reach the screen I am gratified to find the play in such capable hands, with every prospect of reaching the public in a form which does credit to the traditions of the piece and to the favor it has enjoyed.

"I have no doubt that your final results will give to the public one of those distinctly different and high-class film characterizations which do so much to raise the plane of the cinema art in the estimation of intelligent people. It seems to me that the story and action of 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway' are eminently suited to an entertaining and high-standard photoplay production.

"It is particularly gratifying to know that the leading role of my play is being undertaken by a screen actor who enjoys the affection and confidence of his audiences. I can think of no other man now in the films to whom I would rather entrust this stage character of my own creation, which has become, through long theatrical association, very dear to me. Allow me to extend my very best wishes on the photoplay production of 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway.'"

Serial Is Making Progress

Pathe May Advance Release Date of Juanita Hansen Production

PRODUCTION of the fifteen episode serial in which Juanita Hansen will appear as a Pathe star has made such rapid progress at the Seitz Sutdio, where scenes for the eleventh episode are now being staged under the direction of Bertram Millahuser, that it is probable the picture will be advanced on the release chart, and may be issued in August instead of October as originally intended.

"The Phantom Foe" is the finished title designated for the picture, which was written for Miss Hansen by George B. Seitz. The scenario was done by Frank Leon Smith, who wrote "Bound and Gagged" and other Pathe Serial plays.

Juanita Hansen started work on "The Phantom Foe" the first week in January, but though everything was in readiness at the Seitz plant, there was considerable delay at the beginning of the producing because Warner Oland, who heads the cast, had not completed his work in "The Third Eye" at the Astra studios in California. However, Mr. Oland more than made up for time lost, and soon caught up to the rest of the company, which had already made many scenes.

Information from the Pathe Home Office, where some of the early episodes have been shown, is to the effect that the Juanita Hensen vehicle is a mystery romance of the type popularized by George B. Seitz at the outset of his career as a Pathe serial producer.

"Chet" Withey in Ranks of Masters

"GRIFFITH pupils" were at one time numerous enough in the motion picture ranks. And while "Griffith pupils" loved the old master well enough to glory in the description, at the same time there was always the lingering desire to be recognized and appreciated for the good things they themselves were contributing to the advancement of the screen art.

To "Chet" Withey the task of being a "Griffith pupil" was made especially trying. "Chet" gained his early directorial experience in the Griffith lot; absorbed the Griffith art, became a favored member under the Griffith wing, and added his share to the productions that were being praised for their art and succeeding because they were also "made under the supervision of David Griffith."

And then "Chet" reached the point where his name alone was sufficient to guarantee the production that bore it. But here's the rub—and the reason why "Chet" had his sorrows. For no matter where "Chet" went there was certain to be someone who strode up and said, "Mr. Griffith, I want to compliment you on your work in such-and-such a picture. Mr. Griffith, I am a devoted admirer of your art."

It didn't happen only once or twice. But day in and day out—in Los Angeles or on Times Square, "Chet" had either to keep quiet and take the praise intended for Griffith and hear good words for himself only incidentally, or else make explanations that only confused the person talking to him.

For "Chet" Withey's physical resemblance to David Griffith is uncanny. But with the passing of time the similarity of features has been supplanted by a resemblance of a different sort. "Chet", while following his nose in the work of the directorial field, has been establishing a new link of association with the immortal Griffith in the high order of productions that he has been turning out until at the present time the resemblance between these two masters has become a similarity of achievements rather than a likeness of countenance.

A glance at the pedigree of the well-known "Chet" Withey shows that his rise to the foremost ranks of the megaphone artists was not a case of one projected into fame over-night. "Chet" missed none of the rungs in his climb to the top of the ladder, and by the same token he has established with greater security his superiority over some of his less talented fellows whose names have flared into prominence with one brilliant stroke and have as quickly been snuffed by the effects of subsequent mediocre work. "Chet" Withey began his working career as a miner in Arizona. Meagre pay and an ambition to enter fields other than the Arizona mine-districts made "Chet" dissatisfied with his surroundings and accordingly he threw up his job and started for the Coast. He landed in Los Angeles and here began his theatrical activities which were eventually to lead him to his present position of prestige.

Like so many others who have achieved success in the picture game, "Chet" served his apprenticeship on the stage. He took a job as an actor, his specialty being the role of "heavy." "Chet" liked it better than mining, but he was on the alert for something else. The chance came, and he turned to the writing of scenarios. This was more than ever to his liking, and he made considerable success at it. The Fine Arts-Triangle studios at Hollywood were the scene of his earlier efforts. Next he was assigned to do some directorial work. He made good, showed evidences of marked skill and went to it with a vengeance under the guiding hand of Griffith who was then supervising Fine Arts productions. "Chet" had found his sphere at last and to the perfection of his work he devoted all his talents and ability.

Besides Fine Arts some of the older concerns with which "Chet" was associated in the earlier days were the American, Keystone and the Reliance-Majestic. His initial effort as a director for Triangle was "The Devil's Needle," which starred Norma Talmadge and cast Tully Marshall in the opposite role. "The Old Folks at Home" followed and is still recalled by the "vets" as a "walloper." Among the other productions of this period which "Chet" Withey directed were "The Wharf Rat," "Mr. Goode—the Samaritan," "The Village Prodigal" and "Madame Bo-Peep."

He next joined the directorial forces of the Vitagraph company, and among his pictures under the Vitagraph banner comes "An Alabaster Box." Then followed his association with Artcraft, and probably his best known work under these auspices is "The Hun Within." This picture won unusual success and advanced Withey's reputation more than ever. His work for Paramount includes "Maggie Pepper," "Little Comrade" and "The Teeth of the Tiger." More recently he directed "The New Moon" with Norma Talmadge as the star.

And finally comes "Romance" and with it the achievement of something that the wiseacres had long thought could not be done the transfer of a stage play to the screen with scarcely no changes in the action or settings of the original production. Edward Sheldon's famous play "Romance" with Doris Keane in the stellar role had long seemed to be a hard nut for picture producers to crack. The stage play had a long and successful run on the legitimate stage, but how to present it in a screen version offered a serious problem. Here was a story emphasizing unusual characterizations and emotional situations in which dialogue rather than action predominated. For its picture adaptability, the play was looked upon as a poor venture by the majority of producers.

However, "Chet" set to his task with characteristic earnestness. Let the results of his endeavors speak for themselves. Last week the picture was given its premiere at the New York Strand. The general consensus of opinion following its opening is that the screen version of "Romance" is another splendid tribute to the genius of its director. The predominant feature of the picture production is the excellent work of Doris Keane in the leading role but behind her success is the ever visible evidence of a director whose skillful guidance and artful touches are responsible in large measure for the victory of the star and the triumph of the picture.

First National in Deal with British Company

As a result of negotiations which have been in progress for several months, the productions of the First National Exhibitors Circuit will be distributed in the United Kingdom by the Walturdaw Company, Ltd. A contract has been entered into between David P. Howells, Inc., foreign representatives of First National and Walturdaw whereby First National Attractions for two years go to the Walturdaw Company for distribution in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. It is said that the contract aggregates in excess of $2,500,000.00.

Joins the Unity League

Los Angeles Branch Established Includes Prominent Picture Men

ANGLO-AMERICAN friendship was welded in Los Angeles last week by the organization of a Los Angeles chapter of the Unity League, in which more than 100 prominent professional, business and film men were enrolled, it is stated. Arthur Levy, chairman of the national executive committee of the league, announced at the meeting, which was called by Arthur Letts of Los Angeles, that a Unity League publication and news film would be launched to further the "friendship propoganda" of the two nations.

Through the courtesy of R. W. MacFarland, west coast manager of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, scenes at the luncheon and meeting of the organization were filmed for the new film weekly. Cameraman Harold Lipstein of the Mayflower studios was placed at the disposal of the league chairman.

Mayer Snyder of Los Angeles, former Lieutenant-Governor A. J. Wallace of California, Dean MacCormack, Rt. Rev. Joseph H. Johnson, Rev. James Whitcomb Brougher, Senator Frank Flint, managing editors of the Los Angeles dailies, representatives of the Los Angeles Ad Club, film studios and American Legion, were among the notable guests, according to the Mayflower announcement.

Allan Dwan, director-producer, whose features are being presented by Mayflower, has in course of production, an allegorical film, "Friendship," produced on behalf of the Anglo-American movement, which is to be exhibited free throughout the United States and parts of the British Empire.

Chairman Arthur Levy has announced that the Prince of Wales, Lord Northcliff, Frank Vanderlip, Melville Stone and the executive committee of the Motion Picture Industry of America have signified their approval of the plans and purposes of the Unity League.

Saturday Openings Popular

Exhibitors Find Change from Sunday Openings to be Beneficial

SATURDAY openings for the exhibitors running pictures in week-stand localities will become popular among exhibitors, according to Marshall Neilan, who has discussed the matter with some of the most prominent exhibitors in this country. Such exhibitors as the Saenger Amusement Company in the South and Jensen-Von Herberg organization on the West Coast have adopted the policy of opening their shows on Saturday with notable financial results.

In discussing the matter recently, Mr. Neilan said: "I do not wish to be quoted on anything that would indicate that I am telling exhibitors how to run their business. I am a producer and do not pretend to be able to give advice in connection with the exhibiting branch.

"At the same time, I have wondered often why the policy of opening week-stand motion picture shows on Sunday has remained such a universal practice throughout the country. I am convinced that the time is not far distant when the Sunday opening will cease to be such a fixed policy."

Quick Trip to Get Contract

From New York to Los Angeles and Back on Next Train to Buy Story

J. R. GRAINGER, Eastern representative of Marshall Neilan Productions, left Grand Central Station, New York, Wednesday evening of last week, to spend a few hours in Los Angeles and take the next train back to Manhattan, says the Marshall Neilan office.

Mr. Grainger goes to the West Coast to consult with Mr. Neilan and obtain his signature to a contract which involves the picturization of one of the most famous stories of international prominence, it is stated. This is made necessary by the stipulations in an option on this story held by the Neilan organization and which expires May 29th. The demand for this story among film producers is said to be so great that should the Neilan company fail to take advantage of its option, the rights would be closed within a few hours thereafter, according to the Neilan headquarters. Arriving in Los Angeles on Monday afternoon, Mr. Grainger takes the next train back to New York. He will spend seventeen hours in Los Angeles and return to New York on the morning of the 29th, travelling 184 hours out of 201.

Although the title of the story is not made public, it was stated at the New York offices of the Neilan organization, that the subject is a famous novel of international popularity which has had several elaborate stage presentations here and abroad during the past twenty years. Mr. Neilan plans to produce the story in the very near future, taking scenes in several eastern localities in the United States and then staging the major part of the plot abroad when he arrives there next August. Marion Fairfax will prepare the script and has already begun to lay out the work of adapting the plot to the screen. This work in itself is expected to take over a month. As soon as the deal is closed, Harry Ham, Mr. Neilan's foreign representative, now in London, will be cabled instructions to start making arrangements for the taking of what are expected to be the most elaborate sets since "Intolerance."

Hodkinson Analyzes Industry in Pamphlet Issued for Showmen

W. W. Hodkinson has published for free distribution to the exhibitors of the country a pamphlet which he calls "An Appeal to Common Sense." The pamphlet deals in a brief and lucid manner with present conditions in the industry. Mr. Hodkinson's contention is that many of the evils which now beset motion picture theatre owners arise from the fact that the same financial interests control producing and distribution.

Mr. Hodkinson says that under the system now followed by producer-distributor all the picture failures are charged as a debit against the exhibitor, thereby saddling on him the cost of unfortunate experiments. An independent distributing agency forcing the producer to bear the cost of failures on his own shoulders is one of the remedies proposed by Mr. Hodkinson.

"I hope," said Mr. Hodkinson, "that the exhibitors of the country will read the booklet, for it embodies the observations and experience of many years together with the sincere desire to help the exhibitor out of his present difficulties."

Special Service on

Lyons and Moran in "Everything but the Truth"

There seems to be a vogue of five reel comedies which the exhibitor may view as a fashion not liable to exist any great length of time. But while the fashion is popular opportunities are offered for cashing in with these novelties by presenting them in a novel manner.

"Everything But the Truth" is broad comedy, leaving the way clear to all manner of extravagant advertising with free use of "hokem" stunts advisable. The stars, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, are well known to your patrons and you therefore do not need to dwell on their names further than to announce in all your advertising who the featured players are in the film, directing your selling argument to the end of convincing your patrons that the film is of unusual value, with emphasis laid on the fact that it is of multiple reel length. Your attempt should be to bring the production up above the stars in the minds of the public, whereas in any ordinary two reel comedy the thing to feature would be the stars themselves. To do this will require more than the average advertising in all lines. If you run a dramatic subject on the same bill perhaps advisable since many patrons of theatres are not satisfied with an all comedy program devote all your energies to the comedy, relegating the dramatic subject to the place usually given a comedy. Since a comedy appeals almost entirely from the incident and stunts contained, with its story of small value, you should, therefore, play up the business which in your mind will go over at your theatre. It will be necessary to advise your public to some extent concerning these scenes. For this purpose we would pick out the sequences occurring after Billy and Annabelle have been detained at the "lunatic asylum," making sure that your selling talk, whatever form it may be in, makes clear that two sane people are kidnapped by a lunatic who thinks he is the proprietor of a madhouse. Give your people a pretty accurate idea of the sort of trouble your characters get mixed up in through this episode.

For secondary advertising angles you can dwell on the reputation achieved by the stars in the five years they have been presenting comedy pictures, mentioning some of their two reel successes that you think will be remembered by your fans, recall by statement that these players are the originators of the "drawing room" comedy on the screen, suggesting that they have never been successfully imitated, mention the fact that this is their first multiple reel feature and give people a chance to define the quality of the production by referring to the other five reel comedies, such as "Tillie's Punctured Romance," "Down on the Farm," etc.; call attention to the well known players in the cast, among whom is Anne Cornwall, who is being touted as one of the finds of the year and promise many human touches which are not often found in any low comedy and which give "Everything But the Truth" class and distinction.

Mention may be made of the fact that the picture is directed by Lyons and Moran and that the story is by Edgar Franklin, a well known writer for the screen. If you care to take advantage of it, there is opportunity for the use of some snappy subtitles which would attract attention since they have double meanings, and are intended to get their laughs on this basis.

Suggestions for Outside Advertising

Since nothing you may do within reason that will attract attention to the dates you will play this picture will be out of place, the devising of stunts to get your theatre and the forthcoming showing in the public eye is advisable. How far you want to go depends on how well you stand in with the police and whether or not you figure it is good business to put something over on the newspapers.

SYNOPSIS OF "EVERYTHING BUT THE TRUTH"

WILLIAM HERVEY, president of an oil company in financial difficulties, is contemplating marriage, to add further to his difficulties, and to this end is secretly furnishing a bungalow as a wedding present for the wife-to-be. Next door to the Hervey home lives a newly married couple. About the same time that William leaves his office for the new home, expecting to return later to attend a directors' meeting of the company which he heads, Jack Elton, the next door neighbor, is called away for a business conference.

Mrs. Elton, wanting some fresh eggs, decides that the easiest way to get them is to ask William, who has been inspecting his new home and is about to return to his business associates, to drive her out to a farm. She introduces herself and makes her request. With neighborly courtesy, William agrees, and they start for the farm. After touring the countryside in search of eggs, they finally arrive at a house temporarily occupied by a lunatic, who imagines himself the head of a private asylum.

The lunatic imagines that William and Mrs. Elton are patients and directs two men whom he has hired as keepers to confine his "patients" in one of the rooms of the house. Resistance is useless, and the couple are locked in so securely that they are unable to escape until the next morning. Then, to their surprise they find themselves the only occupants of the house.

Jack in the meanwhile has returned to his home, and not finding his wife, instituted a neighborhood search. William's fiance, distracted at his failure to keep a dinner engagement, prepares to attempt to find him. The director of the oil company, angry at William's failure to keep his appointment, has remained in the office over night after having been locked in by the bookkeeper.

After having freed themselves from the abandoned house, William and Mrs. Elton realize that no one will believe them if they tell the truth concerning their night's absence, and decide to manufacture a plausible story.

They return to the Elton home and relate the tale they have agreed upon. Jack, however, becomes suspicious, and his questioning calls for more lies. Then Helen, Jack's fiance, arrives, and the situation becomes more involved. Jack is on the point of shooting William. Helen breaks her engagement and Mrs. Elton is informed by her husband that divorce proceedings will be instituted. The moment is a crisis.

However, a man now arrives who states that he is the caretaker of the lunatic, who, he explains, had escaped some time previously, to be recaptured on the previous night. The lunatic's family have commissioned the man to pay reasonable damages to the couple who had been imprisoned. A check is given for an amount large enough to meet the demands of the stockholders of William's oil company, and all explanations being satisfactory, the picture ends with all parties satisfied and happy.

Complications and everything but the truth makes the picture a comedy hit for the full five reels

Lyons—Moran Five Reeler Good Exploitation Bet

However, a "demented" man stunt would be sure fire so far as publicity goes. Suppose you were to engage a good character actor who could make up as does the "nut" of the picture bringing him in on the train with "trimmings" enough so he would be noticed at the station and on the street.

If you have a body of water in your city which is navigated with any sort of craft larger than rowboats, you might send your "nut" down to the wharfs to pretend that he imagined he owned all the boats in the world. He could walk about view each vessel critically and talk to bystanders about his possessions, etc. If such a stunt is to be pulled good judgment should be exercised in estimating how far he should be allowed to go so as not to get yourself seriously in complications with the police. It perhaps might be extremely dangerous unless you can fix it with the chiefs or some one in authority. If you think you couldn't "fix things" in the ordinary way there would be opportunity in trying to put the story over on one newspaper alone, since as a rule in most cities at least one of the dailies is "in Dutch" with the police and any chance the department would have to show the paper up would be considered a great joke. In this case frame your stunt with the police for the sole benefit of the one newspaper with the other papers tipped off not to use the story. Of course, if the paper which is "framed" does fall all the other publications will carry the story of the "slip" and you will get the publicity.

Another "plant" which would be almost sure of success would be to send your man (not made up as the "nut" of the picture) around the offices of the various newspaper plants to pose as a harmless demented person who thinks he has purchased a newspaper somewhere and is looking for advice and information how to conduct it successfully. Arm him with enough technical knowledge about presses and linotypes, etc., so he could talk fairly intelligently for a few minutes and instruct him to play his part so he would be "spotted" as a "nut" very soon after getting into conversation with the reportorial force which is where should go to get into action. It would be well to frame his story along comedy lines and instruct him to play for the funny side all the time, since this sort of a yarn is always good reading. (Note—Lunatics who did exactly the stunts suggested in both instances have been encountered in the writers' newspaper experience and therefore these stunts can not be called "wild").

If you have a lunatic asylum in your city you could probably be the means of getting some stories across from interviews with the superintendent who could relate the queer delusions his patients have, all of which can be tied up with your picture and its crazy character.

For window displays the grocery stores with the egg idea of the picture suggest some possibilities although they really would be rather far fetched.

In the matter of lobby decorations plenty of stills showing scenes from the production with your paper driving home the fact that the production is a five-reel comedy, etc., offers the best possibilities

Newspaper Displays and Copy

For your newspaper displays the novelty of a five-reel slap-stick comedy, promising action, and a laugh fest is essential. Your catch lines and selling talk should be written in a semi-comedy vein with an attempt to conceive clever wording. A hint of the spice in some of the titles may be used but with discretion. It might be well to state that the offering has no bathing girls and that all the players wear clothes. For cuts we would select those in which the "nut" appear and therefore have an opportunity to tie-up the lunatic and his "asylum" to the selling talk of our display. If you use stock cuts which may be obtained from the exchange, two of which are reproduced for your inspection, you will, of course, follow out the angle of exploitation suggested by the cuts themselves. A teaser campaign would not be out of place on this subject based on the "liar" idea. For instance if you were to run small cuts with the word "Ananias" engraved in a scraggly hand it would get attention. Later a line saying "told everything but the truth" could be added. Later your display ads could carry the title of the picture "Everything But the Truth" in big type with the word "Ananias" as a catch line.

Readers and text matter for the movie page should emphasize the five-reel part of the comedy, with reference to the lunatic and what he did to the characters of the story, which led to the telling of everything but the truth with the general angle used in the display matter to the fore.

Billboards and Paper Displays

There has been prepared for your use an exceptional lot of good paper for this production. Liberal use of this paper is advised with the selections of style varied. If you use slides begin running them well in advance of your showing featuring the five-reel part of the offering.

Press Notice Stories

The apparently necessary lie when the truth seems not plausible and a lunatic who thinks he is the proprietor of an asylum threatens to destroy the happiness of both a married and engaged couple in the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran five-reel comedy feature "Everything But the Truth" to be shown at the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning, but it also furnishes more genuine amusement for theatre goers than anything released for a long time.

Eddie Lyons, as the young president of the oil company, about to be married to a pretty blonde, and Lee Moran, as a newly married young business man, are said to give comedy portrayals of which their past performances have been merely a promise.

They have surrounded themselves with a splendid company, chief among whom are Anne Cornwall as the young wife, Katherine Lewis as the jealous fiancee, Nelson McDowell as an escaped lunatic, Willis Marks as a faithful bookkeeper, and Elizabeth Witt as a meddling aunt.

"Everything But the Truth" is the title of one of the season's feature comedy successes, a five-reel production in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are appearing at the ———— theatre for a ———— engagement.

Lyons and Moran would rather keep an audience chuckling throughout a picture than giving way to an occasional laugh and then lapsing into a quiet state of boredom. The plot of the coming film comedy is built around a young married couple living next door to the suburban bungalow which a prospective Benedict has Thumb-Nail Theme — The story of two newlyweds and an engaged couple whose happiness is threatened by a little fib which gives an innocent adventure the appearance of an irreparable wrong.

The unmarried man gets into what seems like a hopeless tangle when an escaped lunatic holds him and his neighbor's wife prisoners all night in a deserted farm house. The truth of the whole matter is so unusual that they are afraid to tell the frantic husband what really happened when they escape the next morning. The difficulty with which the situation is cleared up is the basis for many laughs. The two stars are supported in the photoplay by Anne Cornwall, Katherine Lewis, Willis Marks, Elizabeth Witt, Nelson McDowell, and other capable comedy artists.

"Everything But the Truth" is the alluring comedy title of the five-reel feature picture which is being shown at the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement.

Mirth and laughter are the only things to consider if you see this picture which comes heralded as one of the few really funny multiple reel comedy pictures ever made and classing with "Tillie's Punctured Romance" as entertainment, although "Everything But the Truth" is not slap-stick.

The stars of the picture are Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran who are supported by Anne Cornwall, Katherine Lewis, Nelson McDowell, Willis Marks, Elizabeth Witt, and other popular screen players.

The story concerns two young couples, one of them engaged and the other newly married. The bride and groom have a little suburban love nest next door to the bungalow the prospective Benedict has prepared for his future wife.

Their affairs seem hopelessly tangled when the unmarried man and his neighbor's wife are held prisoners all night in a deserted farm house by an escaped lunatic. The true story sounds so improbable that they invent another. It is soon punctured and more falsehoods have to be told. There are many laughable incidents in the mix-up before everything is satisfactorily explained.

SHORT READERS FOR PROGRAM AND PAPERS

Anne Cornwall, the petite comedienne who scored such a success in support of Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead," is playing the leading feminine role in "Everything But the Truth," the comedy feature starring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, to be seen at the ——— theatre next ———.

In "Everything But the Truth," coming to the ——— theatre next ———, Eddie Lyons plays the part of a young man about to be married, while Lee Moran appears as a newlywed about to be separated from his bride for the first time. The story is by Edgar Franklin and said to one of the most amusing photocomedies produced in some time.

The names of Lyons and Moran, to theatregoers are synonymous with laughter and good cheer. They have been appearing in one and two-reel pictures for years. Now they have begun the production of big comedy features. The first of these, "Everything But the Truth," is announced for next ——— at the ——— theatre.

Nelson McDowell, who plays the role of the physician in "Everything But the Truth," the big comedy feature starring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, studied medicine at the Northwestern University of Chicago and has lectured before leading colleges. "Everything But the Truth" will be shown at the ——— theatre next ———.

An educated rooster and an equally well-trained hen figure in one of the comedy scenes in "Everything But the Truth," the Lyons and Moran feature booked for next ——— at the ——— theatre. The story is by Edgar Franklin and attracted considerable attention when it first appeared in a popular magazine

For their first five-reel comedy feature, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have taken "Everything But the Truth," a popular magazine story by Edgar Franklin and adapted it to suit their breezy personalities and snappy methods. It is one of the laughing hits of the year. It will be shown at the ——— theatre next ———.

How a plausible fib, told without malice, because the truth was unbelievable, created a mountain of trouble from a mole hill, is shown in "Everything But the Truth," the newest comedy feature of the year, starring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran and announced for ——— at the ——— theatre. This is the first of a series of comedy features to be produced by these favorite fun-makers.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the favorite comedy stars of the screen, whose one and two-reel fun-fests have been popular features for years, are now making five-reel productions. Their first big comedy offering, "Everything But the Truth," will be shown at the ——— theatre next ———.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran who, for the past five years, have been providing movie theatregoers with hearty and wholesome laughter without resorting to horseplay or slap stick methods, will appear in their first big Universal comedy feature, "Everything But the Truth," at the ——— theatre

The action of the entire story told in Lyons' and Moran's newest comedy feature, "Everything But the Truth," now on view at the ——— theatre, covers only eighteen hours; but there is action, excitement and laughter enough in that time to keep the audience thoroughly happy and amused throughout its presentation on the screen

---

Clean, clever comedy has always been the slogan of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Now that they are producing five reel comedy features they have not changed their recipe. In "Everything But the Truth," in which they are appearing at the ——— theatre, they combine an interesting story with good acting and clever direction

---

One of the most amusing comedy types seen in a motion picture in many months is Nelson McDowell, who plays the role of the insane doctor with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in their laughing feature, "Everything But the Truth," at the ——— theatre According to the management, the actor is a real physician, who received his degree at the Northwestern University of Chicago.

Edgar Franklin's humorous story, "Everything But the Truth," which was so well liked when it appeared in magazine form some months ago, has been utilized by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as the basis of their first comedy feature, now being shown at the ——— theatre.

In "Everything But the Truth," the offering at the ——— theatre, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran demonstrate that laughter can be created in immoderate quantities without resorting to buffoonery or horseplay In this story by Edgar Franklin the two comedy stars provoke mirth by legitimate means. They are supported in their presentation by an excellent company of fun makers.

Never convict a man on circumstantial evidence or suspect your wife because appearances are against her. In "Everything But the Truth," the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy now being shown at the ——— theatre, there is a lesson for every young married couple. The production is frankly intended to provoke laughter, but it also succeeds in teaching a lesson

Although Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are sufficiently capable of carrying any comedy to success, they do not depend on their own efforts entirely to make "Everything But the Truth," at the ——— theatre, an unmistakable hit. Surrounding them are such competent players as Anne Cornwall, Katherine Lewis, Nelson McDowell, Willis Marks, Elizabeth Witt and many others

---

The many admirers of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, creators of "Comedies of Class," whose first big feature, "Everything But the Truth," is now being shown at the ——— theatre, are finding these clever players more amusing than ever in their newest starring vehicle Clever acting makes the comedy a decided success.

To celebrate the fifth anniversary of their first appearance in screen comedies, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal's pair of fun flingers have produced a comedy feature, "Everything But the Truth," which at once places them in the front rank of screen entertainers. This is the verdict of all who have seen their latest offering at the ——— theatre.

Special Pictures Gets Burrud Scenics

A series of scenes to be filmed by "Dick" Burrud, the well-known photographer of nature, will be released by Special Pictures as soon as the views are completed. "Dick" Burrud has started with his party from the Mexican border, it is stated, and will travel through Alaska, leaving Vancouver for the snow country about June 1st. Nome is said to be the northern objective of the expedition.

The Sunset Magazine and the Special Pictures Corporation are joint sponsors of the scenic expedition. It is stated that 1,500 newspapers have contracted to reproduce still photographs of the scenes "shot" by the party. Stewart Edward White and Wallace Irwin, the novelists and magazine writers, are expected to join the Burrud party at Seattle

Kohn Representatives Attend Convention

D. J. Chatkin of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., has left for New York to attend a convention of film men Releasing arrangements for the Kohn Productions, which includes two-reelers featuring Grace Sunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling" Bill Jones, will be announced after Mr. Chatkin returns to Los Angeles. The Kohn pictures will probably be sold on a state rights arrangement.

"Isle of Destiny" to Have Showing Soon

Ellis A. Wolff, sales manager of Character Pictures Corporation, announces the completion of their special production, "The Isle of Destiny," by Mack Arthur, featuring Paul Gilmore, Hazel Hudson, and Frank Williams. Releasing arrangements will be announced shortly through the daily press and trade journal and an intensive advertising in New York City and vicinity will precede the Broadway showing.

The length of the picture has not been decided, but it will be presented in its proper length, the producers arguing that neither the public nor the exhibitor pay for their amusements by the foot, but by the quality. "The Isle of Destiny" was taken in Florida and is said to be built upon a theme that will cause considerable comment.

Independent Film to Sell "Lone Hand"

Independent Films Associated will put "The Lone Hand," Richard Kippling's five-reel western, on the state right market for the United States and Canada, according to an announcement just made by Eddy Eckels, general manager. Sol Lesser, it is reported, owns the rights to this picture for California, Nevada and Arizona. The New England, New York, Ohio and Kentucky territories already have been disposed of and Willis and Eckels will distribute the picture in Illinois and Indiana.

Victor Kremer, according to Mr. Eckels, will be the eastern representative for Independent Films Associated, Richard Kippling western representative and Willis and Eckels, Chicago representative.

More Territory Sold on Gump Cartoons

J. L. Mintz, territorial manager of the Gump Cartoons, announces that the following territories have been closed: Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska, Greater Productions Co., Des Moines, Iowa, Kansas City, Mo., Crescent Film Corporation, Kansas City; eastern Missouri; United Film Service, St. Louis, Mo.

Howard Hall Adapt "Determination"

Howard Hall has been engaged to adapt the scenario of "Determination," written by Captain F. F. Stoll, which the United States Photo Play Corporation will produce at its studio in Grantwood, New Jersey. Mr. Hall has been a writer as well as an actor and has had quite a number of Broadway stage successes for a number of years.

Seaboard to Distribute Reelcraft Pictures

Negotiations have just been completed between H. I. Coleman of the Seaboard Film Company, whereby all future releases of the exclusive one and two reel features program of Reelcraft will be distributed by the Seaboard Exchanges in Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md., for their respective territories.

Three New Christie Comics

Bobby Vernon, Vera Steadman, Jim Harrison and Dorothy Devore Star

THREE new Christie comedies, dealing with leap year, matrimonial misadventures, spring house cleaning and college fraternities, present a variety of plots among the new offerings of the Christie studios.

The first of the new comedies in one-reel presents Bobby Vernon with Vera Steadman in "Marry Me." This takes care of the usual leap-year event with Vera in the role of the young lady who drags her recalcitrant loved-one down the street to the license bureau before he has time to say "No." It was directed by Bill Beaudine.

"Neat But Not Gaudy" is the title of another Christie one-reeler with Dorothy Devore and Jimmie Harrison. It deals with the difficulties of a young man who has to masquerade as an interior decorator in order to ease his way into the home of his beloved. All goes well till a couple of amateur paperhangers mess up things till the house is far from neat and very gaudy.

"Eat-a-Bite-A-Pie" ushers Bobby Vernon into a college fraternity with the typical mystic signs of such life. Bobby is disclosed, breaking away from the hazers in a suit of pajamas, carrying an umbrella and alarm clock on the main thoroughfare. In such guise he reaches the house of his college sweetheart. Lucky for him the girl's father belonged to the same fraternity and saved the day for Bobby. This comedy was written by Jack Jevne and directed by William Beaudine.

Benny Leonard Serial Nears Completion]

Word comes from the Coast that the last episodes of the Hallmark serial "The Evil Eye," by Roy L. McCardell, starring Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, are now nearing completion and that the company, which includes Supervising Director Wally Van, Director J. Gordon Cooper, Stuart Holmes, Ruth Dwyer, Mme. Marstini and others will soon return to New York.

The company left for the coast last February, after filming the Wall street scenes in New York city, and has been there ever since, filming the remaining episodes.

Allied Productions Co. is Organized

The Allied Productions Co. was recently organized for the purpose of acting as distributors of independent productions and to finance the production of pictures and featuring of stars which are first indicated by independent exchanges, as being their choice and which they will purchase immediately. Just recently H. M. Owens, general manager of the Allied Company, completed a visit of all the exchange centers at which time State Right buyers were consulted relative to the character of pictures they desired most and in connection with which they would make tentative contracts for their respective territories and as a result of this the company has now ready for release five different series of pictures, details of which will be announced at a very early date. It is the intention of the Allied Production Co. to act as medium of supply of good pictures for the independent exchanges.

Foreign Publicity Department for Goldwyn

In view of the fact that the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has within the past year out-distanced all previous sales records in its Foreign Sales Department, under Arthur Ziehm, it has been found expedient of late to make additional appropriations for the purpose of maintaining efficiency in handling the exploitation and publicity matter for its customers throughout the world.

Accordingly a Foreign Publicity Department has been formed whose business it will be to comply with requests of the cinema trade publications in the various countries, for special news and feature stories, and supply exploitation and advertising material to its customers. Edgar M. Schoenberg has been appointed manager of the new service branch.

Two States Sold by Capital Film

Capital Film Company have just disposed of the state rights for Illinois and Indiana for its new feature, "Witch's Gold," to the Superior Screen Service of Chicago, of whom Harry Weiss is president.

This new feature which was produced by M. A. Dodge, introduces to the screen Davide, a new star, who is supported by an all star cast including Edward Coxen, Gene Gauntier, Charles Mailes, Spottiswood Aitken, Augustus Phillips and Teddy.

Frohman Seeks Variety of Screen Stories

The Frohman Amusement Corporation announces that they have signed four authors to write a series of four stories for screen adaption. They are Larry Evans, William Hurlburt, Antony Paul Kelley and Richard Le Gallienne.

It is believed by the company that a concern's releases must be along different themes, if they are to prove popular. For this reason they have contracted for such widely different writers as the four mentioned above.

G.W. Schaefer Manages Merit Film Corp.

The Merit Film Corporation, one of the leading independent exchanges in New York, has increased its sales forces in its three branches at New York, Buffalo and Albany. Mr. George W. Schaefer, who for five years was general manager of the New York offices of the World Film Corporation, has taken over the general management of the Merit Film Corporation.

Among the subjects being handled by the Merit Corporation, as announced by Mr. Schaefer, are "The Hall Room Boys," "The Mack Swain Comedies," "Texas Guinan Westerns," "The Romayne Comedies," "Helen Gibson Westerns," "George Ovey Comedies," "The Gumps" (an animated cartoon series), and "Globe Trots" (a scenic series).

Thirty Brady-made pictures, featuring Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, House Peters and Kitty Gordon, have been acquired from Masterpiece by Merit Film for New York state north of Greater New York, it is stated.

Big Demand for Radin Short Features

That there is a demand by State right buyers for short length subjects is evidenced by the amount of business Radin Pictures report they are doing on the "Real Star Dramas" and "Zip Comedies" which they are distributing on a territorial basis.

The "Real Star Dramas" are two-part features starring Grace Cunard, Francis Ford, Ruth Clifford, Mary Fuller and Ruth Stonehouse. Chris Rub and Florence E. Turner are the chief fun-makers in the single reel "Zip Comedies," appearing in separate stories comprising the twelve monthly releases.

Kellerman Completes "What Women Love"

Word has been received from the Coast that the Annette Kellerman company has completed all shooting for "What Women Love," the special production to be distributed and exploited by Sol Lesser, and that it is now being cut and edited.

Mr. Lesser has assembled a complete cutting, titling and editing staff, which includes Reed Heustis of the Los Angeles Evening Herald staff and Vincent Bryan, the well-known song writer. Both are working under the personal direction of Bernard McConville, who wrote the story and scenario of the play.

Hammond Closes Big South American Deal

Guy R. Hammond, who has recently taken charge of the foreign department for the Arrow Film Corporation, has just concluded a deal that is said to be one of the biggest South American deals ever closed in the picture business. The pictures included in this deal are not only practically all those handled by the Domestic Department of the Arrow Film Corporation, but the various subjects that the Arrow is handling only for foreign distribution.

Reelcraft Plans Big Series

Matty Roubert, who will be featured in Reelcraft pictures

FOR the seventh addition to the exclusive Short Subject program of Reelcraft, Matty Roubert, a twelve year old "leading man," has been selected for the star roles. They will not, however, be "kid" pictures, announces Reelcraft.

"It will be a series of two reel feature productions," says P. C. Cropper, president of Reelcraft, "and when I say feature productions, I mean it in every sense of the word from the preparation of the story right on through the cast, direction, production, everything, even to the final advertising accessories for the exhibitors.

"There was a time when exhibitors were skeptical of these juvenile pictures. Only quite recently one of the larger producers undertook a picturization of the Louise Alcott's world famed story of 'Little Women,' the box office statements tell the story of its success," explained Mr. Cropper.

Matty Roubert, the young actor selected as the star for this series is well suited for this series and has a world of experience for his age, beginning his picture career at the age of three with the Vitagraph Company in the three reel super production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," considered a length picture when it was produced nine years ago. Matty attained an international reputation as "The Universal Boy" in a twenty single reel serial, said to be one of the first successful serials. Next he played boy parts with numerous big producing companies such as Pathe, Vitagraph, Edison and the Famous Players Lasky Corporation.

The productions will be in charge of William L. Roubert, the father of Matty, who will also direct the pictures and is at the present time assembling his staff and cast for the pictures which will be produced at Fort Lee, N. J.

Reelcraft has planned to release the productions at the rate of one a month, allowing four weeks for each picture, giving the producing unit ample time to complete a series of pictures, suitable for presentation in every theatre in America.

Distribution will be through the Reelcraft and allied exchanges throughout the United States. Each release will be handled as a feature, although only two reel in length. There will be a complete line of advertising accessories, paper, slides, photos and press sheets. A national trade paper advertising campaign will be prepared for each picture, and due publicity given to each individual release.

The date for the first release will be early in the fall and further announcements will be made later.

Lauds the Garsson Picture

Nat Robbins of Utica Views "Up in Mary's Attic"; Gives Approval

"'Up in Mary's Attic' is the greatest showman's picture I have ever seen. It stands as the one best bet of the year."

This is quoted as the statement of Nat Robbins, head of the Robbins Film Company of Utica, New York, who this week completed a deal whereby he takes over the rights for "Up in Mary's Attic" for all of New York State except Greater New York.

"'Up in Mary's Attic'," Mr. Robbins continued, "contains everything that a feature should contain. There is rollicking comedy without any slapstick, and in addition, considerable dramatic situations, pathos, and heart appeal which will register big with every audience. Besides its many vital selling points, it contains a bunch of the prettiest and most charming beauties known on the legitimate stage or motion picture screen."

Mr. Robbins is quoted as having said that in his opinion "Up in Mary's Attic" would eclipse all records for comedy productions in New York State, and that he had already received more requests from exhibitors for first runs than on any other production he has ever handled.

According to an announcement this week by Murray W. Garsson, president of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., who is releasing this comedy production, featuring Eva Novak and the clever comedian, Harry Gribbon, it will be ready for its first showing in the next two weeks.

The work of re-editing and titling the production, which has been under the supervision of Elmer J. McGovern, is progressing rapidly, and although in an unfinished state, the picture has been sold for several important territories, it is announced.

Bigger Production for Hallroom Comedies

Plans are now under way to make the Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Boys comedies more costly in their production. The Cohns state that the Hallroom Boys pictures will not, despite rumors, be made in five-reel features, but will be continued in the regular two-reel length as heretofore.

Production, however, according to the Cohns, will be on a lavish scale. While the sets and accessories used in the previous Hallroom Boys' comedies were entirely up to standard, in the future special sets will be constructed to give the picture a unique appeal.

Associated Exhibitors Add to Office Space

Rapid expansion of business has necessitated the taking over of additional office space by Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Space has been obtained on the ninth floor of the office building at No. 25 West 45th street. The executives of the Association will remain in the offices on the eighth floor of the same building.

Franklyn Farnum to Do Series for Canyon

Supplementing the announcement that Franklyn Farnum is to be starred in a series of five-reel productions to be produced at the Selig studios, for release by the Canyon Pictures Corporation, Jack Weinberg, president of Canyon, has received word from the Coast that a prominent leading woman and director have been engaged for the first picture, on which preliminary work was started last Monday. The names of the director and leading lady cannot be divulged at this time, says Canyon Pictures, due to the fact that both are working on a big production, which will be completed very shortly.

The first picture will be based on an original story by William E. Wing, who also wrote many of Mr. Farnum's other successes. Mr. Wing is now busily engaged preparing the second story. Mr. Farnum will not stop between pictures but will complete the entire six features in succession.

Buds Open on Screen in New Pictograph

"A Springtime Miracle" is the poetic title given the first subject in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7041, distributed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Nature's slow process of unfolding her blossoms is speeded up by the cameraman as a trip is made through a garden in springtime. Lillies, dandelions and cherry blossoms open before the eyes of the spectator in this interesting and beautifully photographed nature film.

Arrow Reports Recent Territory Sales

The Arrow Film Corporation reports several new sales of "Love's Protege," the Ora Carew feature, as well as the New England territory, New York, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, on "Woman's Man."

The Arrow also reports sales on "Daughter of the Don" for the New England states and the Pacific coast and Northwestern states.

Jans Picture Ready Soon

Rolfe Editing "Madonnas and Men"; Trade Showing Next Week

B. A. Rolfe is now busily engaged in cutting and assembling the Jans Pictures, Inc., special feature production "Madonnas and Men." It is expected that "Madonnas and Men" will be in shape for a private showing for Jans officials and reviewers of the trade press within the next week or ten days.

"Madonnas and Men" is claimed by Jans Pictures, Inc., to be the greatest box office attraction since "The Birth of a Nation." This is the statement made by one of the officials of the organization recently when talking of the company's forthcoming special production to a newspaper representative.

One of the many though minor features of "Madonnas and Men" is the fact that titles modelled in clay will be used throughout. The idea throughout has been to make every endeavor to have "Madonnas and Men" not only different as to story theme and production but also in the manner of presentation and those little details that do so much to make a motion picture stand above the ordinary so-called features.

"Madonnas and Men," which was written by Carey Wilson and Edmond Goulding with the continuity by Violet Clarke, is said to have been made at a cost of a small fortune. It has been slowly and carefully made and the Jans Company claims that it is destined to outdraw at the box office any other motion picture production that has been made within the past year.

Arrow Plans Big Campaign

Will Advertise Two Features and Muriel Ostrich Comedy Series

THE Arrow Film Corporation is planning a big advertising campaign on the following subjects that are now being offered to Independent State Right Buyers, "Woman's Man," featuring Romaine Fielding, and "Love's Protege," featuring Ora Carew, a five reel story with splendid scenery and photography.

In addition to the two features, the campaign will include the Muriel Ostrich two reel comedies. Gilstrom is directing Miss Ostrich and Bide Dudley has written several of the stories. These two reel comedies are being offered to the Independent Buyers for release beginning about June 15th.

Romaine Fielding, who stars in "Woman's Man," will be remembered as one of the best known stars in pictures several years ago. "Woman's Man" is said to be a big picture with some splendid dramatic situations. The story starts in Arizona and trails across the desert into New York society circles. In New York there are some big scenes and settings.

Special Pictures Busy on Short-Lengths

Special Pictures Corporation has started four comedy companies at work at the Special Picture studio at Long Beach. All four companies are producing under the supervision of Ward Lascalle, director-general.

President Louis W. Thompson is allowing each director four weeks in which to make a 1,400 foot comedy to be used each week in the "Comedyart" release of Special Pictures, it is said.

Present plans for expansion indicate that within a short time the Special Pictures Corporation will be issuing three releases of short-reel subjects weekly.

"His Pajama Girl" to Be Advertised Big

C. B. Price Co., Inc., which is marketing Billie Rhodes in "His Pajama Girl" on the state-right plan announce that they are preparing a strong line of advertising matter to accompany this production.

"While the picture is adapted to wide exploitation," remarked Mr. Price, we are preparing an advertising campaign for the exhibitor that will include a wide variety of material. The lithographs will include everything from a one-sheet to a twenty-four sheet. Gravure photos for lobby display of the 11 x 14 and 22 x 28 type are prepared. Very comprehensive and complete plan and publicity material is being prepared and presented in such a way that the exhibitor will find it all of a most useful nature."

Lawyer Suggests Idea for "The Gumps"

Sidney Smith, creator of "The Gumps," is reported to be snowed under with letters from all over the country, containing suggestions for scenarios for the "Gump" cartoons. One of these letters from a prominent Chicago attorney, who requested that his name be withheld, contained the basic idea of the latest Gump picture, "Accidents Will Happen."

The writer vouched for the absolute truth of the story, claiming that he was the original victim. At first he failed to appreciate the humor of the situation in which he found himself, but as time passed he realized how much real fun it possessed.

Title of Fannie Ward Picture is Changed

J. A. Ferrand, New York, representative for the Delac and Vandal Company of France, announce that Fanny Ward will appear in the stellar role of "She Played and Paid," the newest DeLas and Vandal picture to reach the market, instead of "Storm-Swept," as announced last week. The story is a screen adaptation of Henri Bernstein's masterpiece "La Rafale," and the title of "Storm - Swept" was originally given this picture during it production period in Paris. Upon bringing the picture to the American market, however, the producers changed the title to "She Played and Paid," which they consider a more apropos and fitting title for this story.

Big Business on "Love Without Question"

Fred C. Cross, manager of the Goodwin Theatre, Newark, N. J., recently put over "Love Without Question" to exceptionally big business for a full weeks run at his popular playhouse, reports the Jans Pictures, Inc. Mr. Cross reports that the Jans-Olive Tell feature played to large crowds and received the highest praise from both the press and public of the New Jersey City. The opening on Sunday was the biggest in history of the Goodwin Theatre and business increased during the week.

Brockliss, Simplex Distributor, Is Expanding

WHEN men in the motion picture business hearken back to 1910, it is equivalent to men in older industries looking back twenty-five (25) years, for so quickly has the motion picture business grown and so significant have been the events marking each milestone of the progress of this industry, that to speak of men who were outstanding figures less than one dozen years ago, is like speaking of veterans and pioneers, even though the men in question are still comparatively young and in their prime.

During the year of 1910, when Edwin S. Porter, together with others whose names are associated with the earlier and generally exciting days, were producing pictures under the Rex banner, J. Frank Brockliss, was already a well-established film distributor, with general offices in London, and branches in Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Moscow, Petrograd (known as St. Petersburg in those days), Barcelona and Milan.

At that time, he had the foreign rights to the "Imp," "Powers" and other American films, as well as the George Melies, and Le Lion films of Paris, and the Aquila of Italy. It was upon Mr. Brockliss' first visit to the United States that he met Edwin S. Porter and the latter's associates in the affairs of the Rex Company, which meeting finally resulted in the foreign rights to the Rex pictures going to the House of Brockliss, which continued to successfully market these popular productions until the formation of the Universal Film Company, whose policies would not permit the continuation of this foreign arrangement, with the result that the Brockliss Company took over the entire foreign rights of the Lubin Company's product, which at that time was at the height of its popularity, producing some ten thousand feet of negative weekly.

It was at this time that Edwin S. Porter, in a statement to the trade press, spoke of the highly efficient manner in which J. Frank Brockliss had distributed the Rex product and incidentally paid a tribute to the general efficiency of the Brockliss enterprises.

It will be remembered, too, that in 1912, Mr. Edwin S. Porter delegated Mr. Brockliss as his personal representative to negotiate with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt for the picturization of "Queen Elizabeth," a play in which she was touring Europe at that time. That Mr. Brockliss successfully handled this matter is testified to, by the fact that the "Divine" Sarah's appearance upon the screen under Mr. Porter's direction was an instantaneous success.

That these early satisfactory connections and associations were remembered, probably accounts for the fact that J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., is now the exclusive distributor for Great Britain of the Simplex Projector, manufactured by the Precision Machine Company, of which company, Edwin S. Porter is vice-president. Negotiations for the exclusive distribution of Simplex Product in Great Britain were effected during the latter part of 1918, and it can be truly said that the headquarters of the Brockliss Company represent today, the finest type of distribution headquarters and sales organization of any American machine in the United Kingdom.

The general headquarters of the Brockliss Company are located at 167-169 Wardour Street, London, which includes a five story building, situated in the heart of the greatest film district in Europe. In the basement of the Brockliss building are located two theatres used for reviewing and trade showing purposes. Both of these bijou theatres have well-equipped projection rooms, each of which contains a complete and up to date equipment of two Simplex projectors. Buyers thus have an opportunity of viewing the Simplex projectors in operation, and of judging the results on the screen.

The entire first or street floor of the building, houses the general offices of the company, which occupy the greater portion of this area, while the front portion of the first floor is devoted to the showing of all late models of the Simplex. In the large show-windows facing onto Wardour street, are placed various exhibition models of the Simplex with special lighting effects and announcements calling the attention of the passerby to the merits of this famous machine. From time to time, reproductions of the striking, advertisements published by the Precision Machine Company in the American trade press are shown in these windows in much the same manner as are the popular news service photographs in this country and it is needless to say that photographs showing such installations as the "Capitol," and "Newman" Theatres, as well as other profusely illustrated Simplex achievements attract considerable attention and tend greatly to point out to the American exhibitor, the progress being made in English projection room installations.

This House of Brockliss, with its many connections throughout the United Kingdom, has been unusually successful in the distribution of the Simplex, many of the leading theatres in the territory having been equipped with this famous projector. The efficient sales organization is supported by a high grade repair and service department in charge of an expert electrical mechanic, under whose supervision, repairs of all kinds of theatrical equipment are quickly effected.

General offices of the J. Frank Brockliss Ltd., London, England, where Simplex projectors maintain their enviable reputation as one of the leading motion picture projecting machines

Mr. Brockliss is highly gratified with the manner in which the leading theatre circuits of Great Britain are taking hold of the Simplex Product and states that within a few weeks, he will make an announcement concerning Simplex installations and Brockliss activities, that will be particularly interesting to the American motion picture industry and should prove highly gratifying to certain American manufacturers.

New Policy for National

Representative of Releasing Film to Be Received at Studio

A NEW policy of production and release of high-grade features will shortly be announced by C. A. Willat, general manager of the National Film Corporation of America, who is formulating a plan whereby films bearing the National trademark will be available to any exhibitor in America.

"Of course," states Mr. Willat, "we expect to line up with one of the great distributing organizations, but we expect to make a flexible arrangement which will assure us a nation-wide exploitation drive on our future productions. We have made a thorough survey of the present distributing situation and the only hope of the 'independent' producer, to my way of thinking, is absolute harmony with the firm that releases the product of the studios. This harmony I speak of can best be attained by having a representative of the releasing firm always at the studio—a sort of 'Liaison Agent' as is customary in war times—who will present the distributor's angle of a given production throughout the making of a photoplay feature.

"This has never been done before, I believe, but the idea is sound, as the usual difficulties can be overcome as they arise; exploitation schemes rendered concrete with the invaluable assistance of the studio personnel. This 'Liaison agent' would also be asked to approve the story and continuity about to be filmed, with a view of ascertaining general public opinion on vital parts of the former. Anyway, we expect to give the plan a 'try-out' on our next feature."

"Way Down East" to Be Elaborate Picture

According to advices from the D. W. Griffith studios at Mamaroneck, Griffith's screen version of "Way Down East" is going to be a picture production of a most elaborate character instead of simply a character play of New England life. Thousands of supernumeraries are to appear, it is stated.

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

FOX

THE big Fox special comedy has been completed and title will be selected for this by exchange managers, district managers and executives of the Fox Company at their annual convention in New York beginning May 25, as Hampton Del Ruth, producer of this picture and head of the Sunshine Comedies department of the Fox studios, left for New York, May 19, with the edited print of the comedy. The subject, with subtitles consists of 7,700 feet, and may be changed to either a seven or eight full reels production. Numerous changes may be made in the film as Mr. Del Ruth has completed a number of sequences which may replace some now in the edited product. The film has been in the making since early last Fall, thus spending between eight and nine months in the filming besides the preparatory work which was done prior to that time on the story and technical details.

William Farnum and J. Gordon Edwards and company have returned from San Francisco where sea scenes for "The Scuttlers," adapted from the Clyde C. Westover novel, were filmed, and are now working on interiors for this subject.

The Shirley Mason subject, directed by Howard M. Mitchell, "The Little Wanderer," has been completed with the exception of a slight bit of re-editing. Raymond McKee is leading man in this film which is from an original story. "Merely Mary Ann," the well-known stage success, has been selected as Miss Mason's next vehicle.

T. N. Heffron has completed the direction of the Buck Jones film, "Fire Brand Trevison"; and William Russell, now being directed by Scott Sidney, will shortly finish the western picture, "The Twins of Suffering Creek."

F. P-LASKY

FAMOUS Players-Lasky Corporation have purchased the screen rights for the Opie Reed story which was famous twenty years ago, "The Jucklins." This will be a George Melford production, and takes the place of "The Old Homestead," which this director was to make next. Monte Blue and Mabel Julienne Scott have been selected to play in this.

Agnes Ayres, Milton Sills, Jerome Patrick, Theodore Roberts and a number of others have been cast to play in the next William D. Taylor production, "The Furnace," from the story of the English author, Pan, which has been adapted for the screen by Julia Crawford Ivers.

Roscoe Arbuckle is working in the last scenes for "The Life of the Party," and on June 7 is scheduled to begin work in "The Traveling Salesman," scenario for which has been prepared by Walter Woods.

Sam Woods is making the final scenes for the Ethel Clayton subject, "The City Sparrow," and preparations have been made for Miss Clayton to work in "Roseanne O'Zanne." This subject is to be directed by Tom Forman, and the scenario is being written by Mary H. O'Connor, editor of the Famous Players-Lasky department. The cast selected includes Jack Holt as leading man, Mabel Van Buren, Clarence Geldert, Grace Morse and Frederick Malatesta.

Everything is in readiness for the filming of "The Charm School," which will star Wallace Reid; and "Wated a Blemish," starring Bryant Washburn. Tom Geraghty is author of the screen version of the former play, and Sam Woods will direct Reid and company. It is possible there may be some delay on this as Mr. Reid this week received a wire advising him of the critical illness of his father, Hal Reid, the famous playright of New York.

William C. deMille is shortly to start work on the Cosmo Hamilton story, "His Friend and His Wife," and C. B. deMille is doing the final editing on "Something to Think About," and plans to begin a new play early in June.

METRO

MORE definite information concerning the plan of Metro Pictures Corporation respecting stories of the future, as the result of the engagement of Irvin S. Cobb, Henry C. Rowland, Arthur Somers Roache, George Kibbe Turner, Arthur Stringer, Donn Byrne and Lucia Chamberlain, was given out this week by Bayard Veillers, who recently returned from New York after consummating contracts with the authors.

These six writers, in addition to Winchell Smith, Peter B. Kyne, Eugene Walters and Mr. Veiller as staff writers, will each furnish five stories during the year, making a total of fifty screen stories. In addition to this Mr. Veillers is said to have brought stories aggregating a cost of half a million dollars from New York.

The first of the "big authors' series" to be put in the making will be "The Five Dollar Baby," by Irvin S. Cobb. The other authors are all expected on the coast early in June, and then a definite program will be made out for future productions. Veiller's first specially written screen play will be a sequel to his famous stage success, "Within the Law." No title has been given for this story.

Production work at Metro is going forward at almost capacity. Bert Lytell made the last scenes for the East India story, "The Price of Redemption," Saturday of last week, and Sunday, May 16th, left for New York where he will remain for the making of several productions. Lytell has worked at the west coast studios of Metro for the past two years, or since he was first engaged by Metro, and among his successes are "Lombardi, Ltd.", "The Right-Of-Way," and "Alias Jimmy Valentine." While in the east it is possible Lytell will first work in a speaking stage production produced on Broadway by Metro, and following this will work in the film version of the same. On the eve of his departure, the star was presented with a very handsome pigskin traveling case by members of the Lytell producing company. Sol Polito, who has been cameraman for Lytell, accompanied the star east.

Director Edward Dillon is making the final scenes for "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" with Eugene Palette, Ruth Stonehouse and an all star cast which includes Kathleen Kirkham, Josephine Hill and a number of others, and is leaving in a few days for New York where he is to direct Billie Burke for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Director Rex Ingram is continuing on interiors for the Drury Lane Melodrama, "Hearts are Trumps," which has an all star cast; and the Nazimova Company have two or three weeks' work on "Billions," which is being directed by Ray Smallwood.

The Winchell Smith screen play, adapted from "The New Henrietta," will be finished shortly when the remaining scenes, which are those laid in the New York stock exchange, are taken. "The Saphead," as this play has been titled, co-stars William H. Crane and Buster Keaton, and was made under the direction of Herbert Blache.

VITAGRAPH

IT so happens that all of the Vitagraph Companies are working at the big plant on Talmadge Street, Hollywood, this week, all having completed location work at about the same time.

A big setting for the final episodes of the Wiliam Duncan, "The Silent Avenger" serial, is now completed, and the company is working on the fourteenth and fifteenth releases. This setting, representing a town, requires half of the ten acres of the Vitagraph studio lot, and several acres of additional space leased for the period required for filming.

Director Chester Bennett is making the final interior scenes of the Chinese interiors for the Earle Williams feature, "The Purple Hieroglyph." The company has been working nights only in an effort to secure some desired lighting effects. The story is laid on the Pacific Coast and Vola Vale plays the leading role.

Webster Cullison, director of the Antonio Mereno Company, has finished exteriors for the second and third episode of "The Veiled Mystery," and will make interiors at the studio as soon as Pauline Curley, leading woman, recovers from slight injury sustained when struck by a falling stone at Catalina Islands.

Such progress has been made in the filming of "Hidden Dangers," directed by William Bertram, that it is now assured the Joe Ryan-Jean Paige serial will be completed before the first episode is released. The company is now at work on the seventh release.

The Tom Terris Company, consisting of an all star cast, making "The Girl Out of the Sky," are now making the final scenes for this production at the studio after three weeks on location at Long Beach and other nearby cities. The story for this is adapted from the Gouverneur Morris story, "Trumpet Island."

A complete theatre with stage, boxes, proscenium arch, fly galleries, orchestra pit and auditorium, has been built for the coming Larry Semon comedy which is at present known as "The Stage Hand." Lucille Carlisle and a beauty chorus appear in this subject.

Director Jesse Robbins has begun the filming of a novel comedy featuring Jimmy Aubrey known as "The Paper Hanger."

UNIVERSAL

THE scenic expedition sent to Borneo, New Guinea and other lands in the immediate vicinity of these, returned to Universal City last week with thousands of feet of negative film taken during the past year by William Alder, serving as cameraman, and Edward Laemmle, nephew of President Carl Laemmle, who was business manager of the expedition. In addition to the great quantity of film, the party secured many valuable curios, relics and trophies for a Los Angeles museum.

Director Lynn Reynolds has completed "The Red Lane," with the filming of exterior scenes for this Canadian village story in Big Bear Valley. Frank Mayo is starred, and principals of the supporting cast are Lillian Rich, leading woman, James L. Mason, Jean Hersholt, James O'Neill, Paul Weigel, Frank Thorne, Harry Lamont, Frederick Herzog and others.

The actual filming of two feature productions was started at Universal City. One is the coming feature of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran from the musical comedy, "La La Lucille," with Ann Cornwall as leading woman, and the other is "Fightin' Joh," by H. H. Van Loan, which will star Harry Carey under the direction of Reeves Eason. The cast for this besides Carey includes Ruth Fuller Golden, Ray Ripley, Ruth Royce, Like Leslie, Little Reeves Eason, Charles Le Moyne and others.

Work will be started on "In Folies' Trail," a drama to be directed by Rollin Sturgeon upon the arrival of Carmel Myers.

Production work will be started shortly on "Out of the Sky," a circus romance to be directed by Philip Rosen and starring Edith Roberts; and "Hitchin' Posts," directed by Jack Ford with Frank Mayo as star. The latter is a Mississippi river story.

New short subjects in the making are "The Death Trap," a two-reel Canadian story which will be the third of the Jacques Jaccard series "Hoot" Gibson is working in "The Boss of Blue River," and Leo D. Maloney and Dixie Lamont are principals in a short western entitled "Counterfeit." Magda Lane is being featured in a two-reel comedy drama, "A Happy Fool," and Harry Keaton and Mavis Montell are principals in a comedy, "Twin Lizzies," being directed by Joseph McDonough, and Horace Davey is filming "Has this Happened to You?" with Howard Austin and Bartine Burkette. "Off His Trolley," is being directed by J. A. Howe and Thomas Buckingham is completing a satire, "Should Waiters Marry," featuring George Ovey and the Century bathing girls. "A Barber Shop Chorus," is being filmed by James Davis.

Serial companies now working are those making, "The Lightning's Eye," under the direction of Robert F. Hill, and featuring Elmo Lincoln; "The Moon Riders," directed by Albert Russell and featuring Art Acord, and Henry McRae is assembling the oriental made picture, "The Dragon's Net," which features Marie Walcamp. The last scenes for the Eddy Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," have been made.

READ

TWO J. Parker Read, Jr., Productions are nearing completion. One of these is "The Girl Who Dared," starring Louise Glaum which is being directed by Wesley Ruggles. This company has just returned from a week's trip to Coronado, where many exterior scenes were made. One of the features of this film will be a most elaborate garden setting which required 150 arc lamps to illuminate for night photography. In the scenes made at this time, more than 400 extra people, including a powder puff ballet were used.

The Hobart Bosworth Company has completed work at Santa Cruz Island and gone to San Francisco where water front scenes for "Bucko MacAllister" are being filmed. The final scenes for this play will be taken at Balboa Beach south of Los Angeles.

The J. Parker Read scenario department is now busy preparing script for two new productions which will be started within a week.

INCE

EVERYTHING is in readiness at the Thomas H. Ince studios for the filming of the first Ince-Vance special, "Beau Revel," which is to be directed by John Griffith Ray from screen version written by Luther Reed. Florence Vidor has been loaned to Thomas H. Ince by the King Vidor Productions, and she will play the leading role of this first Louis Joseph Vance specially written screen play. Others selected for this cast are Louis Stone, Lloyd Hughes and Kathleen Kirkham. At the studio it is said this production will have interior settings that begin to mark a new era of artistic decorations. One in particular is that of Beau Revel's apartment, which the technical staff will try to make the last word in luxury. The script calls for a big ball held in the famous old building at the rear of Carnegie Hall in New York.

While no information is given out at the studio, it is whispered about that "Beau Revel" will be the first release of Producer Ince through the distributing organization of Associated Producers.

Work on the filming of the first starring vehicle of Douglas MacLean, "Vancouna Villies," is progressing satisfactorily under the direction of Jack Nelson. All of the interior scenes have been taken, and the company is now working on a leased farm where they have the advantage of all atmospheric creating props, buildings and animals.

The Fred Kennett picture, "I Wonder If—," now in the making by Director Fred Niblo is said to contain at least five desirable features of a photoplay which are enumerated as a pretty romance, mystery, an abduction, case of mistaken identity, and throughout the film it will prove to be a veritable fashion show.

C. Gardner Sullivan left for New York Tuesday of this week, and from there will leave for Europe, sailing May 27. He expects to be gone until about the end of the present year.

HAMPTON

THE big stage at the Jesse D. Hampton studio this week contains five ocean liner settings, which are being used in the Robert Thornby special, "Half a Chance." The settings show the barroom, the stoker's hole on the main deck, and in the salon as well as other interesting parts of the boat where action for this story takes place. One of the big scenes was that of a fight in the barroom where Mahlon Hamilton contronted William West, who recently went a number of rounds with Jack Dempsey in the Pathe serial.

Preparations have now been started for the filming of the Mary Ellis Ryan famous novel, "That Girl Montana," which will star Blanche Sweet. The continuity is being prepared by George H. Plympton, adapter of "Soldiers of Chance," and the direction will be by Paul Scardon. Scardon also directed "Soldiers of Chance," and he and Plympton have worked together on a number of other productions.

GOLDWYN has been the target for most all of the rumors of the west coast colony for the past several weeks, but despite all of these, reports from those who have inside knowledge, Goldwyn organization is producing at the usual extent, eight companies being at work. This is a slight reduction over previous periods, due, according to the management, to the fact that they are far ahead on production.

tions, and if work should be stopped at this time, they would have sufficient feature productions to continue their regular releases until late in the Fall.

Will Rogers is next to work in the story titled, "Old Hutch," by Garett Smith, which is to be directed by Clarence G. Badger. This story will be started at once, so that Rogers can complete work by the time of the Democratic and Republican Convention in San Francisco and Chicago, for he has been engaged by a big news syndicate to "cover" these two political meetings giving the humorous angle of the convention in his own inimitable style.

Al Green has completed the making of "The Man Who Had Everything," and will next film the George Ade story, "Just Out of College," with Jack Pickford as the star.

Hazel Daly has been selected as leading woman for the Tom Moore production, "Stop Thief," which will be directed by Harry Beaumont; and Wallace Worsley has completed the editing of the Gouverneur Morris story of San Francisco, "The Penalty," which features Lon Chaney as the cripple.

Victor Schertzinger is working with the scenario department in the selection of the story to star Mabel Normand; and Reginald Barker continues at work on "The Branding Iron," at Catalina Islands.

One of the big scenes for "Empire Builders" was made by E. Mason Hopper at the specially built South Sea Island village along the coast near Santa Monica this week at which time Cullen Landis was boiled to death by 500 negroes in the guise of South Sea cannibals. Invitations for viewing this bit of hokum were sent out by J. Stewart Woodhouse, head of the publicity department, and many of the trade paper representatives, local newspaper men and other invited guests watched the very realistic scenes filmed.

Clark Irvine of the publicity department is now doing the final editing and titling of a personality picture of Maurice Maeterlinck made while the dramatist was at the coast, with the Goldwyn company. Madame Maeterlinck and Gouverneur Morris also take part in this film.

GARSON

FINAL scenes for the Clara Kimball Young production, "Mid-Channel," from the Sir Arthur Wing Pinero drama, which originally served as an Ethel Barrymore starring vehicle on the speaking stage, have been filmed, and Producer-Director Garson is now doing the final editing of this subject before it is shipped to the Equity Pictures Corporation for release.

Clara Kimball Young goes to San Francisco in a few days to present to the San Francisco Post No. 1 of the American Legion, a wonderful set of Post colors including the American Legion and National standard. This post consists of about 6,000 men.

Miss Lyle Babcock, decorator and artist of San Francisco, was recently engaged by Harry Garson as art director for the Clara Kimball Young productions.

BRUNTON

ROBERT BRUNTON has made all preparations for the filming of a big special all star production which is to be directed by Ernest C. Warde, the title of which will be "The Devil to Pay." The players so far selected are Fritzie Brunette, who has been playing opposite J. Warren Kerrigan; Joseph J. Dowling who had the featured part in "The Miracle Man"; Roy Stewart, featured in B. B. Hampton Productions, and George Fisher, who has been seen in a number of subjects made on the coast. The filming of this will be started shortly.

Harry Leon Wilson and William Allen White, authors of "The Spenders," and "A Certain Man," have arrived at the Brunton studios where they will work with B. B. Hampton in the filming of these two productions.

David Warfield, George Probert and Upton Sinclair were guests of Robert Brunton this week, and personally conducted through the big plant.

John Krog, for many years affiliated with the Ince NYMP and Triangle studios, and since the organization of the Brunton plant has been cashier, died this week after a short illness. No successor has been named as yet.

The last Robert Brunton production featuring J. Warren Kerrigan for Hodkinson, "The House of Whispers," has been completed and shipped east; and the Dustin Farnum production made by Colin Campbell, "Big Happiness," is in the final editing and titling department.

The Betty Compson Company which has been north for several weeks in the filming of water front and Chinatown scenes at San Francisco for "The Test," has returned to the studio for the making of the final interior scenes. Arthur Rosson is director of this initial Compson starring vehicle, and the featured player of "The Miracle Man" is supported by Roy Stewart, Emory Johnson, Ralph Lewis, Walter Miller, Clara Horton, Roscoe Karns, Kate Toncray, Betty Schade and a number of other well-known players.

FIRST NATIONAL

MARSHALL NEILAN has completed all scenes for his third release for First National which was made under the working title of "The Harbor City Mystery"; and the filming of the story featuring Little Wesley Barry, known as "Dinty," which is being directed by Jack MacDermott, will require two or three weeks more time for filming. Following the completion of this work, it is very probable that Mr. Neilan will go east for the making of one or more subjects, and has announced possible intentions of going to Europe.

The number of First National producing units in California has been increased by the recently made contract with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation for release through the Exhibitors' Association.

Alan Dwan and company, headed by Mary Thurman and Niles Welch, are at work on location at Camp Keen in the mountains south of Riverside.

The Sylvia Breamer picture, "Athalie," directed by Sidney A. Franklin is now being edited and titled.

R. W. MacFarland, western manager of Mayflower, made the announcement of the First National affiliation this week.

HERE AND THERE

Ben Wilson, who is now producing serials for Selznick following the making of two for Halmark, has placed Jack Hoxie under contract to play in a serial which is to be directed by Murdock MacQuarrie.

Carter DeHaven has returned from the east after purchasing screen rights on "Twin Beds," and "The Girl in the Taxi," and is shortly to begin producing these at the studios at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood.

"Bonnie May" has been selected as the vehicle for Bessie Love, and is to be co-directed by Joseph DeGrasse and Ida May Park for Andrew J. Callaghan.

The D. N. Schwab producing company headed by David Butler and directed by Fred J. Butler, have been in San Francisco for the past week filming scenes for the second Butler release, "Smiling All the Way," in which Leatrice Joy will play the feminine lead.

The recently organized company to make Victor Potel Homespun Comedies, has the first release almost ready for the screen. This subject, made under the supervision of Edward J. Atkinson, will be titled "Slim Comes Back." Potel is using the name given him in "Slippery Slim Comedies," made by Essanay several years ago, and the coming series will be of a type similar to those released through the General. The principals of the cast for this film are Ruby Kendrick, Thelma Percy, George Cummings, George Ward, Jake Abrams and a number of others. The direction was in charge of Robert McKenzie, who has been identified with the industry as director and writer for a number of years.

Leon Kent, who has been affiliated with Col. W. N. Selig in the making of serials featuring Franklyn Farnum and Mary Anderson, is shortly to leave for Honolulu with a company to film a historical pageant for an independent organization.

Special Attention Paid to Decorative Effects at the Strand Theatre

New Binghamton House Reveals Many Gems of Art Treatment

AFTER nearly a year's work, interrupted by many delays due to the difficulty of getting materials, the Strand theatre opened in Binghamton, New York, on May 8. The theatre, which seats about 1,600, was constructed under the direction of A. E. Badgley of Binghamton.

The ground dimensions of the theatre are 134x60 feet with a height from floor to dome of 50 feet. A stage opening of 32 feet has been provided with a proscenium arch 26 feet in height.

The new theatre is fireproof throughout, being constructed of brick, steel and concrete. Further safeguards are provided in a sprinkler system of the latest type in addition to two double-door exits on the ground floor and the same number on the balcony floor.

In its ventilating system the Strand is well provided for. The fresh air is drawn in and forced out by large fans into large ducts running along both sides of the auditorium. In the ducts are openings through which many thousands of cubic feet of air are forced into the building. By means of exhaust fans and domes the impure or used air is withdrawn as fast as it accumulates. By this means the air is completely changed every thirty seconds.

The lobby is exceptionally attractive. A tile floor in unique designs with a marble wainscoting and beautiful decorations on the walls accomplish the purpose desired. On the right of the entrance are the box office and check room. A set of doors across the middle of the lobby acts as a wind check and protects the audience seated in the back rows from being struck by draughts as patrons enter and depart.

From the foyer two grand staircases of marble lead to the mezzanine floor. Traffic through the foyer is made noiseless by heavy carpetings.

Back of the last row of seats in the auditorium is a balustrade on top of which is a wind shield of French plate glass for the further protection of the audience.

The auditorium floor aisles are carpeted with Wilton carpets in a golden tone. Doors and boxes are draped with blue velours trimmed with silver. All chairs in the orchestra and in the balcony are leather cushioned with leather backs. No steps are in the auditorium, the usual incline being used.

After leaving the foyer by means of the grand staircases the visitor comes to the mezzanine floor, heavily carpeted and equipped with resting places. This floor is to be used also as a promenade. There is a well in the center through which a view may be had of the foyer beneath. On this same floor on the right is the men's smoking room, the manager's office; on the left, the ladies' retiring room.

There are no steps leading from the promenade to the balcony because of the fact that the entranceway is level. In the front of the balcony are three rows of loges partitioned off from the remainder of the seats by brass railings. The chairs in the loges are of upholstered wickerwork. Similar chairs are used also in the furnishings of the twelve boxes on both sides of the house.

As would be expected in a theatre of this description, the lighting system was developed to suit its individual requirements. All the lights are concealed in coves and connected to sets of dimmers in order that the illumination may be varied in intensity or coloring according to the program. More and more is the lighting system for the theatre being given the prominence it demands if the atmosphere is to be made attractive, restful and easy on the eyes of the patrons.

The projection room is situated in the back of the balcony. Its equipment consists of two Simplex machines connected to a direct current supply.

Decorations

The decorative work throughout the Strand was developed by Gustave Brand and Co., of Chicago. The treatment of the spacious lobby of the Strand theatre is very beautiful, the walls being done in a two tone silk effect combining golds and creamy yellows, surmounted with an Adam ceiling in delicate coloring harmonizing perfectly with the side walls. The color scheme of the theatre itself is based on gray, ivory and rose, richness being obtained through the use of fourteen medallions in striking blue and mauve tints on the upper side walls, the subject of the paintings on the medallions being modernized figures of dancing nymphs, etc. The lower portion of the walls is in two tone silk effects.

In the arc formed by the upper part of the proscenium arch is a magnificent ultra modern mural painting, "Spring of Youth," featuring dancing girls against the colorful background. The size of this art work is twenty feet deep by fifty two wide.

In order to bring out the various effects sought for in the creation of these beautiful decorations the lighting scheme was developed as an adjunct. For instance, directly in front of the mural painting is a battery of lights so arranged as to make the important points stand out in relief. The same idea was carried out in the lighting of the great dome above the auditorium floor.

The opening of the Strand was an event in the city of Binghamton. Very little was known about the structure until the opening night.

Forty Thousand Cubic Feet of Heated Air Per Minute During Zero Weather

Monsoon System as Installed in Proposed Wilson Theatre Designed for This Capacity

OF the many new theatres being built this year, few of them will compare with the New Wilson theatre, Baltimore, Md., in point of comfort. By this is meant not only comfortable seats and projection that is easy on the eyes, but perfect ventilation, winter and summer, with an even temperature during cold weather and a cool, breezy, enjoyable atmosphere during the hot months of the year.

The owners of the theatre knew what they wanted—and they knew where to get it. So they put their problem up to the engineers of the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., New York.

To take care of the heating and ventilating in cold weather, Monsoon Engineers designed a unit of a No. 6 Monsoon Duplex Set, located in the attic space near the stage, and so arranged that in zero weather 40,000 cubic feet of fresh air can be heated to a temperature of 70 degrees and blown into the theatre through grilled openings in the proscenium arch.

As this large volume of heated fresh air is passed into the house, it settles like a blanket of even warmth over the entire auditorium, driving the cold or foul air out through the entrance doors and other openings at the floor level.

Due to the very slight pressure thus built up, the air movement is outward at the entrance doors. Consequently, when these are opened, there is no inward draft of cold air but, on the contrary, an outward movement of warm air. This is one point of comfort that will be much appreciated by patrons occupying seats in the rear of the house.

Equally necessary as winter heating and ventilating, is proper cooling in hot weather. Monsoon engineers have provided for this by placing three No. 8 Monsoon Breeze Makers in the attic near the

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A Series of Interests to All Projectionists

Field of the Mazda Lamp for Motion Picture Projection

The 30 volt 30 amperes 900 watt motion picture lamp with prismatic condenser and mirror will replace any A. C. Carbon arc no matter how skillfully handled. On D. C. it will replace arcs up to 25 amperes and even arcs of higher amperage where those arcs are at present not properly manipulated.

With an ordinary painted muslin screen or plaster wall, a 12-foot picture can be obtained on throws not to exceed 80 feet.

With a first-class reflecting type screen, a 15 to 16 foot picture may be satisfactorily projected at a distance not exceeding 90 feet.

With a first-class reflecting type-screen and a No. 2 lens a 15-foot picture can be projected a distance of 110 to 115 feet. For narrow houses if the proper screen is installed longer throws can be used.

It must be remembered that first-class results cannot be obtained unless lamp and mirror are accurately focused and lamp is properly operated.

A smaller size Mazda Lamp for motion picture projection, the 30 volt 20 ampere 600 watt lamp, is about three-fourths as powerful as the 900 watt 30 ampere lamp.

The construction and appearance of the two are identical. The same size bulb is used for both. The only difference lies in the size of the filament wire.

The 600 watt lamp, of course, is not as powerful as the 900 and was designed not for large motion picture work but more to fill the need for small theatres, churches, schools, small auditoriums and halls.

Again, oftentimes in a small town where there is only a limited supply of current, or where a theatre makes its own power, the 900 watt lamp may be too great a drain on the current supply.

Both the 900 and 600 watt lamps run at approximately 30 volts and thus can be run from the 32 volt country homelighting outfits providing proper rheostats be used to insure the lamp operating at exact amperage.

There are now on the market several types of small portable motion picture machines that will fit into a suit-case and are used by salesmen, lecturers, etc., or for parlor entertaining. For this class of work, where the pictures are necessarily small and the throw comparatively short, a low voltage lamp is not an absolute necessity as such machines are usually equipped with 110 to 115 volt stereopticon lamps.

A 400 watt lamp in a round bulb is usually used. The round bulb is more compact but it does not allow the lamp to be placed as close to the condenser. Consequently, the amount of light picked up is decreased over that that could be obtained from a lamp in a tubular bulb and a condensing lens designed for a short back focus.

There has recently been developed a small low wattage low voltage lamp for use with small portable motion picture machines. It takes only 100 watts, is of 25 volts, and 4 amperes, and when used with the proper condensing lens system will put more light on the screen than a 400 watt 110 volt stereopticon lamp used for this purpose. The increased light that is obtained is due to the fact that the lamp is placed in a very small tubular bulb and the bulb placed very close to a specially designed condenser thus, a large angle of light is picked up.

This is the last installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

For slide projection in a commercial motion picture theatre, a 1000 watt 110 volt lamp is available. The standard (110) lamp is well adapted for this sort of work since the projection of slides does not require such a high intensity as is necessitated with film.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Overcome the "Summer Slump"

Year after year hundreds of exhibitors throughout the Country experience a big drop in business as soon as the hot weather arrives.

Thousands of dollars are lost and as a result they have to dig down into their winter profits to keep going.

Why not overcome this Summer Slump by installing at once the stage and two 6-ft. fans on the roof over the balcony. The No. 6 Monsoon Duplex Set, used for heating and ventilating in cold weather, is arranged with bypass dampers so that its capacity is doubled for hot weather cooling. The combined equipments, blowing in, sweep fully 2,300,000 cubic feet of pure, wholesome air through the entire length and width of the auditorium every hour—or a total of 23,000,000 cubic feet every ten-hour day.

The result may easily be imagined. No matter where a person might take his seat, he will feel cool and comfortable. In Baltimore's hottest summer weather, it will be a pleasure to enjoy a show in the New Wilson theatre, and the summer receipts will prove that it pays to cater to the public's comfort.

In laying out a system of this kind, a material economy is effected by eliminating underground trenches, sheet metal ducts and also much of the steam piping necessary with the ordinary heating systems. Due to this saving, ventilating and cooling costs no more than the ordinary system of heating alone.

Work on the Wilson theatre is progressing rapidly. The site is practically cleared and the foundations have already been started. Mr. E. G. Blanke, the theatre architect, looks for an opening date some time during September.

Airdome Queries

A letter was received a few days ago signed only by "A Long Island Exhibitor." This letter, printed below, requests information which we would be pleased to give the writer if he will communicate with us by name.

"I have noticed large tents erected every year in neighboring vicinities used for religious purposes, and as I have idle property in Long Island, I intend to erect a large tent, to be used as an airdome.

"These tents are large enough to seat about five hundred people. I would be very thankful if you will advise me on the following things:

"Where can these tents be hired from (I believe they are made of tarpaulin) and where is this company located?

"Where can the folding benches be hired from (each bench seats about eight people), and where is this company located?

"How can I arrange for an operator's booth in said tent (and can a booth be hired by the season)? Are there any portable booths, or ones that can be erected with little trouble and expense?

"How can I arrange for the electricity to be installed and is it necessary to have electricity, or is there any substitute? Will it be expensive to install electricity?

"I have been a reader since 1917, and have noticed your straightforward answers to questions exhibitors ask you. Kindly give me an answer in this issue of your magazine, as I will look for same."

Reply.—If the writer of the above will kindly send in his name to the Equipment Service Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS we will give him a list of manufacturers who are either making or handling the material he asks about. It is not the policy of THE NEWS to publish names of manufacturers in its columns unless the article is handled exclusively by one firm.

Strand Organ Has Many Features

One of the features of the new Strand is a Kimball Orchestral Organ with Chimes, Glockenspiel and Orchestra Bells. The instrumentation included Violins, Cello, Viola, Horn, Tuba, Oboe, Flutes, Piccolo and Kimball Vox Humana, together with Diapason and other organ tone giving a full body of tone. The pipes are screened by grille work and the console located in orchestra pit. The organ is located at the side of the proscenium.

Practical Electricity—XII

Primary Batteries Contd.

The average shelf-life of a high grade battery is from 10 to 12 months, and is increased by storing the cells at a low temperature.

Since the terminal voltage of a dry cell falls off more rapidly on continuous duty than on intermittent duty, they are better adapted for work which does not require a continuous flow of current, such as telephone and ignition use.

The energy of a battery depends on the amount of active materials. A dry cell contains a definite quantity of chemical energy which may be transformed into electrical energy, so that a battery can give a definite number of watt-hours, or a definite number of ampere-hours at normal voltage. This energy may be taken as a small current for a long interval of time or as a large current for a short time. Thus while the total energy in the battery is fixed by the weight of the active materials the power of the battery (volts times amperes) may vary over a wide range.

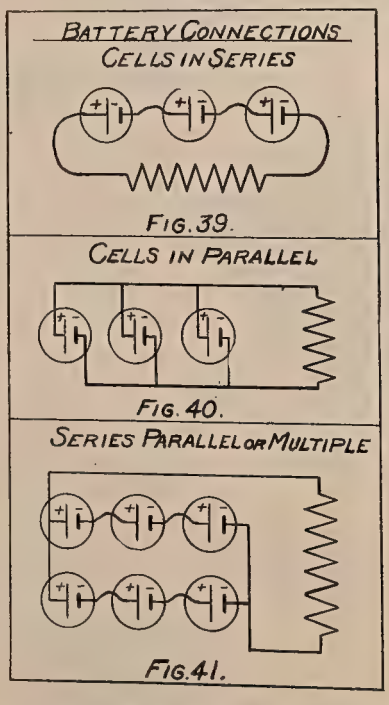
Series and parallel arrangement—Cells are in series when the positive or plus pole is connected to the negative or minus pole of the next. The circuit is completed thru a resistance connected to the plus and minus poles at the ends of the series. The total e. m. f. for a series connection is the sum of the e. m. f. of the N cells, or is equal to N x E, where N is the number of cells connected in series and E the terminal voltage of one cell. The internal resistance of the battery is N x r, where r is the internal resistance of each cell. If the resistance of the external circuit to which the battery is connected is R ohms, then the current flowing will be: I equals N x E divided by (R plus N x r). In this equation N x E is the total electromotive force of the battery and R plus N x r the total resistance of the entire circuit. Fig. 39 shows an example of series connection.

Example—Three cells each having an e. m. f. of 1.5 volts, and an internal resistance of 0.6 ohms, are connected in series, with a resistance of 10 ohms What is the current in the resistance when the circuit is closed?

Solution—By substituting in the above equation, I equals 3 x 1.5/ [10 + (3 x .6)] or .382 amperes.

Cells are connected in parallel when all the positive poles are joined together and connected to one lead and all the negative poles joined and connected to the other lead. Fig. 40 shows three cells connected in parallel to an external resistance. The cells are then equivalent to a single cell with an internal resistance of r/N, and the e. m. f. is equal to that of a single cell. If the external connected resistance is R ohms, then the current in the external circuit will be given by the equation:

$$I = \frac{E}{R + \frac{r}{N}}$$



Series-parallel or multiple—Cells may be joined in series-parallel in order to obtain long life for current output. Such a connection is shown by Fig. 41. By this method M cells in series are joined N rows in parallel, which in the case of Fig. 41, is 3 cells in series and 2 rows in parallel. The total number of cells required is M x N. For each row the e. m. f is M x E, and the internal resistance M x r. For the N rows in parallel the internal resistance is M x r/N, and the voltage that of a single row or M E. When connected to an external circuit the current flow will then be:

$$I = \frac{M E}{R + \frac{M r}{N}}$$

For heavy duty such as ignition work the series-parallel connection is a better system for preserving the life of the battery.

32. Twelve primary cells each having an e.m.f. on no load of 1.5 volts and an internal resistance of 0.25 ohms are connected in parallel to an external circuit which has a resistance of 0.5 ohms. What is the current in the external circuit?
33. Ten cells each having an e.m.f. of 2.2 volts and an internal resistance of .07 ohms, are connected in series to a circuit whose resistance is 4.3 ohms. What current exists in the circuit?
34. If the cells of problem 32 are connected six in series, two rows in parallel, what would be the current in the external circuit of 0.5 ohms?

New Transatlantic Projector

BARELY a week passes but that a new portable projector makes its appearance on the market. Although somewhat similar in general layout, yet each machine usually has one or more unusual points that are worthy of special mention. The new Transatlantic Projector recently placed on the market by the Transatlantic Film Corporation falls within the category of those worthy of a description.

The Transatlantic Portable Projector is very similar to the customary "suit-case" type in dimensions and general make-up. It is motor-driven and may be attached to any lamp socket.

11 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Nicholas Power Co.,

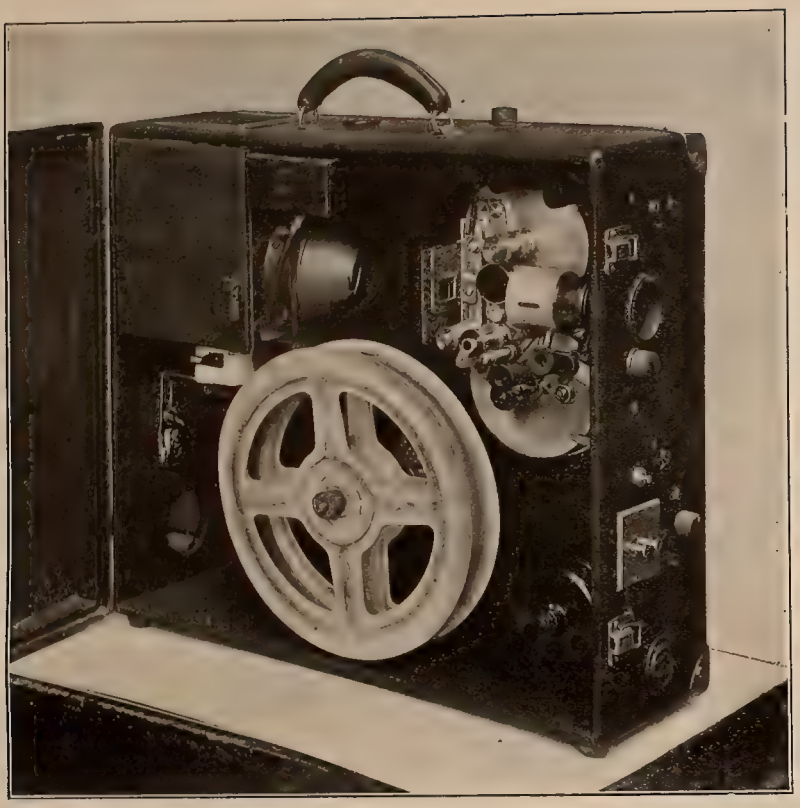
New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:



It may interest you to know that during the past eleven years which we have been conducting moving picture laboratories, we have used every make of moving picture projector except one.

At the present time we have in constant use every day three Powers 6B machines for use in screen examination of our product.

For all round service where hard constant work is required, we consider the Powers machine in a class by itself.

Yours truly,
Wm Horsley.

View of mechanism of Transatlantic showing water cell

One of its features is the manner in which the gear mechanisms are enclosed. A compact die-casting, oil tight, houses all the gears and makes the operation of the machine quieter.

Another one of its features is the water-cell built into the projector on the principle of an automobile radiator. The cell is fed with the liquid from a storage tank attached to the top side of the casing. As the water becomes heated by the passage of the rays through it, it rises into the storage tank and is replaced by water which has been cooled. As showing how efficient this water-cell is in keeping down the heat on the film, a test was made with a piece of standard inflammable film in the aperture. After allowing the light to remain on the same frame for several minutes the piece of film was removed and it was found that the temperature rise was negligible. A thermometer placed in the light beam at the aperture plate showed a rise of only a few degrees after several minutes exposure.

The operation of the machine is exceptionally smooth and free from undue vibration. This is due mostly to the enclosed gears running in oil.

A picture size of 9x12 feet at a distance of 70 feet is claimed for the machine by its manufacturers.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

IN conclusion, many new flame lamps have been invented and developed in the last year or two, and now varieties of flame carbons for special effects are available for a multitude of simple or complex artistic effects. However, only a small beginning has been made as to the artistic effects counting merely the minor factors of control such as direction of light, its diffusion, change of intensity and the power by proper color and environment to greatly aid the motion picture actor-artist. There is the subject of "catch-lights" in the eyes of the players that represent the reflection of the light sources. If the light sources are rectangular in shape, then the catch-lights will be rectangular or triangular, and with sharp curve points. The bad effect of not using round or oval light sources is easily appreciated. It is well recognized that curved lines convex to each other tend to give a sorrowful, depressed look. Curved lines concave to each other tend to give a pleasant, agreeable, smiling look. By attention to the shape of the diffusing screen for the light sources, it would seem possible to vary this element so as to be in harmony with the ideals of the play. All the recent motion picture photoplays of the best companies show the power of white flame arc lighting to give fine definition, splendid half tones, luminous shadows and favorably shaped "catch" lights.

In some portrait studios the light of the flame arc is thrown upon the ceiling (Fig. 26) or a reflecting screen, and in this way some very beautiful pictures have been photographed. The possibilities of indirect lighting with the flame arc have only been touched upon. By suitable lamp design, it seems practical not only to get more diffuse light, but also greater candlepower delivered to the working plane. Again in the matter of regulation, the shunt control (see Figs. 15 and 16) is one of the important future developments that will enable the artists to secure a wide variety of new effects.

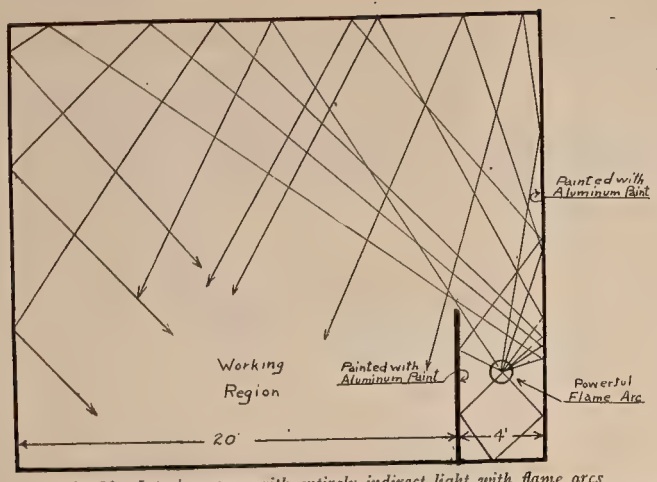

Fig. 26. Interior room with entirely indirect light with flame arcs

The experiments with multiple trim lamps, Fig. 17, show how long life (long period between trims) can be secured for the flame arc.

On alternating current efficiency can be greatly increased with the flame arc by reactance control.

In the matter of studio lighting, the writer believes with Mr. Allison, that interior rooms lighted entirely by artificial light have splendid advantages, because the lighting can then be entirely controlled by the artist, and the extremely hot atmosphere of sunlight glass studio is entirely done away, and a nice cool, comfortable studio can be maintained throughout the year. The director can then obtain all diffuse light, all direct light, or any proportion and direction of diffused and direct light under perfect control, and old King Sol with his changing position, will be entirely unnecessary for all interior scenes. In conclusion this article has pointed out many new developments, and has indicated the promise of many others in development of different colored flame carbons, and a great variety of motion picture flame lamps.

I am indebted to Mr. P. P. Bethea for aid in many long experiments on the flame arc, to Mr. A. Broggini for assistance in securing many of the photographs, to Mr. Ross, master mechanic of Vitagraph, and Miss Anita Stewart for pictures from the Vitagraph Co., to the Edison Co., and to Mr. Beckwith of the Reserve Photoplay Co. for pictures, to Mr. Max Mayer (of Wohl & Co.) for friendly suggestions, to Mr. Allison, Mr. J. E. Brubec, and to many others who have so materially contributed to the value of this paper.

An Improved Formula for Dye Toning with Ferricyanide and Chromic Acid Bleach

A Recent Communication from the Philadelphia Laboratory of F. E. Ives

DYE TONING WITH FERRICYANIDE AND CHROMIC ACID BLEACH.
IMPROVED FORMULA.

Potassium Ferricyanide,	10 grains
Chromic Acid,	22 "
Water,	16 ounces

The positive to be dye-toned must be thin and superficial, as obtained by full exposure and short development from a negative of average density. It is advantageous to fix with acid hypo. Wash thoroughly. The image will bleach completely in the above bath in from two to five minutes. It should then be washed in running water to remove yellow stain from the whites. Ten minutes in gently running water is usually sufficient for cine positive film. Too much washing reduces the mordanting power of the image, and washing directly under the tap is to be avoided. As soon as the whites are quite free from stain the positive can be immersed in the dye bath, in which it will dye up to the limit in a few minutes. The unfixed dye is then washed out in gently running water, or by standing, with occasional rocking, in water made slightly acid with acetic acid. If the color is too dense, it may be slowly reduced by soaking in the acidified water. If deeper coloring is desired, the finished dye print can be put through the process a second time, thus doubling the depth of color.

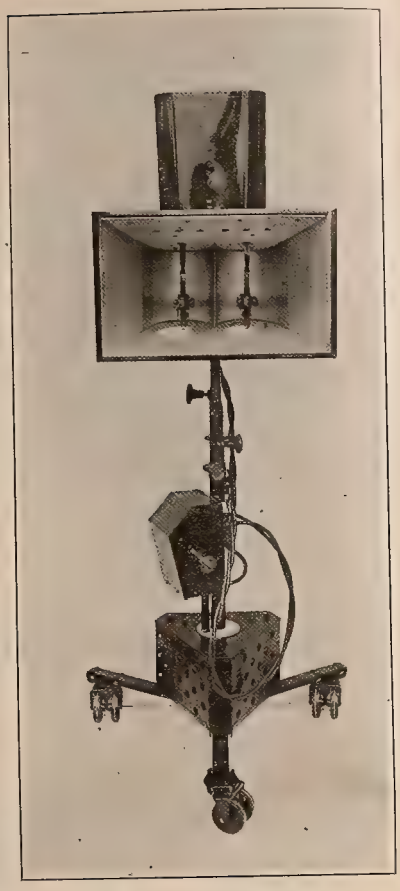
The finished dye image is very transparent, but like the mordant-dyed copper-toned image, it dries matt, and can be made more transparent for projection by varnishing or oiling, which, however, is seldom desirable.

The formula given for the bleaching solution is unsuitable for dense positives because it hardens the gelatine so much where there is a heavy silver deposit that it resists the absorption of the dye. For such positives, the percentage of chromic acid should be reduced, and the resulting dye print will then be less transparent. In case the dyeing does not proceed normally in the deeper shadows, very prolonged immersion will often secure a perfect result.

Among the most active dyes for this process are methylene blue, fuchsine and chrysoidine, the solutions of which should contain considerable acetic acid. Saffraine, auramine and malachite green work well with less acetic acid in the solution. From 20 to 60 grains of the dyestuff may be used in making a gallon bath, and glacial acetic acid from a few drops to half an ounce.

Interesting and beautiful results, including various qualities of black can be obtained with mixtures of these dyes.

A New Studio Lamp



Evolved from the every day experience and demonstrated needs of the big motion studios of Southern California a new studio lamp has been invented by two Los Angeles electricians.

The inventors are C. P. Chamberlain and D. W. Reynolds, electrical engineers who made a practical study of the studio lighting process for several months before perfecting their product.

The new lamp, bearing the trade mark CRECO was an instant success even the lordly motion picture director who rarely descends from a contemplation of human emotions to the material indicating a strenuous desire for the latest lighting development.

It is said that the principal virtues of the CRECO lamp are their adaptability to the variations of voltage, their simplicity and lightness.

According to the Chamberlain-Reynolds Electric Company their lamps will maintain an unvarying illumination at all times. A large order for these lamps was received recently from the Carroll Baker Co., of Sydney, Australia.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Up in Mary's Attic"

(Five Reel Comedy—Fine Arts Pictures)

IT looks as if the five reel comedy has come to stay. Mack Sennett experimented beyond the short reelers some time ago and enlarged his reputation to some extent, although the subject matter of his ideas belong in pieces of two reel length. "Up in Mary's Attic" is the newest five reel comedy and it is surely going to be heard from because it is based primarily on lifelike action, the burlesque incident being only secondary in capitalizing values. There is nothing of the slapstick about it. The humor is not gained by pie-slinging methods or by a heterogeneous group of grotesque comedians giving chase to one another. Its mirth-provoking qualities are founded on an incident of life that is reasonably true.

You may call the picture a polite comedy—a satirical comedy—a melodramatic comedy and not go wrong on either count. Place a delectable type of femininity in a boarding school—bring out that she is married to the athletic instructor and will forfeit her inheritance and be expelled if the marriage leaks out introduce a cute infant for unconscious humor and juvenile appeal—present a galaxy of the girls as the student body and you have an idea that spells a comedy with a purpose. Take away the melodramatic trimmings and the bevy of "BeeVeeDee'd" beauties and any good director could fashion from the subject matter a bright and merry farce comedy.

The high spot in this offering is the aforementioned baby who enacts her scenes in a fine spirit of playfulness. Extremely provocative of laughter is her mother's attempt to hide her away from those who are not "in the know." Mary finds a safe place for her in the attic of the dormitory where an intelligent dog acts in the capacity of nurse. There are a number of effective scenes like this one. But for the benefit of those who like their comedies dressed up with feminine pulchritude let us state that "Up in Mary's Attic" keeps to the standard set by Dr. Ziegfeld on the stage. They gambol on the beach, cut up high jinks in the "gym" and give the comedy a good deal of its appeal. Eva Novak and Harry Gribbon are the featured players and they give an excellent account of themselves, the former lending tone and quality through her charm and sincerity, while the latter furnishes fun in his droll buffoonery. It is a comedy of situations and surprises. Not forgetting the baby.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Great Shadow"

(Republic)

ANOTHER one of those pictures dealing with Bolshevism and its results upon capital and labor.

Although this feature is better than the average run of its kind, it is hard to say whether it will interest those who view it.

The Russians, the bombs, the riots, the blow ups, the shipyards and the long subtitles denouncing the Bolsheviki methods and their effects on mankind are all here and in good working order.

The story is fair and deals with the struggle of a union leader, John McDonald, whose men are determined to quit work because their unjust demands are not recognized by the capitalists.

They are encouraged in their wrongdoings by a gang of Bolshevists whose object is to use them as an instrument in gaining their ends namely, getting control of this country.

The American and British flags are about to be trampled upon by a radical leader who is addressing a meeting, when McDonald knocks him down, wins over the rioters and thus gains the first step in settling an amicable arrangement between the warring factions, capital and labor.

The cast is a good one and is headed by Tyrone Power, who plays the union leader with conviction. Direction and sets are up to standard and the exteriors show some good scenes in and about the shipyards. Length 5 reels.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The One Way Trail"

(Republic)

A GOOD average western which should satisfy in any house where this type of picture takes the preference.

The story is above the average, contains some good thrills, has the elements of heart interest and romantic appeal and unfolds in a way that is easily understandable.

The scenes are laid in the Northwest, showing some fine shots of nature's great "outdoors" and the logging camps where some thrilling moments take place, one of which is the tying of the hero to an immense log, raising it by steam power and shooting it through a chute into the water among other logs—exciting indeed. Suspense now takes its hold. The heroine is seen flying over the logs in a seemingly vain search for her lover whom she has been unable to save from so frightful a death, until she discoveres his body rising to the surface which she seizes and with the aid of others, drags it to shore, thus saving his life.

The star, Edythe Sterling, is her usual self and does some splendid riding and dangerous stunts of the aerial variety.

The direction is praiseworthy indeed showing a carefulness in the selection of seats, exteriors and tempo in action.

He loved and wanted to possess her, even threatening to send her father to jail for a crime he had not committed, if the latter did not agree to his proposals. But a young man entered upon the scene in the shape of a Northwestern mounted police, who was determined to "get" the villain for the crimes he had committed.

The latter, however, was very wary and nearly succeeded in turning the tables on our hero, when a shot from a lunatic, whose insanity had been caused by being previously wounded in the head by the bad man, ended his life.

In his dying moments he confesses all, thus bringing the story to the usual happy ending.

The cast is a strong one, including Gordon Sackville, Jack Connelly, J. Webster Dill and A. Hollingsworth.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Modern Centaurs"

(Educational One Reel)

THIS Educational has a classic title which might indicate to the man in the street that it was awe inspiring. We hold the opinion that the offering isn't well named because the average person would fail to be attracted if he was looking for scenics alone. The subject carries more of an educational quality than a scenic one and there is no denying that it furnishes a full quota of thrills. The ordinary human being reacts to the spirit of competition in athletic endeavor. He loves to see the best man win. He will be fascinated in "Modern Centaurs" because it presents a body of expert cavalrymen—each one attempting to do the impossible in a more finished manner than the other.

The offering is one of the best of its kind. The men are expert in the saddle and the horses are thoroughbreds.—LAURENCE REID.

"Content"

(Herbert Kaufman Editorial in Pictures —Released by Selznick—One Reel)

UNDER the title of "Content" the second of Herbert Kaufman's "editorial" writings reaches the screen to register as rather a novelty and with considerable meat contained in its filmistic story. True this story is principally told in titles with the action following illustrating that which has been stated, but the reel, as a whole, is interesting, with a decided message.

"Content" concerns a fabled Chinese beggar, who appears before the Mandarin with his two children, complaining against his fate. The Mandarin offers to give him riches, many beautiful wives and all that the beggar would naturally desire, but only under the proviso that the beggar shall give half of that he already possesses to the Mandarin, that half including one of his limbs, half of his children's bodies, an eye, etc.

The beggar declines the gifts on the terms imposed, and suddenly discovering that he has been rich all the time without knowing it, goes away rejoicing.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to January 24, 1920.

"THE SEA RIDER"
(Vitagraph)

Seafaring Tale Carries an Adequate Punch for Morey

THEY have to find vital and vivid stories for Harry Morey's rugged personality and "The Sea Rider" is no exception from the rule. The Vitagraph star has been identified with the screen long enough to run the much abused "gamut of emotions" in every conceivable kind of characterization. But to our best recollection it is the first time that he has ever appeared as one of those honest, God-fearing fishermen of the New England coast. The theme is based upon disillusionment of romance with the rugged hero abiding his time before the girl of his heart consents to marry him. He is a simple soul, ignorant of the subtleties of courtship and realizing his own shortcomings in the art of making himself adaptable. A character that arouses a fine measure of sympathy.

He trusts mankind and when he is absent for a year, having taken his brother's place in order to give the latter a rest from his arduous duties on the briny deep, he returns to find the glamour of his romance taken away. The trust in his soul gives away to a canker which degenerates him into a brute. The loneliness of his life is more than emphasized when he becomes the master of a tramp schooner, for he is living only to find expression in his continual "song of hate." The scenes during his sea venture provide the gripping moments. Up to this period of the story the action does not offer much in the shape of dramatic incident, the interest being held through the character sketches and details in the lives of the fisher-folk.

One may call it a single-track tale because it is certain that the erstwhile trusting native will regain his goodly virtues. And the spirit of regeneration is inspired by another girl who, rescued from attempted suicide, is as faithful as her predecessor is insincere. Theatrical license is offered when the good heroine's nemesis comes into the scene to continue where he left off in the preceding chapter. For he is none other than the brother who had cast aside the love he had won away from the "sea rider." A scuffle occurs, the ship catches fire, the villain meets a timely end, and those who are genuine row to safety. The offering sends out a bit of suspense here and there, though it is mostly quiet in action. But one cannot expect too much from a character study. The ship scenes are the real thing. And the star is his virile self. He couldn't be otherwise. —Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Sea Rider," which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week with Harry Morey as the star, is a story of seafaring folk. It presents Mr. Morey as an industrious fisherman who enlists his energy in collecting enough wealth to furnish the girl of his heart with a home. Being a man of strong character and having implicit trust in human nature it is a tremendous blow to him when he discovers that his romance is shattered by the catastrophe of a human frailty. His entire disposition changes and he becomes an embittered vagabond of the ocean as the skipper of a tramp steamer. Having lost his faith in mankind he lives only to fan the flames of hatred in his heart.

Unexpectedly he finds proof that the world is not so bad as he painted it. The genuine quality of love which the skipper thought only a fable comes to him and effects a regeneration of the soul. "The Sea Rider" is a typical Morey offering which means that it has vitality in keeping with the star's personality. There is romance, adventure, thrills and deep human interest. Pathos is also a vital factor, and this note is expressed in action of genuine dramatic conflict. The scenic backgrounds are entirely appropriate, the director having spared no expense in making the story ring with realism. Mr. Morey's company consists of Webster Campbell, Van Dyke Brooke, Alice Calhoun and Louiszita Valentine. The story was written by Harry Dittmar and adapted by Fred Schaefer.

PROGRAM READER

An unusual feature is "The Sea Rider," the Vitagraph offering with Harry Morey, a star which comes to the ———— theatre in the near future. The star who is noted for his rugged impersonations, has assumed an entirely new type of character—one that fits perfectly his robust physique. As the title indicates he is seen as a skipper, the master of a fishing schooner. Nearly all the scenes are of the great out-doors either on land or sea. It is a strenuous story, the theme being based on disillusionment of human nature and the subsequent awakening of the soul. There are many exciting incidents, including the burning of a schooner at sea. Our patrons are assured of a vital story which is told with plenty of dramatic action. Mr. Morey's company is a capable one in every respect. Watch for further announcements.

CATCH LINES

He was an industrious fisherman, but later became a sea rider. What happened that transformed his character? See Harry Morey in "The Sea Rider."

Do you like a story of the sea? Do you like romance and adventure? Then see Harry Morey in "The Sea Rider." A picture different from the average.

"JES' CALL ME JIM"
(Goldwyn)

Rogers Has Rich Character Study in Story of Homespun Quality

WILL ROGERS has the faculty of making any kind of material look like first rate entertainment. His newest Goldwyn release, "Jes' Call Me Jim," may be rather weak on dramatic values, but there is no denying its human interest and heart appeal. But that is Rogers' way. Being an everyday, natural sort of fellow he is able to reflect this human quality so that it enriches his characterization. His study is given a life-like quality through his broad sense of humor which is splendidly commingled with pathos. There is Rogers' art. He has a sense of balance.

The picture itself is a trifle old-fashioned in theme and treatment, the latter sequences being quite improbable. But one doesn't search too closely for flaws when there is such an abundance of human touches, such rich characterization, and so many praiseworthy subtitles and colorful scenes. It has been said that the star writes his own captions and this is believable since they are characteristic of his homely wit. He appears again as the lonely son of the soil (this time the hunter and trapper) who holds himself in low esteem when it comes to matters of love. Sacrificing himself for the sake of another whom he believes to have first call with the girl's affections, his whole attitude is bent toward bringing them together. There is a variation, however, from previous pictures since his humanity, his spirit of self-sacrifice act in his favor. He invents some rare stories to express his romantic fervor.

There is a conspicuous vein of melodrama which loses its theatrical sting through his interpretation. The other fellow, an inventor, is incarcerated in an asylum and it is Jim's idea to rescue him and bring his oppressors to time. Which he does in his own inimitable way. The court-room scene is quite far-fetched, but is saved through its humorous moments. The offering carries a deal of incident which is punctuated with scenes of contrasting pathos. The backgrounds are delightful, some of the wooded exteriors being exquisite. And they tone up the picture and aid in giving it a spiritual quality. The picture is quite on a par with "Laughing Bill Hyde" and "Jubilo." - Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Will Rogers, the most human comedian of the screen, will come to the ———— theatre beginning ———— in his latest comedy drama entitled "Jes' Call Me Jim," adapted from J. G. Holland's popular novel, "Seven Oaks." The subject is peculiarly suited to the star's personality and talent and provides him with the role of a happy-go-lucky trapper. As Jim Fenton he is in love with Miss Butterworth, a milliner, and he believes her to be in love with an insane inventor, Paul Benedict. Rogers brings out the pathos because of the sympathy he engenders, since he is willing to sacrifice himself to make the young woman happy. In his various roles he is always belittling himself.

Here he promises to rescue Paul and discovers that Belcher, the most influential man in town, has robbed the inventor of a machine from which he has made a fortune. With the help of Mike Conlin, also a trapper, Jim determines to force a confession from Belcher. The result is successful for the inventor. In this picture Rogers does not slip quietly out of romance. In fact the pretty milliner consents to become Mrs. Jim and he almost spoils the ceremony when the minister starts to say, "Do you James Fenton"—by interrupting with—"Jes' call me Jim." The picture is crowded with dramatic moments which are interspersed with scenes of pathos and humor. The star's drollery is expressed also in the subtitles. Clarence Badger directed the feature, which is interpreted by a well-rounded cast.

PROGRAM READER

"Jes' Call Me Jim," the latest Goldwyn feature starring the inimitable Will Rogers, is the feature picture which comes to this theatre next ————. Mr. Rogers has built up a large and enthusiastic following through his ability to portray the everyday, human sort of fellow. Most of his stories are rich in pathos because of the element of sacrifice he conveys in the romances. He is willing to step aside for a more attractive chap. "Jes' Call Me Jim" presents him again in the role of a regular human being who loves a woman and believes her in love with another. The picture is full of that rare humor so characteristic of the star's personality, and it also provides an abundance of dramatic moments. The picture is an adaptation of J. G. Holland's story, "Seven Oaks," and was adapted by Clarence Badger.

CATCH LINES

He was afraid of women. He was so homely that he couldn't imagine any girl in love with him. See "Jes' Call Me Jim," a human picture with the human star, Will Rogers.

"Don't call me James—Jes' call me Jim!" That's the kind of a man he was. A plain fellow whose modesty was his greatest virtue. See Will Rogers.

"THE HOUSE OF TOYS"
(American-Pathe)

Picture Lacks Moving Moments Through Its Overworked Theme and Draggy Action

THIS American release might have been made into an entertaining picture, despite its hoary theme, had its action been compressed into three reels and with less attention paid to irrelevant details. As it is it travels to its obvious conclusion sending out on the journey an inconsequential amount of highlights which become rather tiresome because of their repetitious character. The story presents the idea of domestic misunderstandings and falters in its characterization because no sympathy is generated. It falters elsewhere also. There isn't a scene that carries any real dramatic quality, and too much of the story is given away in expository subtitles.

Yet when an incident is flashed the figures are revealed standing or sitting in groups of twos and threes with nothing of consequence to accomplish. A "scatter brained" girl marries what is to all appearances—a young man destined for big things. But he lacks confidence in himself with the result that a year later finds him a failure. The interior decorations of his house sort of discredit his attitude of poverty. So they have a mutual agreement to disagree. He goes to a furnished room and finds employment with a good Samaritan, while the wife finds refuge with a wealthy aunt a woman who had never approved of the marriage and sought to discredit the husband in the eyes of his spouse.

The subsequent action is spineless in character, emphasis being given to pointing out the "whys and wherefores" of the disagreement. The players act as tired as the story, as if they realized that it lacked moving moments. A note of pathos is brought out to show the contrast between a working girl whose life hasn't been a bed of roses, and the money-mad wife. The latter, although presented as the principal character, is absent for two reels, while her husband is working to gain confidence. Eventually she has an awakening which is also felt by the aunt. And she returns to her husband with a fine spirit of humility—though her reconciliation looks too arbitrary to be truthful. There are twelve or fifteen too many close-ups. The principal weakness of the picture is its characterization. The players do well with their few opportunities.—Length, 6 reels. Laurence Reid.

Directed by George L. Cox.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story which presents domestic misunderstanding is always certain of furnishing interesting reading, the cause of a young married couple being unable to live in harmony is usually the background of effective drama. Which introduces "The House of Toys," which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week with Seena Owen as the featured player. The theme of this subject is based upon the inability of a young wife to cooperate with her husband and inspire him to success. David Quinton didn't have much worldly goods to offer her, and she was advised to marry a man with an income. A year later she found out to her sorrow that her husband was considerable of a failure. So they made a mutual agreement to separate.

In the course of time David succeeded because he found confidence in himself. He met a girl who inspired him. And the wife, realizing that her life was a mockery, gladly sought and effected a reconciliation. They realized that a house must be made of stronger stuff than toys. The picture generates a good moral and offers moments of genuine dramatic appeal. The elements of pathos and heart interest are vital factors in scoring its high lights. The story was written by Henry Russell Miller, adapted by Daniel F. Whitcomb, and directed by George L. Cox. The latter has provided an adequate production and has handled his players to make the most of their scenes.

PROGRAM READER

She was a vain, pleasure-loving, money-mad girl, but being in love she didn't hesitate over marrying the ambitious young architect. She thought that his talent would lead them to the heights of prosperity. But a year of married life brought home to her that he was a failure. So they agreed to separate. She couldn't sink to his level and he was too kind to ask her to share his low estate. Then came a time that he found himself. Another girl furnished the inspiration. And the wife found out that her life was shallow and selfish. What did she do? What became of the husband and the other girl? Was there another man? See "The house of Toys," a picture of a slice of life. See it at this theatre ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You haven't any outstanding high spot which you can exploit here. The best course is to emphasize its moral value. Bring out that it teaches a good sermon without being preachy. Tell that it deals with domestic misunderstanding—of how a young couple were too proud to thresh out their troubles, preferring to go their separate ways. Bring out the value of this idea in appropriate catch lines and teaser ads. Have your artist draw a house built upon blocks or toys. This will point out the symbol. You can work out the same idea with your box-office window. You might mention the leading players. Feature it as a drama of the heart and home.

CATCH LINES

They were separated for years and they realized that their house was built from toys. What happened? See "The House of Toys."

She cared more for money than she did for her husband's love. A day came when she realized that wealth couldn't buy happiness. See the domestic drama, "The House of Toys."

"A WALL STREET MYSTERY"
(Arrow)

Love Interest Lacking in Average Detective Story

IF you think your patrons will be satisfied with an average detective story abounding in mystery, and will not miss their romance, this picture should give them sufficient entertainment. There is a faint shadow of a love story which turns up once or twice, but on the whole it attempts at nothing but creating interest by cooking up a murder mystery and letting the detective hero unravel it in five reels.

The first part of the picture is spent in introducing several characters, all of whom are assigned a motive for the murder which follows. This is, of course, supposed to keep the audience guessing as to who the guilty party really is. In the end we learn that none of those whom we had reason to suspect, committed the crime, and the discovery of the real murderer comes somewhat as a surprise. This is an old trick and one which as long as it is logically worked out, keeps up the interest. The detective, Tex, detects everything in the conventional way, and the introduction of some novel method of running down the criminal, would have intensified the interest immensely. But the finger prints and a piece of the heel of a shoe, torn off at the scene of the crime, are very ordinary bits of evidence, and most audiences would prefer a very extraordinary sleuth in their detective pictures.

The mystery is kept up in a good manner by the scenario writer who does not permit the average fan to guess the guilty party before the end. There is no particular star. Even Glen White, who plays the detective is given few opportunities. There are two innocent parties falsely imprisoned, but neither arouse our sympathy over-much.

This is not an elaborate production, and one of the office sets is even unsatisfactory. In only one scene is there real physical action, and the rest of the time the mystery takes its place. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Tex	Glen White
Mary Costello	Jane McAlpine
Norman Temple	David Wall
James Borden	Alexander A. Frank
Mrs. Borden	Marie Treador
Tom Williams	Joseph Striker
Minikin	Leo Delaney
Temple's Housekeeper	Augusta Perry
Chief of Police	Charles Graham

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"A Wall Street Mystery," the second of the famous "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries," series of detective dramas, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— . This is a mystery story that rivals the stories of Sherlock Holmes and Arsene Lupin, for gripping and thrilling drama. Glen White is the featured player, and he enacts the role of Tex, an amateur detective, whose hobby is the study of fingerprints.

The story revolves around the murder of Norman Temple, a Wall street broker. Tex, who was acquainted with the murdered man, follows up his own clues, although the police have already made two arrests and are confident that one of their prisoners is the guilty party. But Tex works along his own lines, and eventually, by a clever ruse, brings the criminal to justice.

There are few who will see this picture next ————, who will not be surprised when the real criminal is cornered by Tex. For there are three suspects who had motives for the crime. One is an associate of Temple who has been cheated by him, another is a recently discharged clerk, and the third is a Japanese valet, who has grown to hate his master. None of these, however, is the real murderer and you will be thoroughly surprised on the fifth reel at the unusual ending. And throughout the picture you will be thrilled by the intense mystery and the clever acting of the entire cast, all of whom are experienced screen actors of the highest type.

PROGRAM READER

An all star cast, headed by Glen White, and including Jane McAlpine, Alexander F. Frank, David Wall and Leo Delaney, will be seen in "A Wall Street Mystery," which will be the attraction at this theatre on ————. This is a detective story of the highest type, and is the second of the series of "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries." It is the kind of a picture that you cannot afford to miss if you are looking for photoplays that will thrill, mystify and please you. It centers around the murder of a New York stock broker, and it is only through the activities of Tex, the amateur detective, that the crime is cleared up and the guilty party brought to grief. At the end of the fourth reel if you are able to guess who is the murderer, you are a born detective. For the ending contains a surprise and a punch that will make you hold fast to your seat.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture that can best be exploited by emphasizing the mystery element. This can be done by a teaser campaign using the caption, "Who killed Norman Temple?" This, of course, is not new by any means, but it will still arouse the interest of the public. In front of your theatre use the sign "Reward! Anyone supplying evidence that will lead to the arrest of the murderer of Norman Temple, etc." In your mailing cards use the teaser method again. Run a replica of a finger print in your copy with the caption, "This is the finger print of the murderer of Norhan Temple!" Street stunts may be difficult, but you might have a masked man parade the street labeled "The Mystery Man." Follow this up by newspaper and screen slide advertising stating that Tex, the famous amateur detective, can solve the mystery.

CATCH LINES

A thumb-print on the handle of a gun was all that stood in the way of the execution of an innocent man for murder. But Tex was an expert on fingerprints and the real criminal was brought to justice. See "A Wall Street Mystery" at the ———— theatre.

"SHERRY"
(Edgar Lewis-Pathe)

Has Interesting Moments, But Rather Long Drawn Out

EDGAR LEWIS has given us some good productions during his career as a director, but his latest contribution to the screen, "Sherry," is not up to his usual standard.

In the first place the story, which is by George Barr McCutcheon, contains nothing new and dwells upon a theme which has been done many times, the drunkard who reforms, does the usual good deeds and thereby wins an heiress.

The picture has its thrills and dramatic moments, but there is so much footage wasted before the important points are touched upon—the feature runs seven reels—that it becomes rather tiresome before the end is reached.

McCutcheon's story may have looked well on the printed page, but in picture form it lacks the vital points which make good screen material.

Edgar Lewis' direction is praiseworthy in many places throughout the picture and he has been careful to inject the proper atmosphere, both in sets, exteriors, which contain some good "small town shots," and the selection of a fairly capable cast.

But he neglected to vary the action in many scenes, making some of them too short and others entirely too long.

Still, the picture has a certain charm which should interest.

It would not be a bad idea, however, to eliminate some of the unnecessary footage.—Length, 7 reels. -Frank Leonard.

Story by George Barr McCutcheon.
Directed by Edgar Lewis.
Scenario by Frances Guihan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Sherry," the Edgar Lewis production released through Pathe, will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is from the pen of George Barr McCutcheon whose "Graustark," "Beverly of Graustark" and "Brewster's Millions," are a few of this popular writer's previous stories.

The production was directed by Edgar Lewis, who has taken infinite care in the detail and arrangement of the picture's many important factors. Mr. Lewis, it will be remembered, has also produced "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister," "The Sign Invisible" and "The Great Divide."

The story deals with the life of Sheridan Redpath, known as "Sherry," who is the last remnant of an old family. He has been left a fortune, but like many others of his class has squandered it in dissipation. Being in a penniless condition and realizing the hopelessness to which he has reduced himself, he plucks up courage and decides to go to work. After many adventures among which is his meeting with the heroine, who is running away from her grandmother and whom he induces to return home, thereby winning the old lady's gratitude, he is employed by the richest man in town to act as his body guard.

In his new position he meets with many peculiar and exciting incidents and saves his employer from strangling his wife while walking in his sleep.

After distinguishing himself in a desperate fight with two burglars, one of whom he captures, the other escaping only to meet his death in jumping from a window after shooting his mother, "Sherry" is taken into business by his employer.

And our heroine being duly impressed by the manly qualities of this young man, and his determination "never to drink another drop," proposes marriage, it now being Leap Year, and is accepted.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— announces that "Sherry," an Edgar Lewis production, released through Pathe, will be the attraction at this theatre next ————.

The story was written by George Barr McCutcheon, who has become famous by writing such tales as "Graustark," "Beverly of Graustark," "Brewster's Millions" and "Nedra."

And the production was directed by Edgar Lewis, who has also directed such well known pictures as, "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister," "The Sign Invisible" and "The Great Divide."

Sheridan Redpath, familiarly known as "Sherry," is the last remnant of an old family who has squandered his fortune in drink. When he arrives at the last dime, he swears he will drink no more. And so well does he stick to his promise, that fortune smiles upon him again and he wins the hand of an heiress in marriage.

But all this does not happen until he has had his "ups and downs"—at one time pursuading the young heroine to return home, when she was determined to run away and at another capturing two burglars in a desperate and thrilling battle. All of which lands our young hero a good job and the girl of his choice.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this one, don't promise them too much for it is what might be termed an ordinary picture with nothing new in any of its sequences.

You have an attractive title which you might use in many comedy catch lines, if you care to put humor into them, especially in these times of prohibition, and then again as the hero has been a drunkard and swears off. This might be a good idea, but don't forget that the story is a dramatic one.

The author of the story, George Barr McCutcheon, is very well known, as is the director, Edgar Lewis, and you have a good cast which should not be forgotten.

CATCH LINES

He was known as the town drunkard—but then one day, he swore he would never drink another drop. Did he keep his promise? See "Sherry," it will tell you.

"THE UNKNOWN RANGER"
(Aywon Film Corp.)

A Mildly Entertaining Western

THIS Western is not quite up to the average when compared with many of the up-to-date productions of its kind.

But this doesn't mean that it won't attract and interest those who are given to entertainment of this sort.

Its chief faults lie in the fact that it is lacking in the thrills, the strong dramatic moments and suspense, which is necessary in pictures of this type.

"The Unknown Ranger" has all of these qualities, but they are not of the intensive variety and therefore are not impressive.

The usual riding and shootings occur and there is one scene in which hero pursues villain up and over some dangerous cliffs, both shooting back and forth, which is mildly exciting.

The story which is rather weak and disconnected, tells of the efforts of a young cowboy who has been made a ranger, to round up a smuggler, who is a semi-bad man and his gang. The villain as usual is in love with hero's gal and tries to gain possession of her. He does not succeed, however, for hero frustrates his plans, has a running fight with him among the cliffs and captures him in the home of the heroine, only to let the villain slip away in a very easy manner a rather weak and confusing finish.

The cast is an ordinary one, among whom are: Rex Ray, Ben Hill and Marie Newell.

The direction is of the ordinary variety if the action is taken into consideration, but it must be said that the selection of locations was up to standard and gave the picture an atmosphere that could not have been better. Length, 5 reels. Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

The Unknown Ranger.....Rex Ray
Chandler.....Ben Hill
Jo.....Marie Newell

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Rex Ray in the Aywon Film Corporation's production, "The Unknown Ranger," will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is a Western melodrama containing the thrills, action and tense drama which is sought for by patrons who delight in this sort of entertainment.

Rex Ray, the star, is a capable actor in the leading role, which calls for plenty of riding, shooting and daredevil stunts.

He posed as a writer of novels, searching for "local color" for one of his books. But it was not long before our hero, Rex Ray, had him under suspicion as a dangerous character.

First, he caught him cheating at cards, then found him making love to the beautiful heroine and then found out that he was a smuggler, and of that terrible drug, opium.

Rex Ray now proceeded to round him up and trailed him to his mountain hiding place where a terrific fight takes place between our hero and the smuggler's gang.

Rex is successful in his thrilling fight and succeeds in killing two of the bandits but in the mixup the principal offender escapes. Our hero gives pursuit and a running pistol duel among the rocky cliffs ends only when the smuggler is wounded badly.

But he escapes again and is discovered in the heroine's ranch home by Rex, who overhears the bad man telling the young lady that he was shot by the hero who was in a jealous rage.

Rex enters, brands him as a liar and proves to the young girl that he is a real man and "The Unknown Ranger."

PROGRAM READER

"The Unknown Ranger," an Aywon Film Corporation production, will be the attraction at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

Rex Ray, the star, plays a delightfully picturesque role, and is supported by a cast of clever character actors.

The story tells of the efforts of a young cowboy, who has been made a ranger, to round up a gang of smugglers who are determined to set up a traffic in that most detestable of drugs, opium.

They are led by an unscrupulous villain who hesitates at nothing, even trying to entice away the young heroine, in his spare moments.

He is pursued by Rex, who after two thrilling fights, one in a mountain cave and the other among the rocky cliffs, succeeds in wounding but not capturing him.

The latter is finally rounded up in the heroine's mountain home, by our hero, who succeeds in branding the bad man as a liar and proves to his sweetheart that he is worthy of the name of "The Unknown Ranger."

SUGGESTIONS

Your one best bet is to play up the name of this feature which is rather an attractive one.

As the story is not a strong one as westerns go, it might not be a bad idea to advertise it as "a drama of western life," featuring more the home element than the shootings and thrills, which are rather mild.

However, there is one scene which is worthy of mention. It is the one in which the hero pursues the villain over the cliffs in a pistol duel. These cliffs appear to be rather high and should furnish excitement as the actors go through the action.

Rex Ray is a fair actor in this type of picture and could be played up to some advantage in the role but he is far from the top in acting and action.

CATCH LINES

He said he was a story writer and was looking for "local" for his new book. How did they find out that he was not the man he pretended to be? See "The Unknown Ranger," it will tell you.

How did the villain escape from the hero after he was wounded in a desperate fight? See "The Unknown Ranger," it will tell you.

"LOVE'S HARVEST"

(Fox)

Dainty Star in Comedy Drama of High Order

SHIRLEY MASON, in her third starring picture for Fox, keeps up the pace that ought to enthrone her in the hearts of many fans. "Love's Harvest" may not equal "Her Elephant Man" from a production standpoint, for there is nothing very elaborate about it; but for an interesting little story with many a humanizing directorial touch, and for good acting, not only by the star, but by the entire cast, it will rank among the best.

Howard Mitchell, the director, seems to have attained a happy mean by injecting sufficient, yet not excess, of sugar plum cuteness. For Shirley Mason is a "cute" star and the temptation is to fill the picture so full of sweet little close-ups that it reminds one of a confectionary shop. But in "Love's Harvest" the star is allowed to impress her delightful personality without leaving the feeling that we are witnessing an unnatural characterization of gushy, giggling girlhood. And, in the emotional love-scenes, the star gets under the skin with some sympathetic acting.

As to the story, it is a romantic, clean comedy drama, which takes a rather long time to get started, but once the interest is aroused, it is held until the very end. Jane Day, played by the star, is fifteen when she runs away from home, and is taken in by an old bachelor whose lonely heart has been touched by her childish charms. He is a theatrical producer and realizes she has an excellent voice, so after two years he sends her to Paris to study. There her romance begins, but she feels it her duty to continue her musical career in order to repay the man who has been so kind to her, rather than marry the man she loves. But her foster-father, who now loves her and wants her for himself, makes the sacrifice and orders her to marry the man of her own age.

Raymond McKee and Edwin Booth Tilton help a great deal to make the picture pleasing, and the star's dog will get a number of laughs. The titles are on the intimate type—written in a conversational, humorous style. They improve a great deal towards the end. There are no big interiors, but a Parisian street scene, and good sunset photography, will leave an impression. On the whole, everyone ought to come away satisfied. Such comedy dramas as this may be the cause of some emotional actresses looking for new jobs.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Shirley Mason, the dainty little Fox star, plays the lead in "Love's Harvest," a romantic comedy drama, which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre beginning ————. This is the third picture starring Miss Mason, and is by the same author who wrote "Her Elephant Man," which made a tremendous hit whenever shown. The attractive little star will also be remembered by all who saw Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," in which she played the part of Jim Hawkins.

"Love's Harvest" is a pleasing, human story, crammed with comedy, and with bits of pathos sprinkled here and there, while an absorbing love story runs through it. It is guaranteed to be lacking in black-eyed vampires and mustache twirling villains, and gives the star every opportunity to entertain and please you with her whimsical, attractive personality. When the story opens she plays the part of a fifteen-year-old girl, whose dying step-father, having nothing else to bequeath, willed her to a wealthy distant relative. But although Shirley likes the young man, she does not like his friends, so she runs away. Years later they meet in Paris, where Shirley is studying music. Then it is a choice between her career, which she owes to the friends who have been so kind to her, and the man she loves. You can guess, of course, how it ends, but you cannot imagine how delightfully refreshing and entertaining petit Shirley Mason makes this picture.

In the cast are Raymond McKee, an ideal leading man to play opposite such a star, and Edwin Booth Tilton, who gives an excellent performance. And then there is "Buddie," a dog whose equal has seldom been seen on the screen.

PROGRAM READER

"Love's Harvest," with Shirley Mason, is the attraction for ————. Here is a picture that you will not want to miss any more than you would want to go without your dessert. No one wants to eat nothing but roast beef, and no one wants to see only emotional melodramas. Here, then, is a comedy drama just as refreshing as ice cream in August, and as welcome as a place by the fire in December. For Shirley Mason, petit and pretty—an animated mass of pulchritude, is a star who is fast rising to the highest spot in filmdom. You will remember her from "Her Elephant Man," and you could never forget her as Jim Hawkins in "Treasure Island." In this picture she has been given a story that is full of comedy, not lacking in pathos, and overflowing with human interest. Pearl Doles Bell is the authoress, and the picture is an adaptation from her novel, "His Harvest."

SUGGESTIONS

Your boosting of this will depend upon whether you have already shown "Her Elephant Man," "Molly and I," or "Treasure Island" to your patrons. If you have they will remember the star and you can spare a little space to telling about the story. Remember that "Her Elephant Man" and "Love's Harvest" are by the same author. If you are showing Shirley Mason for the first time, try to create an interest in her by lobby photographs, advance slides and newspaper stories. State that she is only nineteen years old. If Viola Dana is a favorite, tell them that Shirley is her sister. In your catch lines get over the idea of the peculiar will leaving the girl to a man she had never seen. You can work out a teaser campaign along the same lines.

"WOLVES OF THE STREET"

(Art-o-Graf-Arrow)

Unsatisfactory Production of Wall Street Story

THE appeal in this picture is not to the fans who desire the artistic in pictures or who want to see finesse in acting. The basis of its appeal is in its western action and the high finance element. And the western scenes present nothing that is unusual and will fail to get a real, spine shivering thrill out of an audience. The production also suffers from lack of satisfying sets as well as original bits of business. One ball-room set, for instance, sprinkled very thinly with extras, presents a rather shabby appearance. This is not hypercritical harping on one error, for in these days of elaborate settings an audience will probably feel vaguely unsatisfied after witnessing such an inexpensive production.

The story is of the dual role variety, with Edmund Cobb, who is featured, playing both parts. Some of the double exposure is well done. The story opens in Wall Street, where Trevlyn the elder, a financier, is trying to break the corner in wheat. He is murdered by his enemies and his son, a western ranchman, comes to continue the fight. He is attacked several times and then departs for his western mine, where Bolshevism is rampant, leaving a "double" to care for his business. In the west Trevlyn is kidnapped, and in the east his double is bribed. His sweetheart is the means of identifying the real Trevlyn and the two are united, with the hero eight million dollars to the good after the Wall Street battle.

Terse matter-of-fact sub-titles tell much of the story. The Bolshevist, half hidden behind whiskers, is not convincing. Neither are the laborers at the mine, who shift their allegiance from anarchy to capital at a moment's notice. There are improbabilities in the story, but these are the least of its troubles. Strange looking New York policemen, a super-villainous villain, and an unsuccessful attempt at sunset photography are some of the others. There are some good shots of New York's financial district. In the smaller towns the picture ought to please because of the romance attached to the magic name of Wall Street. Length, 6 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Denver Deavers, James Trevlyn } ...Edmund F. Cobb
Eleanor Fernwood .... Vida Johnson

Directed by Otis B. Thayer.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"Wolves of the Street," thrilling story of the West, and Wall street, the greatest money market in the world, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is an Art-o-Graf film, and Edmund Cobb, who will be remembered from Universal and Essanay pictures, is the featured player. The picture was directed by Otis B. Thayer, who has been in the motion picture industry, both as an actor and a director, almost since its beginning.

The story deals with crooked Wall street financiers and their attempts to profiteer in wheat. In their villainy they even stoop to the murdering of their enemies to accomplish their evil ends. The story shifts to the wild and rugged West, where the hero is cow-punching when his father is killed. James Trevlyn, Jr., comes to Wall street to continue his father's battle against the profiteers, and he is fought as his father was by the unscrupulous crooks. Besides attempting to kill him, they strive to incite Bolshevism among the employees of his Western mine. But Trevlyn finds a man who closely resembles him, and leaving him in charge of his New York office, hastens westward to quell the revolution. His enemies' agents are active in the West, however, and he is kidnapped by a crowd of thugs, while the "double" in New York is bribed by the profiteers. The situation is eventually cleared up by Trevlyn's fiancee, who identifies the real hero.

This is a picture that you will enjoy from beginning to end. It is up-to-the-minute and timely in every respect, dealing with present-day profiteers and Bolshevism.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

On ———— the attraction at this theatre will be "Wolves of the Street," an all star production that contains one of the most thrilling and gripping stories that have reached the screen in many a day. It is as timely and up-to-the-minute as any picture could possibly be, for it is built up around the themes of Bolshevism and unscrupulous profiteers. The "street" is Wall street—the centre of the world's finance, and the "wolves" are those dishonest captains of industry who manipulate the money market to make their millions, even preying on the countless thousands who are forced to pay whatever prices these financiers ask, for the bread they eat. Besides the Wall street setting there is no lack of live, Western action, with Edmund Cobb, who is featured in the production, as the cowboy son of a New York broker. "Wolves of the Street" is a straight-from-the-shoulder wallop at profiteers and anarchistic labor agitators, but it is presented in an interesting story that you cannot afford to miss.

SUGGESTIONS

This has no star, director or author who is well enough known to the fans in general for you to boost. If you are far from New York, or not in a large city, concentrate on the Wall street setting, for there is a certain attraction in the very name to a great many. Tell them of the views of financial district and let them know that they will get an insight into the workings and machinations of high finance. Don't neglect the Western action scenes, stills of which should be mixed with the New York scenes. Get as many catch lines out of the title as you can.

CATCH LINES

"Wolves of the Street" they were, manipulating the price of wheat to fill their own pockets with gold.

A gripping story of labor unrest and profiteers—and a powerful condemnation of each.

Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker,
President,
Rothacker Film Mfg. Co.,
Chicago.

Dear Mr. Rothacker:—

I am very happy to advise you that I think one of the things that has contributed so largely to the instantaneous success of "THE GUMPS" has been the exceptional work that has been done by your laboratory. I am looking forward with the keenest interest to the time that you open your laboratory in New York and Los Angeles, with the belief that when it does open we will be insured of good prints from every source that we buy.

Yours very truly,

A New Feature

Still another link has been added to the "NEWS" chain of service.

Turn to the Music Section of this week's issue and read the first of a series of articles by Charles D. Isaacson, under whose direction the Music Department will hereafter be conducted.

Mr. Isaacson has a following of two million music-lovers he has created and developed in New York City. That means—he has shown results. Watch his work with Motion Picture News.

Another feature of this issue of the "NEWS" is a complete section of blue prints—complete theatre plans just as you would get them from an architect. They are part of the all-round service Motion Picture News is rendering to the theatre man and accessory manufacturer.

IN the year to come, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will continue to produce and distribute the majority of the motion pictures that bring profit to the exhibitors that show them. The producing department, under the direction of Mr. Lasky, will deliver from studios in New York, in California, in England and in India, a quality of product perhaps even better than that which has marked the most prosperous year that exhibitors of Paramount Pictures ever have experienced.

We shall make about one hundred and twenty pictures a year, and will release at least two pictures every week.

A great many of these new productions are completed. To say that they are as strong box-office attractions as the best pictures of this year is to state a fact based upon actual observation of the finished product.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation enters the new year with more friends than ever before. It has made these friends by delivering a consistent supply of the most popular motion pictures at a fair price. It will keep these friends by continuing to supply the demand for productions of genuine quality.

These new Paramount Pictures will be booked on any plan that suits the convenience of the exhibitor.

SEPTEMBER

Adolph Zukor Presents a

GEORGE FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION

"THE RIGHT TO LOVE"

with Mae Murray and David Powell

Photoplay by OUIDA BERGERE Adapted from the play by Pierre Frondaie and Claude Farrare

A Paramount Picture

A picture as rich in setting and costuming, as strong in appeal, and as tremendous in box-office value as Mr. Fitzmaurice's "On With the Dance"

Adolph Zukor Presents

ELSIE FERGUSON in "LADY ROSE'S DAUGHTER"

Directed by HUGH FORD

By Mrs. Humphry Ward Scenario by Burns Mantle

A Paramount Picture

Mrs. Humphry Ward's famous novel provides the best vehicle that Miss Ferguson has ever had. Like "His House in Order" it is another triumph of Hugh Ford's directorship

---

Thomas H. Ince Presents

CHARLES RAY in "A VILLAGE SLEUTH"

By Agnes Christine Johnston

Directed by Jerome Storm Photographed by Chet Lyons A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

Charlie's the hired man in a sanitarium—and a correspondence school detective! That makes a story head and shoulders over any of his past stuff. Like "Greased Lightning" and "The Girl Dodger," but funnier

---

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

THOMAS MEIGHAN in "CIVILIAN CLOTHES"

Directed by HUGH FORD

From the play by Thompson Buchanan Scenario by Clara S. Beranger

A Paramount Picture

Thomas Meighan has become famous for his work in "The Miracle Man," "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?" Now a star in his own right, in a Broadway success of proven box-office appeal, he will be one of the really big money-makers of the year

Paramount Pictures

RELEASES

Adolph Zukor Presents

DOROTHY DALTON in

Sir James Barrie's Famous Play "HALF AN HOUR"

Directed by Harley Knoles — Scenario by Clara S. Beranger

A Paramount Picture

A luxurious and magnificent production of the great play by the author of "Male and Female" and "Peter Pan"

Cosmopolitan Productions

"HUMORESQUE" Featuring ALMA RUBENS

Story by Fannie Hurst

Scenario by Frances Marion — Directed by Frank Borzage

A Paramount Picture

A story of mother love—with all the comedy of "Potash and Perlmutter," all the pathos of "The Music Master" and all the heart appeal of "Madame X"

The New Art Film Company Presents

DOROTHY GISH in "LITTLE MISS REBELLION"

by Harry Carr

Scenario by Wells Hastings — Directed by George Fawcett

A Paramount Picture

Here's something out of the ordinary for Dorothy Gish. Now she is a Princess who in the whirligig of revolution becomes a flapjack artist in a lunch room. There's excitement, comedy and romance in every minute of it

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

WALLACE REID in "WHAT'S YOUR HURRY?"

by Byron Morgan

Directed by Sam Wood — Scenario by Byron Morgan

A Paramount Picture

Wallie Reid's best pictures were his automobile stories—"Double Speed" and
"Excuse My Dust." Now in "What's Your Hurry?" he drives a motor truck. It has the same zip and pep, and it beats them both in power and speed and box-office appeal

OCTOBER

Cosmopolitan Productions

"THE RESTLESS SEX"

by Robert W. Chambers

with MARION DAVIES Directed by Robert Z. Leonard

A Paramount Picture

A sure-fire box-office title, a famous author and a wonderful cast make this a genuinely great money-maker. It is an ultra-luxurious production of Chambers' story which ran in the Cosmopolitan and later in book form, fascinating millions of readers

---

GEORGE MELFORD'S PRODUCTION

ROSCOE [FATTY] ARBUCKLE in "THE ROUND-UP"

From the play by Edmund Day A Paramount Picture Scenario by Tom Forman

Roscoe Arbuckle in a full length drama! That's all you need to get the crowds. The play was a sensation on the stage, and on the screen, with Arbuckle in his first straight comedy role, it combines every element of success

Thomas H. Ince Presents

DOUGLAS MacLEAN in "THE JAILBIRD"

A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

Douglas MacLean was unanimously pronounced the brightest star in the film firmament last year. Exhibitors who cleaned up on "23½ Hours' Leave," "What's Your Husband Doing?" and "Mary's Ankle" don't have to be told that this is a winner

---

WILLIAM S. HART in "THE CRADLE OF COURAGE"

A William S. Hart Production

Directed and Adapted by Lambert Hillyer

A Paramount Picture

William S. Hart has been producing the best pictures of his career under his own management. First "The Toll Gate" and then "Sand!" And this one is on the same big scale, as human, as original, as thrilling as the others

---

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

CECIL B. DeMILLE'S PRODUCTION
"SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT"

by Jeanie Macpherson

A Paramount Picture

Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts and other DeMille favorites interpret the roles of this magnificent production, which is rich in human interest, and carries in every scene the artistry of the producer

RELEASES

From the play by William Gillette — Directed by Donald Crisp — Scenario by Tom Forman

A Paramount Picture

NOVEMBER

Jesse L. Lasky Presents a

GEORGE MELFORD PRODUCTION

"BEHOLD MY WIFE"

from the novel, "The Translation of a Savage"
by Sir Gilbert Parker. With Mabel Julienne Scott

A Paramount Picture

The magnificent natural scenery of the Northwest, and the richness of modern England form highly contrasted backgrounds for an engrossing story of a man's sacrifice for love, and of an Indian woman's development. This production is as rich in box-office possibilities as it is in power and beauty.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

ETHEL CLAYTON in "ROZANNE OZANNE"

(Working Title)

by Cynthia Stockley

A Paramount Picture

Greater than "Poppy" this tale marks the highest art of Cynthia Stockley and the main character is perfectly fitted to Miss Clayton's talents. It is being produced with a wealth of investiture worthy of so strong a story plot and every effort will be made to make it the Ethel Clayton picture de luxe, the best thing she has ever done.

Adolph Zukor Presents a

GEORGE FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION
"IDOLS OF CLAY"

with Mae Murray and David Powell

By Ouida Bergere

A Paramount Picture

A picture that extends over every phase of life—the glamour of the South Seas, the gaiety of London's Bohemia, and the vice of the lurid Limehouse District. More spectacular than "On With the Dance."

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

WALLACE REID in "THE CHARM SCHOOL"

by Alice Duer Miller

Directed by Sam Wood

Scenario by Tom Geraghty

A Paramount Picture

From the famous "Saturday Evening Post" story of the young man who inherited a girl's boarding academy aud turned it into a "charm school." One of the most original and entertaining plots ever devised and filled with humor. Wallace Reid is given a chance to play the real lover again and the supporting cast will be virtually all-star.

RELEASES

Adolph Zukor Presents

DOROTHY DALTON in "A WINTER CITY FAVORITE"

(Working Title)

By Charles Belmont Davis Scenario by Rosina Henley Directed by Harley Knoles

A Paramount Picture

The winter city is, of course, New York and the favorite is a young woman of just such charm as Dorothy Dalton possesses. The story allows for elaborate and thrilling scenes and provides Miss Dalton with a characterization of beauty and gripping dramatic power. The author, brother of Richard Harding Davis, is one of America's greatest short story writers.

Thomas H. Ince Presents

ENID BENNETT in "HER HUSBAND'S FRIENDS"

Directed by Fred Niblo By Marjorie Benton Cooke A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

A picture about marriage—the kind of picture that rings true, with that human touch that made "Stepping Out" and "Hairpins" so popular. Enid Bennett gives a wonderful portrayal of the wife.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

"BURGLAR PROOF" with BRYANT WASHBURN

By William Slavens McNutt

Directed by Maurice Campbell

A Paramount Picture

A little different sort of picture from every angle. A story that is filled with real humor and heart interest and one of the best characterizations ever made by Mr. Washburn, who is supported by a cast de luxe headed by Lois Wilson.

Adolph Zukor Presents

BILLIE BURKE in "THE FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON"

(By arrangement with F. Ziegfeld, Jr.)

Directed by Edward Dillon Scenario by Lawrence McCloskey

A Paramount Picture

The famous play by Clyde Fitch made into a captivating romance of humor, especially suited to Miss Burke's personality. The story of a lively young widow who amuses herself with men, but who sacrifices her reputation and jeopardizes her chances for happiness to save the sister she loves.

FUTURE PRODUCTIONS

BESIDES the productions to be released in September, October and November, the following will be among the year's releases:

HOBART BOSWORTH

in

"Below The Surface"

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

NOVEL in theme, great in production and astonishing in originality of situation, "Below the Surface" strikes a new note in drama.

Here are a few of the amazing, breath-taking thrills that follow one another with lightning speed:

The daring plunge of Martin Flint (Hobart Bosworth) to the depths of the sea to rescue the submarine crew.

The luring of Luther Flint by the confidence woman, to dive for sunken treasure.

The hazardous descent to the sea bed, made by the infatuated youth, to please his bride.

The tragedy of the boy's return to his desolated home, after his bride has fled with her partner in crime.

The descent of Martin Flint upon the gayety of the cabaret, where he seizes his daughter-in-law and takes her home.

The wreck of the liner, and the hair-breadth escape of Martin Flint.

The drowning of James Arnold and Edna Gordon on the wrecked liner.

The boy's dive to the wreck.

What he sees through the porthole.

His rescue when his father, without a diving suit, gropes down a cable under the water, cuts his son's fouled life-line with a knife and swims with him to the surface.

"The Greatest Love Story Ever Told"

Wins High Praise
from Trade Critics

"One of the most successful and inspiring love stories that has been presented on the screen . . . . the screen play is no less absorbing than the stage play was and is free from that enemy of the good drama known as 'padding.'"—Moving Picture World.

"'Romance' is a picture of remarkable charm. It has been worth waiting for and unfolds on the screen a succession of maddening love scenes which positively thrill. It is the sort of thing to delight the discriminating and appeal to the masses."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"There is no doubt about the drawing power of 'Romance,' particularly in metropolitan quarters. It will bring out people that seldom come to the picture houses. The older ones, many of whom saw the original play when presented something over six years ago, and those who are familiar with the tragic yet beautiful character of the romance presented, will turn out en masse to see the picture. It is an unusual love story carrying a deep appeal and should appeal especially to the better class of audience."—Wid's Daily

"The verdict is sure to be 'an artistic production' . . . . The picture will certainly appeal to those in search of romance or those who have lost it in the days when love was young."—Motion Picture News.

"'Romance' is a drama in every sense of the word—a credit to the motion picture art."—Harrison's Reports.

"'Romance' is eminently fitted for the screen. It has all the elements of appeal for screen fans."
—New York Morning Telegraph

"'Romance' is a romance in every sense of the word, replete with pathos, comedy and tragedy, a story that delicately points a moral."—New York Dramatic Mirror.

STARTING July 12th, Universal will release during the ensuing twelve months a New Star Series of Universal Special Attractions.

These new Stellar Productions will number forty-eight in all—you will remember them as "The Great Forty-eight"—one for every week in the year except for four omissions during July and August.

This is an increase of one-third over Universal's production of Special Attractions for the year past. And this increase has but one reason behind it—demand—in other words, the complete artistic and commercial success of Universal Special Attractions.

But we have done more than simply increase their number. We have improved the quality of Universal Special Attractions in a way that I, familiar with constant improvement tho I am, hardly believed possible. I feel that I can do you no bigger favor in return for past appreciations than to advise you to contract for this newest Universal Series in its splendid entirety.

Frank Mayo in Eight Big Pictures

VIGOROUS, but clean cut—virile, but a finished actor in either dress coat or mackinaw, FRANK MAYO comes to your audiences in "The Great Forty-eight" in eight productions packed with modern realism, action and red-blooded romance. The first of these is "THE RED LANE," directed by Lynn Reynolds, the same man who made "The Brute Breaker" for you, and will be released July 12th. Your whole year holds out no surer promise of splendid entertainment than these eight big Mayos.

Seven Nationally Popular Players in

Star Series

Lyons and Moran in Eight Modern Comedy Dramas

THE day of the comedy drama a la mode is here. And LYONS & MORAN are here—in "The Great Forty-eight"—with eight hugely amusing, perfectly dressed, "young married folks" productions that are fifty-fifty thrills and chuckles. "LA LA LUCILE," from the well-known operetta, is their first, released on August 16th, directed by THEMSELVES.

ADDED to the forty NEW STAR SERIES UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS mentioned in the foregoing this Company purposes to release a series of eight Prize Pictures featuring a NEW STAR. Bear in mind the fact that UNIVERSAL has, in its long, successful career, been the birthplace of more exhibitor-stars than any other concern in the business and you will know without our telling you that UNIVERSAL'S new star in "The Great Forty-eight" can be booked without hesitation—for, in addition to her own charming personality and talent, she will have behind her the most complete support in the intelligent, artistic making of pictures which the industry affords today.

SUNSET-BURRUD-SCENIC-SERIAL

50% Story + 50% Scenic Splendor = 100% Entertainment

Special Pictures Corporation offers you 700 feet of entertainment each week. A scenic serial of the sports and dangers encountered by two unchaperoned American girls touring the wildest, grandest part of the earth—The Rocky Mountains from Mexico to Alaska. Directed by a master—Dick Burrud—(he's packed over every inch of this country) with the co-operation of Scenic Specialists of Sunset Magazine (500,000 readers) and the U. S. Department of Interior, National Park Service. Tinted and toned, the "Sunset-Burrud-Scenic-Serial" will ease the nervous strain of your tired city dwellers—and your box-office will profit as a natural result.

First release July 4th—Each week thereafter

ANNOUNCING REALART'S NEWEST STAR

BEBE DANIELS

IN GRACE LOVELL BRYAN'S AMAZING STORY

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL!"

(Particulars within)

Here's Our Prediction:

BEBE DANIELS

will place her past successes in the "also ran" class as a star in

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL"

This is the first photoplay she ever has appeared in, which was chosen with her sparkling, vivacious and colorful type of acting only in mind.

Miss Daniels attained success in

"MALE and FEMALE"
"EVERYWOMAN"
"THE DANCIN' FOOL"
"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?"

But you will like her even better in because it is 100 percent. Bebe Daniels, accentuating her own delicious, inimitable style.

REALART PICTURES

By GRACE LOVELL BRYAN

is an amalgamation of two great recent SATURDAY EVENING POST story successes — "You Never Can Tell" and "Class."

In line with Realart's policy of thoroughness we had to buy the two for one production. In all that goes to make a fine picture, Realart can safely say to exhibitors:

BEBE DANIELS

"MORE than your Money's Worth!"

THE FIRST DANIELS SUBJECT

gives this "bit of the mystic Orient slumbering within a lovely New World personality" — as Miss Daniels has been described— at her creative best, in a part that will win legions of new admirers.

REALART PICTURES

She's
the Good Little Bad Girl

The Globe and Commercial Advertiser

[Stackpole.

"Jes' Call Me Jim," with Will Rogers, at the Strand is not what the press agents quaintly call "a wonder play"; it has no spectacular falls or rises or Babylonian scenes large as life and twice as natural. Yet we cannot remember any single film that has caused more grateful comment from film fans in and out of print. So much for sincerity and humor and genuine background.

CARPENTIER SCORES

"The Wonder Man"

Directed by John G. Adolfi

Has Smashing Premier in NEW YORK CITY at $2.00 Admissions.

The Grand Ballroom of The HOTEL ASTOR seating 2000 people was packed to capacity.

S.R.O. Business the first four days of the run indicates "TURN AWAY". Business for the entire week.

This Triumph was scored in the face of a three day Holiday that caused an exodus to the country, that was unprecedented in the history of New York.

CRITICISM from

THE NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM

May 30, 1920

by JANE DIXON

"Last evening, in the grand ballroom of the Astor Hotel, Georges appeared for cinema championship of the world. Beyond preadventure of doubt his is no one-track talent."

A BIG SURPRISE

"The Carpentier picture was one of the biggest surprises Broadway has had in many a season.

"We are wise to the ways of capitalizing celebrities—hundred-thousand-dollar name—ten-twenty-and-thirty scenario acting, scenery and support. It always makes us feel as if some one had sold us a toy balloon and then stuck a pin in it.

"Roberston-Cole have not so imposed upon a hero-worshipping public. They have made it possible for us to see one of the most popular athletes of the day in action. This much we expected, but what we did not expect was to find in Carpentier a real actor, an artist with the finish of a French gentleman and the finesse of an habitual stage star."

THE WONDER MAN

"Such is the name under which Robertson-Cole, promoters of the film, have chosen to introduce their boxing star to an already sceptical screen world.

"M. Carpentier not only lived up to the title. He did more. He topped it. Three frozen-faced critics who are wont to use these twilight picture hours for malevolent meditation, were seen to rouse from their stupor and blink their eyes unbelievingly at "The Wonder Man." When our hero caused the villain to kiss the canvas for the fatal ten, one of these three ravens actually committed the critical faux pas of clapping his hands in approval just like an ordinary ticket-buyer. The mistake was overlooked on the part of his fellows owing to the heavy barrage of applause being laid down by a wondering and well-pleased audience."

"MILLION DOLLAR SMILE"

The Carpentier smile is bound to cause the hearts of several million matinee maids to skip a beat every time it lights up his frankly winning face. His is a personality so accentuated as to overcome the silence of the screen, to reach out and make friends among those who have merely meant to pose in the role of onlookers.

The story? Why tell? Suffice to say it is good, substantial, thrilling, sustained, and that it has to do with the French and the United States Secret Service.

"The Wonder Man"

To follow the Astor showing:—
THE STRAND—New York City, week June 6th.
THE STRAND—Brooklyn, N. Y., week June 13th.

A Few Newspaper Criticisms:

The men like his serious scenes, especially when he is pitting his slenderness in scientific combat against a heavier opponent, but the women like the nice boyish smile that so attractively lights up his face. New York Morning Telegraph.

The most striking feature of the entertainment was the revelation of Carpentier as an actor. He has many opportunities for distinctive action, opportunities of which he takes full advantage New York Tribune

It is a splendid picture, aside from Carpentier's part in it and he is almost as good a screen actor as he is a fighter. New York Herald

"His (Carpentier's) suppleness is a delight and he can act, too." New York News.

"Surprised his audience at the Hotel Astor by demonstrating real acting ability. The producers have supplied 'The Idol of France' with an excellent story and a competent supporting cast." New York Evening Mail.

Moe Mark says:—

"If the exhibitors have any doubts about "THE WONDER MAN" being one of the REAL BIG PICTURES of the year—have them wire me."

No Actor on Stage or Screen—Has ever received the tremendous VOLUME of PUBLICITY that has been given to GEORGES CARPENTIER—AND HE IS STILL RECEIVING FIRST PAGE SPACE.

Every ROBERTSON-COLE Exchange has a print of this Unusually Big Special—SCREEN IT—or "Ask the Exhibitor that played it."

"HIS PAJAMA GIRL"

One of the very few pictures that stands out in State Right history, in a day of many good pictures, as a production that combines all the money-making value that an extraordinary picture can contain. Popular Star, delightful and entertaining story, quality production and a title that spells box-office value in its nth power.

And it contains in a big measure many highly desirable exploitation possibilities. Its selling angles are numerous. It abounds with possibilities for tie-ups and novelty advertising. It's a picture, which because of its many unusual angles will stand out as one of the most profitable state right offerings of the day.

The beautiful and original line of advertising matter which we have prepared for this production is an unquestionable asset in its promotion. The many who have already purchased this picture for their territory acknowledge not only its big selling possibilities but a big portion of them will present it with a chorus of Pajama Girls and more than double the value of this picture to themselves and the exhibitor.

TO THE FILM PRODUCER

A new field has opened up

A BY-PRODUCT has come to hand which means REVENUE TO THE PRODUCER which is only just beginning to develop.

REMEMBER

THERE is that Potential Audience of the Motion Picture, the non-theatrical public, which is being developed through the use of the Motion Picture in the Home, Church, Lodge and elsewhere by the use of the "SAFETY STANDARD" FILM.

Here pictures of education, science, entertainment, etc., are of the utmost interest—

To this audience a good negative years old may be as desirable as one made yesterday.

Therefore, by cooperation with the "Safety Standard," non-theatrical field, the Producer can:—

1. Secure additional revenue from his old negative.
2. Create the interest of new audiences.
3. Increase the present audiences with new theatre goers.
4. Stimulate an interest in his new productions.

A Box Office Duet

THOUGH the piano and the violin differ widely they are alike in this,—that the same melody can be played on both. Between the business of the RITCHEY LITHO CORP. and that of the exhibitor there is a similar likeness and a similar difference. For instance we have a common interest in great posters,—we in their making,—he in their use.

A RITCHEY poster will cause a prospective audience to advance to the box office, whereas from an ordinary one they will retreat to the street. The RITCHEY poster will succeed because it is an instrument whose melody appeals to all. It plays a march, as it were, and to its rythmic beat the public keep step,—on their way to the auditorium.

To our music the exhibitor should play an accompaniment, and his motive should be a demand for RITCHEY posters. He should raise a melodious din positively insisting upon having them. The one thing that matters is that he produces a sufficiency of sound.

In the end he will get the only kind of posters that will answer for his purpose,—

RITCHEY POSTERS!

VOL. XXI JUNE 12, 1920 No. XXV

As the Dust Settles

JUDGING from the amount of dust being kicked up in advance, the Cleveland Convention ought to prove a humdinger. We can easily recall previous conventions over which the dust positively refused to rise.

That, we are sure, is all there is to the pre-convention squabble—dust, and nothing more. We have an idea that Frank Rembusch winks at himself as he shaves, these mornings; that Sydney Cohen while piously deprecating the thunder in the air is secretly tickled to death over the interest it indicates. Each of these gentlemen believes too sincerely and unselfishly in organization for organizations' sake to let squabbles stand in the way of what is quite evidently the greatest opportunity that has ever fallen in the lap of National exhibitor organization. We have suspected those leaders, right along, of pulling a very successful publicity stunt on the trade press and have lent ourselves gladly to this end. As for Willard Patterson, he has, we imagine, long since decided that the Chicago meeting was as successful a prologue as could possibly have happened for his Independent Southern Exhibitors and their sturdy issue of self determination. He doesn't, as he says, give a rip what happens at Cleveland so long as a big National organization results. And we know that every other leader, state, national or local, feels—in fact, each one has got to feel—exactly the same way about it.

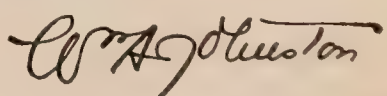
WE only hope that the guns haven't boomed loud enough to some exhibitors to make them feel that Cleveland will give them ringside seats and little else. Nothing of the sort: witness the sane letter of Harry Kress, Chairman of the Committee of Three, in this issue.

This pre-convention shouting will have served some salutary and most practical ends. It will take the place of the speeches, which always precede a convention and thereby it will save much valuable time. It serves also to draw the fire, where any fire exists, and so lets the Convention open up all cooled off and clear-headed enough to see and see only the main issue ahead.

The main issue, of course, is National organization. National organization, embracing all national, state and district associations of exhibitors, must be arranged for, constructed and cemented up so that it can't possibly crack open. If this is accomplished the object of the Convention is achieved; if not, nothing whatever, perhaps even harm, will result. The Convention will have no right to adjourn until this is accomplished, and accomplished satisfactorily; never again, in exhibitor annals, will there be another organization opportunity like this. National organization is hammering at the door. No exhibitor, with strength enough to count, is going to throw his weight against the door.



The Convention viewpoint must be National only. We note with pleasure, in this connection, the appointment by Mr. Cohen to the arrangements committee of the Presidents or Secretaries of all the district organizations.

EVERY other issue is incidental to this one accomplishment—National organization. Producer-owned theatres, advance deposits, rental policies, adverse legislation—these are all mere bywords without National organization. National organization—and National organization alone makes, does or undoes things. You can speechify over these incidental issues till Kingdom Come, and still be speechifying—without National organization.

So if we may help a little and we do want to help, we offer this: Cut out the speeches and get to work—cool, efficient organization work. Take a tip from the Utica Convention which made history because it worked—quietly, efficiently and to the satisfaction of every single man present. The speeches have all been made. The curtain raiser is ended. The audience—and that means every exhibitor in the country whether present or not, wants to see the real show—the show of National Exhibitor organization.

We won't add: Cut out the personalities. That isn't necessary. No exhibitor will want it said that he put vain-glory or gain or self pride or any other motive whatsoever in the way of this one opportunity to organize nationally.

And Still They Come

A Few Words from Some of the Many Letters on Reviews Unanimous Opinion Shown By Brief Extracts That Space Permits

"I believe you are right when you insist that you are not to be hampered or restricted in your Reviews on all pictures. In that way you will deliver a very valuable help to the exhibitor."

Jewel Photoplay Co., Hamilton, Ohio,
John S. Schwalm,
President.

"The Exhibitors Own Box Office Reports and your unbiased criticism are the only safeguard upon which the exhibitor can rely for his personal salvation in booking pictures."

C. B. Davis, Mgr.,
Norwood Theatre,
Norwood, Ohio.

"In regard to the 'reviews' will say that they and the 'Box-Office Reports' are my 'safety valves.'"

James H. Patterson,
"Lo-Net" Theatre,
Wellington, Ohio.

"Your service has been more than fair, it is 100 per cent and I think with your expert staff that you are more than competent to review pictures. Your magazine as a whole is the best in the country."

C. Paul, Mgr.,
Princess Theatre,
Del Rio, Texas.

"If reviews merely reflect the amount of advertising offered a trade journal, exhibitors outside of large cities must of necessity seek other sources of information to guide them."

Jenkins Brothers,
Lansdale, Pa.

"Motion Picture News has established itself solidly with Exhibitors because invariably the service rendered in your various departments has been found to be reliable."

H. E. Cane, Mgr.,
West St. Theatre,
Coudersport, Pa.

"In seven years during which the writer has been connected with this industry, he has discovered that the trade papers are fair to both producer and exhibitor. We are now subscribing to just two trade publications, of which the News is one, and we regard the News as the leading trade paper in the field."

Grand Amusement Company,
Johnstown, Pa.,
L. W. Barclay, Mgr.

"Do we exhibitors want the reviews? I'll say we do. . . . If, I want to book a picture, how do I know if the advertiser is telling the truth? I have to depend upon the reviews out here in the tall grass to know if I want the picture or not. The quicker we are rid of producers who cannot stand reviews the better it will be for the whole industry."

H. P. Weber,
The Orpheum,
Chambersburg, Pa.

"Go to it, I say. Give your readers the real truth and let the devil take the rest. And we will all live to see Truth and Square Deal triumphant."

Earl M. Forsyth,
Star Theatre,
Canonsburg, Pa.

"We certainly do want reviews on the photoplays we run. That is half the reason for getting a trade paper."

J. P. Rogers,
The Realty Theatre,
Middletown, Pa.

"The producer is all wrong when he thinks the exhibitor, as a rule, takes the adverse criticism of the picture to hammer down prices because there are too many good pictures on the market and I know that we will not buy a picture that is not up to the standard. We sincerely hope that the Motion Picture News will be as honest in reviewing pictures in the future as they have been in the past."

Silverman Brothers,
Strand Theatre,
Altoona, Pa.,
per J. Silverman.

"I prize your reviews very highly as they enable me to know what pictures to book and what not to book as it is impossible for me to view all pictures before I book them. I have always found your reviews to give a true and correct description of the picture."

G. R. Wright,
Bluebird Theatre,
Dallas, Texas.

"Keep up the good work, as long as the News is run as at present the exhibitors will back you up."

H. S. Wheary,
Amuzu Theatre,
Crewe, Va.

"In reply to your letter regarding my view concerning the Motion Picture News would like to say that I think your trade paper stands alone in the field and is used by me exclusively in making my bookings and buying my pictures."

Victoria Theatre,
South Richmond, Va.,
K. E. Boyle, Mgr.

"In small towns such as ours we believe the reviews you give in Motion Picture News are good because we are not located so that we can personally see a screening of all the shows we book before we run them and it helps to give us a good insight as to their standing in the ideas of larger exhibitors and your reviews."

Lyric Theatre,
Temperanceville, Va.,
P. P. Henderson.

"In conclusion will state you can publish this letter and I will go further to state that the class of pictures I am now showing have all been reviewed by the Motion Picture News and I now have a standing invitation to the ministers of the Churches here to come out at any time and review the class of pictures that I am showing."

H. A. Kempen, Mgr.,
Queen Theatre,
Nixon, Texas.

"I use your reviews to know just what is in the picture and can then properly advertise same."

H. F. Lloyd, Mgr.,
Colonial Theatre,
Post, Texas.

"We certainly want fair and honest criticisms on all pictures released from an exhibitor's standpoint and service. We value your publication."

M. W. Zimmerman,
Cumberland, Wis.

Indications That Harmony Will Eventually Prevail

Exhibitors Voice Wish for United Action; Record Attendance Expected

As the time approaches for the assembling of motion-picture exhibitors from all parts of the country at Cleveland on June 8, 9, 10 and 11, indications point to an unprecedented attendance and even hold out some hope for the eventual organization of a single national association for all exhibitors in the United States. The bickering has continued to some extent during the past week; but, despite their expressed differences, the leaders of the various prominent exhibitor bodies show an encouraging disposition towards uniting eventually for the inauguration of a single national organization.

Statements dealing with the various phases of the grand "get-together" continue to sweep in from all parts of the country. Some are in the way of official pronouncements issued by the different theatre-owners' organizations; others are from individuals, promising a wholehearted cooperation with the movement to solve the problems of national import that confront exhibitors in all parts of the country alike. A considerable number urge the cessation of all petty quarrels and differences and the getting together of all exhibitor forces, so as to pursue as a single united body those objects of common interest to all. The more important of the statements received during the past week are submitted in the following:

Cohen Anticipates Success

Unstinted support and a tidal wave of enthusiasm will characterize the coming convention, according to Sydney S. Cohen, whose statement is printed below.

"Coming events cast their shadows before," says Mr. Cohen, "and applying this old saying to the Cleveland convention, it will be the greatest event in the history of filmdom. The shadow of it is even now seen in every part of the country—North and South, East and West.

"Getting down to concrete things, one of the signs of the coming tidal wave of enthusiasm and unanimity is the line of responses that are coming in to me, as the temporary chairman, from many of the representative exhibitors who, in accordance with the request of the Cleveland Arrangements Committee, I have recently appointed on a Committee on Arrangements and Registration for the convention at the Hotel Winton, June 8th. Almost a 100 per cent acceptance has been received.

"Among those who are expected at Cleveland, although no formal and definite acceptance has been received, is Henry B. Varner, secretary of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Varner represents one of the strongest, most active and most successful exhibitors' organizations in the entire country.

"The convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be called to order at eleven o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, June 8th, at the Hotel Winton and will bring together the most representative gathering of motion picture exhibitors ever held in this country.

"Delegates are coming from all parts of the country in great numbers and the Cleveland committee in charge of reservations reports that everything will be done to see that the individual exhibitor receives proper accommodations and that his stay in Cleveland will be as pleasant as it is hoped it will be productive of results.

"The Committee on Registration and Arrangements, which represents every important film center in the country, comprising either the president or secretary of the exhibitor organizations representing these zones, will meet Monday, June 7th, at the Hotel Winton to complete detailed arrangements for the greatest convention that will perhaps ever assemble. Every exhibitor of the country who comes to Cleveland with the hope of bringing about a great national organization, will be given ample opportunity to lend his help and assistance towards creating an organization which will protect his investments in this industry.

"It is hoped that the interests which have been successful for some years in splitting the growing sentiment for genuine organization and keeping the exhibitors of the United States unorganized and open to attacks from within and without, will at least be present to see for themselves the sentiment which they cannot stop, organized into a great permanent body. Six months of preparation, with all the work this kind of effort entails by the leaders of the various exhibitors' organizations throughout the country will be brought to a climax more successful even than the most ardent organized exhibitor ever hoped.

"The efforts of some for the past few weeks to create in the minds of the exhibiting branch of the industry that the exhibitors of the country could never get together has failed completely. The man who has put his money, his time and his ability into building up a clientele for his picture house is in no mood to see that investment swept aside by the onrush of the "interests" who have been given a new impetus by the millions which have been poured out by the Wall Street promoters.

"Exhibitors from all parts of the country realize that the convention at the Hotel Winton has been brought about by the men who have practically dedicated their life work to bring their fellow exhibitors into a powerful body which cannot be stopped by the few who have been using organization—or the lack of it—for their own selfish interests.

"The screen of the country more and more today is being looked upon by our Government to safeguard the great institutions under which we are living, and we feel that every patriotic American exhibitor in the country who can possibly get to Cleveland will be there to swell the ranks, in order that he may be an individual part of building the foundation of a permanent national exhibitors' organization, officered by independent motion picture theatre owners, backed by independent motion picture theatre owners and financed by independent motion picture theatre owners."

Northwestern Exhibitor Wires Acceptance

SYDNEY COHEN, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, says the following wire is typical of the communications received by him from all parts. The telegram was one from C. W. Gates, vice-president of the United Theatrical Protective League of the Northwest, accepting appointment to the committee of arrangements:

"I accept appointment as per wire. Special train of Northwestern exhibitors leaves Minneapolis for Cleveland on June 5th, to put a stop for all time to come to the aggression or organized minorities."

"C. W. Gates."

Rembusch Tells His Side

In a letter to Harry Kress, of Piqua, Ohio, Frank Rembusch, chairman of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, fully explains his stand on the coming convention. The letter is printed in full:

"I am very sorry you misunderstood my saying pro-Cohen. I thought that every one caught on at the Chicago convention that Mr. Van Prag was put in. You remember that he asked that Kansas be represented after the committee was already appointed, and that's all right. Furthermore, I mean no offense when I say pro-Cohen, as I was that way once myself but got over it. This is not a question of personalities, except that Mr. Cohen has a film proposition that he is putting over, and I think as long as you mix anything else except big broad principles in a national organization we will have no end of trouble. That has been our history for ten years.

Cleveland Will Be Busy Place

"I assure you that your chairman cheerfully invites criticism, and does not claim to be infallible, but when I do anything I do it because I feel it is right, and for that I will stand even before my friends. There is no animus or bitterness in the affair, but I am sick of exhibitors coming together, bolting, disbanding, and coming together, never accomplishing anything or supporting anything year after year.

"Look at the situation right now. We have the ten-year-old National League, which did not suit Mr. Cohen and his crowd, and therefore he is going to start the Motion Picture Theatre Owners. Mr. Patterson called a convention at Chicago, and we organized into a permanent independent national body to do one thing, force producers out of the theatre business.

"For two days we convened in Chicago, and in our sober, sane, right minds we decided to have a national organization of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, and go to Cleveland and report what the producers have decided to do. Now, I have asked that the first day a mass meeting be held under the direction of our committee, with our officers in charge so that we can make that report. If there is anything unreasonable about that let me know where. We are a permanent national organization and able to make our report better in charge than any other way.

"Let me acknowledge that I do distrust any set of bolting exhibitors who work an entire year, belittling everything that has ever been done in order to gain control of National Exhibitors' activities, and who go around to any meeting of exhibitors and belittle the convention as they did in Chicago. I have no faith in the men who bolted the St. Louis Convention; they refused to abide by the majority then, and they will not abide by the majority now, and it is my prophecy that you will have to go along without them, or let them rule. I have purposely called a spade a spade with the hope that it will force them to abide by the majority. I want to warn all exhibitors what to expect and call especial attention to this everlasting bolting.

"I ask, as your chairman, that you stay with me until I have proven unworthy of the trust placed in me by the Chicago Convention. I took this chairmanship under protest, but I won't quit, especially under fire, until the truth is out, and what this is all about, and we either do the things we started to do or repudiate them.

"Mr. Van Prag has made an unwarranted attack on me in the trade journals, and that does not worry me, except he has been in partnership with Cohen for many months and his opinion is not unbiased.

"Let me again assure the committee of my desire to bring about harmony. I am still waiting to hear from Cleveland, as I wired Mr. Lustig over a week ago as to our meeting place. I am more than ever convinced that I was right in providing a place at the Cleveland hotel. I am ready to go anywhere if they promise to allow me to report and abide by majority rule.

"How is this for a compromise: Let Mr. Cohen's crowd agree that they are to give up their national organization, and we give up our independent organization, and the league give up theirs, and then we will put $200,000 in the treasury out of our pockets, and hire the best brains we can get to keep us out of trouble, and have a representative in each of the twenty-six film centers for that purpose. To see that producers do not build theatres, or do any other of the damn fool things that have been put over on us for all these years, because we won't organize right. What is all this fuss about? Think it over.

"To any exhibitor who is afraid that the producers will find out that exhibitors are not together let me say that I certainly give them credit for sufficient intelligence to see that we have never been together, and the proof is that they would never have dared to put over the things in the unfair contracts and conditions imposed on us, if only one exhibitor in ten had been together. Here is your opportunity as I see it. You have ten producers ready to go along with you, on the line of not going into the theatre business. It would be easy to go along on other lines and get a decent proposition, and force the outside producer to come in. Think this over.

"Another thought. It is better for us to go to Cleveland divided and leave united than the opposite. I am smoking them out every day. Just stay with me and you will get a run for your money and the nigger will soon get out of the wood pile."

Patterson Makes Strong Plea for Union

THE following wire was received by the News from W. C. Patterson:

"Committee of seventeen appointed at Chicago meeting was instructed to make report to original Cleveland convention. I do not doubt the sincerity of Rembusch, but think he is making a mistake in calling a second convention unless he has positive information that the Chicago committee would not be recognized on the floor. Independent exhibitors need men of the executive ability of both Rembusch and Cohen. For the good of the cause they should get together.

"There are too many problems, both factions will agree, to split now. Let's bury the hatchet and build up one big organization along lines of honesty of purpose. Personally, I have no political ambitions, but will put forth every effort to bring all factions together and help formulate ways and means to protect the independent exhibitor."

"No Monkey Business to Be Tolerated"

Sam Bullock, executive secretary of The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association:

"Inasmuch as the necessity for real exhibitor organization is causing all exhibitors to turn their thoughts towards Cleveland from now on to June 8-9-10-11, it behooves every independent motion picture exhibitor to study well what practical plan of organization he will decide to support with his vote at the Convention, for it will be the first national gathering in many years where every bona-fide exhibitor will be his own free agent and as such treated absolutely 'on the level' regardless of the size of his theatre or his (or her) investment.

"We have proved by bitter experience that the various forces, both within and without the industry, have so far succeeded with their plans because of 'class' distinction, self-asserted, within our own exhibitor ranks, though the fact remains that a compact organization of all 'classes,' from 'first-runs' down to 'commercials,' will alone render the exhibitor immune from most of these attacks and impositions.

"The dominant question, therefore, is not merely organization, but, first, 'What plan of organization shall we adopt?' Second, 'How shall it be financed?' Third, 'How shall its finances be safeguarded against grafters and organization wreckers?'

"These three essentials have never yet been worked out at any national exhibitor convention heretofore held, but the Cleveland convention offers the opportunity and the temper of those exhibitors who have expressed their intention to be present indicates that they will stand for no 'monkey business' nor camouflaged producer propositions.

"The writer, as chairman of resolutions committee, was primarily responsible for the adoption of the 'Delmonico' resolution when the Chicago Convention consented to merge the Exhibitors League with the producers—the N. A. M. P. L.—some years ago. It was not a merger. It was a 'submerger,' and we were submerged. However, organization pulmotors have been working steadily and Cleveland's Lake Erie ozone will quickly restore those not altogether 'done for.' Let us guard against being 'Delmonicoed' again by the 'Hungry Joes' of Broadway.

"At Cleveland the 'plan' and not the 'man' must count. At Cleveland no plan of financing by expositions, producer 'charity doles' or anything outside of the exhibitors' own personal financing should receive the least consideration."

Sound Common Sense from Kress

THE following letter, received by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS from Harry W. Kress, of May's Opera House, Strand and Bijou, of Piqua, Ohio, sheds further light on the convention wrangle:

"My Dear Sir:

"My attention has been called to the article on page 4463 in your issue of May 29th: 'Factions Menace Harmony of the Exhibitors' Get-Together' at Cleveland.

"Now, I believe I am in a position to throw a little light on the situation in regard to the apparent differences that have arisen between the Independent Exhibitors of America and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America regarding their meeting on June 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th, at Cleveland.

"As you know, I happen to be on the Directing Committee of Seventeen of the Independent Exhibitors of America, of which Frank Rembusch is chairman. Before leaving Chicago a committee of three was appointed out of the committee of seventeen, namely, myself as chairman, with Mr. M. Van Praag of Kansas City and Mr. Farley of Montgomery, Alabama, to go to Cleveland to find out what the conditions were there before the convention took place on the above dates.

"After interviewing Mr. Henry Lustig, of the Cleveland Exhibitors' League, who is affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, I was thoroughly convinced that the meeting that is being called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Cleveland was being done in good faith, and so wired my report to Mr. Rembusch.

"This squabble, which seems to have arisen between Rembusch and Cohan, reminds me of heat lightning, and will have no effect upon the ultimate successful outcome at Cleveland. Everything is being done to have a perfect understanding between the two organizations that are now going to meet there, and I am fully convinced that harmony is bound to prevail in the end. Of course we will have our differences of opinion to start out with, but there will be too many big men in this meeting to allow any particular set of men to dominate the meeting to the detriment of the Independent Exhibitors as a whole. It is unfortunate, of course, that the Cohan and Rembusch factions have gotten into an unnecessary argument and are casting suspicion upon one another. Snap judgments in a matter of this kind are bad, and being in the position that I am in regard to these two organizations, I think you should send out word to the Exhibitors that harmonious action is bound to prevail at Cleveland. Personally, I believe that this will be the biggest gathering of Independent Exhibitors of the United States ever held in any one place. I have the assurance of men interested in both organizations (that I have every confidence in the world in) that the ultimate outcome will be one big National Independent Exhibitors' Organization.

"It will be impossible for one hotel in Cleveland to take care of the Exhibitors that will be present at this meeting, so no particular harm can come out of the fact of the Exhibitors meeting at two central points, namely, the Cleveland and Winton Hotels. It is better to have them centralized in these two hostelries than to have them scattered all over Cleveland.

"I have been in constant touch with Mr. Rembusch and Mr. Lustig, on account of being chairman of the Sub-Committee on Arrangements in Cleveland, and as stated above, think you are perfectly safe in assuring all of the Exhibitors that come to Cleveland that they will be attending one of the liveliest and most important meetings that they have ever attended in their lives. There are some very momentous questions to be decided at this time, and this will be the time and place to do it. A fair field and no favors will be offered at this meeting, and every independent exhibitor will be entitled to a voice in its transactions.

"Very truly yours,

"HARRY W. KRESS."

"May's Opera House, Strand and Bijou,

"Piqua, Ohio."

Hodkinson Talks on Exhibitors' Troubles

ON the eve of the great national exhibitors' convention, to be held from June 8th to June 11th at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, Ohio, the whole industry seems to have focused its attention on the big questions which will absorb the attention of the assembled exhibitors. There is a wide-spread discussion among exhibitors and various remedies for the many undoubted evils are going to be offered.

The convention has attracted the attention of men in every branch of the industry, and one of these men is W. W. Hodkinson, the president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corp. Speaking to a reporter of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Hodkinson said:

"For some time past I have noticed considerable confusion in exhibiting ranks amounting to an almost panicky feeling. I confess that in spite of my intimate experience with all sorts of conditions in our industry, the exhibitor has always been a problem to me. His power to keep the producer out of the exhibiting field is clear. Indeed, the strength of his position is not doubted by anybody, but he seems more or less incapable of concerted action. The buying power of the industry is in his hands, and if he only knew how to exert it he could do the industry a lot of good and at the same time effectively and permanently protect his own investment.

"It seems to me a foregone conclusion that unless the exhibitor pool his interests with other exhibitors and make intelligent use of his combined buying power, he will in the very near future be crowded to the wall and forced to go out of business.

"In the last three years I have succeeded in building up an organization founded on a conception of justice both to the producer and to the exhibitor. As you know, the Hodkinson organization owns no theatres and has no intention of going into the exhibiting field. We do not produce any pictures.

"Many of the evils which the exhibitor is compelled to fight today at a cost both to his purse and to his peace of mind arise from the fact that so many producers are distributing their own product. This means all sorts of machine-made pictures, generally of an inferior quality, which are forced upon the exhibitor, and upon the public. I have always believed that the interest of the producer must be severed from the interest of the distributor.

"The relations between producer and exhibitor, which ought to be based on principles of equity and fair dealing, at present remind me of a dog-eat-dog policy.

"The producer has taken a preposterous load on his shoulders. The elements of this load consist of waste, incompetence, overcapitalization and poor judgment. He is unable even with the heaviest rentals to get enough money from the exhibitor to enable him to carry this load. That is the reason he is now reaching out for the profits of the exhibitor by trying to take his investment away from him.

"I invite the exhibitors of the country to look into the mechanism I have built up for them to use, if they see fit. Its object, among other things, is to secure a dependable supply of high quality pictures and to absolutetly keep the exhibitor free from producer domination. Backed by the buying power of any considerable group of exhibitors this mechanism means many benefits to the exhibitors. It secures their absolute independence. It will enable them to get the very best pictures in the market on favorable terms and ahead of any competition.

"I may liken the system under which I am operating and which accounted for the initial success of Paramount pictures to a process of winnowing, separating the chaff from the wheat. My plan operates impartially and as automatically as a machine. Under its workings the consensus of exhibitors' reports on the commercial value of pictures is taken as the basis of judging the standard of the producer. A producer whose pictures in point of quality do not show up favorably in the light of an exhibitors' consensus of opinion is

Gaumont Explains Picture Conditions in France

French Producer Talks on Foreign Market and New Trichrome Process

AN explanation of the recent action of the French Government in prohibiting the importation of raw film material into that country is offered by Mr. Gaumont, head of the Gaumont company. The opportunities of American producers in France, Mr. Gaumont points out, are now very limited, on account of the heavy taxes imposed, and only the films of the highest quality will be able to pay for themselves.

"The unfavorable conditions which are prevailing in France," said Mr. Gaumont, "where the principal industrial districts have been savagely devastated, has compelled the Government to restrict importations and films, as we could expect, have been placed on the restriction list.

"First of all, probably due to an error, the restrictions comprised exclusively the raw material, that is, the film unexposed. Since then, a new decree has probably been passed, interdicting instead of the raw material all impressed positive films, but permitting the temporary importation of developed negative films, however with exceptionally high duty charges, fully as high as the duty imposed on French negatives entering the United States.

"These decrees are going to stop the importation of films which are below a very high standard and only films which will assure a big success so as to cover the high duty on the few copies necessary for exploitation on the French market will be imported.

"Now, more than ever, the opportunity is very limited for American producers to open their own branches in France, and I would not be surprised if those who are already established there would rapidly discontinue and give up the upkeep of an unproductive staff and office.

"We must not forget, in fact, that there are hardly two to three hundred exhibitors worth that name in France and that they pay from 20 to 35 per cent taxes on their gross receipts. Besides, with the lack of materials and workmanship it will take years before we can consider the increase of such establishments."

The French producer went on to explain the recent results obtained by his Trichrome process. He recalled that before the war the first presentation of these pictures was made in New York. "Today," continued Mr. Gaumont, "we are fortunate enough to bring to American people for their appreciation of the practical end of our process, one of the most important historical documents ever made, 'The Victory Parade.'

"From the start we immediately and resolutely directed our efforts and our researches to the Trichrome process, being convinced that it is materially impossible to reproduce with two colors all the shades and all the tints which please our eyes. The complete solution of the problem was to be studied, or nothing at all. This is how we abandoned the bicolor process, even though it presented the possibility of using the film in any of the usual cameras."

So confident was Mr. Gaumont that the Trichrome process alone furnishes the complete solution to the problem of colored pictures that he is ready to pay $1,000 to any benevolent society if a competitor can show him a picture equal to his in quality.

"The future of cinematography in natural colors is incommensurable," said Mr. Gaumont. "No demonstration is required. If we will just think for a minute we will immediately realize how illogical it is to present on the screen the numerous manifestations of life uniformly in black and white. What a terrible infirmity it would have been if our Creator had deprived us of being able to appreciate the splendid harmonies of color existing in the world.

"In some future time, nearer perhaps than we expect, color will master the screen, and we will wonder how we could be satisfied with the present monochrome pictures. The need of colors is so much felt that the public is asking for colored scenics, even 'au pochoir,' and for want of something better this public is satisfied with any other solution, no matter how it has been produced.

"Following is some information which will confirm our statement that we have completely and practically solved the problem of cinematography in colors. Films used for view taking and projecting purposes are the very films regularly supplied by the Eastman Kodak and on which we have done all possible trials. We are using the same width and the same perforation. The formulas and processes of panchromatizing pertain to the domain of the laboratory. There is no sorcery in it once you know the nature of the products and the proportion of the mixtures of panchromatizing products.

"The various developing operations, toning, printing, are the same as those for ordinary films with the exception, however, of the development of the negative in an almost absolute darkness.

"Do not forget that the colors appear on the screen only thanks to and on account of the use of filters placed before the objectives of the camera and also before those of the projecting machine. The apparatus differs in a very small degree from that used daily by all the operators, and the use of them is neither difficult nor complicated.

"The only criticism that could be made regarding our process, if this can be called a criticism, is the fact that by projecting and superposing simultaneously three pictures a special projecting machine is an absolute necessity, also a metalized screen making the projection more luminous, avoiding thus the diffusion at the rear sides of the room, of part of the projected light.

"We would advise the American producer, who will undoubtedly engage himself in color pictures, to give up from the start the thought of producing big features, dramas or comedies, the amortization of the expenses for the negative being only assured by the exploitation of a certain number of projecting machines. He should realize immediately that he must be satisfied with a collection of scenic films or documentary films which will also form the basis of his laboratory and which will be of great help to the exploitation of the process. Big events alone can constitute sufficient exploitation elements."

Federated Film Exchanges Now Ready to Start Work

Organization Completed in New York Conventions and Charter Obtained

THAT The Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., a recently organized body of independent exchange men, has obtained its charter and is fully paid up and ready to start business, is revealed as the result of the convention held in New York City during the week of May 24th.

The preliminary meeting was held in Chicago on March 24th, when Joseph Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, summoned a number of independent exchange men to meet in the Hotel Congress. Before the adjournment of this meeting, temporary officers were elected and a charter applied for under the laws of the state of Delaware, the corporation being capitalized at $100,000. At the New York meeting it was announced that the charter had been granted and the officers made permanent.

Preparations were started immediately after the Chicago gathering. The call of independent exchange men was not confined to one single exchange man in each territory, and the selection of the men now in the organization and the choice of franchise holders was left to the body as a whole.

The purpose of the Federated Exchanges, according to an announcement of the organization, is primarily that of collective buying as well as collective advertising and increased exploitation. It had been realized for a considerable time that the independent exchange man is naturally the most logical man for distributing purposes, because he is operating an exchange himself, has his own money at stake, and naturally is watching it with every degr of closeness, and therefore, is bound to get results. It was also realized, however, that prevailing conditions precluded the possibility of securing the best the producers had to offer. This, it is said, was due in turn to the fact that where a program company could take a feature and release it throughout the country at one time, the independent exchange men, by reason of other purchases and other subjects contracted for, were not always in a position to act simultaneously.

Producers, state the Federated Exchanges, would start advertising and would only continue this advertising until all their territory was sold, and then stop. The injustice of this is said to be so manifest that only the most casual observation is necessary. But in a great many cases the exchangeman might own either a feature or a serial and be unable to release it concurrently with the man who released first, and therefore not receive the benefit of a single advertisement.

"The independent exchangeman," reads the Federated statement, "is also put in another very unpleasant position and that is that the producer, realizing that, irrespective of the merit of his production, he was never sure of 100 per cent distribution, consequently had no standardized prices. He was forced to make allowances for which the buyer had to pay. In some cases as much as 60 or 70 per cent was added to the price to compensate for the unsold territory.

"Another fact that brought the organization to a successful issue was that any production of a big nature was never offered on the independent market until all other avenues of distribution were closed, and then at prices higher than those offered to the producing companies."

Among the other activities decided upon by the New York Convention was the employment of the highest grade man possible for its general manager, and, while the position has not been closed, it is understood that the officers are now negotiating with a man who has already been president of one of the large distributing organizations. Moreover, negotiations are also pending for some productions of the greatest magnitude, and Federated has also already closed contracts on several short reel subjects of various companies. Its policy will be the purchase of the productions of only the highest class, whether they are features, short subjects or serials.

The one great difficulty the organization has had to overcome was the seeming impossibility of meeting the divergent ideas of the various members of the company, regarding its wants. But this difficulty has been overcome and Federated Exchanges is now ready to buy anything on the market, provided it meets the requirements and is fully up to the standard that Federated has set for itself.

Federated believes that it is built upon the soundest principles. In addition to the collective buying, it will be possible to advertise the production at the same time throughout the country, while exploitation possibilities allow for greatly increased and concerted action.

J. L. Friedman, of Chicago, was made permanent president of the organization, and J. E. Pearce, of New Orleans, is vice president. D. J. Chatkin, of Los Angeles and San Francisco, is secretary, and Sam Grand, of Boston, treasurer. The board of directors, in addition to the above named officers, consists of H. L. Charnas, of Cleveland; H. E. Whyte, of New York, and B. Amsterdam, of Philadelphia.

Ascher to Build Another in Chicago's "Loop"

ASCHER BROTHERS have announced that they will build another moving picture theatre de luxe in Chicago in the "loop" district. The house will have a seating capacity of 3,000, will cost $3,750,000, and will be erected on the site extending from 16 to 30 West Washington street, for which Ascher Brothers have signed a one hundred and one year lease. This new building will make a total of 24 theatres now in the list of Ascher enterprises, including the Roosevelt theatre, now being built on North State street, in the "loop," at a cost of $800,000.

"Toll Gate" Plays Palace, Des Moines, For Full Week

When Jess Day, manager of the Palace theatre, Des Moines, played "The Toll Gate" he left nothing undone in the way of exploitation to make the week's engagement, the first in the history of the house, a success. Benson Practises Exhibitor Psychology with Success

PSYCHOLOGY, as a dollars-and-cents method of emphasizing the importance of a feature production, is being turned into an exploitation device by a Massachusetts exhibitor. He has found that such procedure has many advantages. In the first place, it lowers the daily cost of rental, it saves money on advertising, it gives opportunity for better and more effective presentation and special music can usually be arranged by the theatre orchestra.

Charles Benson, manager of the Olympic theatre, Lynn, Mass., is the showman who consistently practices psychology, although he declares that his exploitation methods are merely dictated by business sense.

"The public is always attracted by something unusual," says Mr. Benson. "An unusual picture will always draw unusual patronage if the exhibitor lets the public realize that it is unusual. An exhibitor who advertises 'Come early and avoid the rush' gives the lie to the thought in the advertising than an unusual number of people will want to see it when he makes it available for only the same number of performances as he does an ordinary picture, and the public knows it. An ad worded similar to this: 'In order that no one in Lynn shall be disappointed, as thousands were in Boston, where four theatres had to turn people away, anxious to see' has the stamp of sincerity on it. The theatre manager is convinced that it is a great picture or he wouldn't have booked it for the extra days, and the public is usually keen to accept his sincerity.

"The ad that I have quoted is the one I used in connection with a run of Anita Stewart in 'In Old Kentucky.' I booked the production for a full week, instead of the customary three days.

"Humoresque" Opens at Criterion Theatre

WE sat in at the opening performance of "Humoresque" at the Criterion theatre Sunday afternoon for the purpose of viewing Dr. Riesenfeld's presentation, having seen the picture previously, but found ourselves as interested in the offering as when we first saw it in the projection room.

There is something so human and heart gripping in this simple homely story by Fannie Hurst which Frances Marion and Frank Borzage have brought to the screen that we are constrained to ask ourselves again what makes the really great picture? In this case, at least, it is the characterizations and the novel, pleasing incident that is to be found in nearly every scene. The plot of "Humoresque" is neither new nor novel, and viewed from the standpoint of most features where action predominates, it is exceedingly slender, but the picture is without doubt one of the greatest releases of the year.

Viewed from a box office standpoint, attention is drawn to the fact that the "Potash and Perlmutter" plays, "The Music Master," etc., have met with universal favor. We do not believe that any exhibitor should hesitate in booking "Humoresque" because the story is largely a racial one. Rather do we think this fact is an asset, since in it is contained the basis of some of the best screen comedy to come to light in a long time and the opportunity for the wonderful characterizations of which the production boasts.

How the "Gump" Club Was Formed

Some weeks ago M. J. Mintz, of Celebrated Players got the bright idea of forming the Glorious Order of Gumps, whose main aim in life would be to see how much humor and fun they could get out of living. He started it as a joke among exhibitors in and around Chicago who were playing the Gump Cartoons but the idea spread by word of mouth and Mr. Mintz was surprised to have queries come in from various state right buyers who have purchased the Gump Cartoons for their territories, asking him just what the Gump Club was and how they could get in on it. This gave Mr. Mintz and Mr. Friedman, president of Celebrated, the idea of spreading the joyful spirit of the club all over the country and, as a consequence, every exchange handling Gump Cartoons is a headquarters for the local Gump Club, furnishing application blanks and identification cards to the theatres who, in turn, furnish them to the patrons of the house upon request.

As an exploitation proposition the Gump Club certainly is a winner and Messrs. Friedman and Mintz are lending every effort to further the idea back of it.

All that is necessary for a patron of the theatre to do to become a member of the Gump Club is to ask his theatre manager for a Gump card and promise himself that he will look on the brighter side of things.

Those exchanges handling the Gumps who have not yet allied themselves with this movement can secure any number of application cards they wish upon application to Mr. Mintz.

Stolte Gives "Idol Dancer" Fine Campaign

Lobby Display and Prologue Featured by Des Moines Theatre

"SHE'S HERE," blazoned forth in liberal newspaper display, on billboards, heralds and always accompanied by a silhouette figure of a hula dancer brought the attention of the entire city of Des Moines to "The Idol Dancer" when this feature played the Des Moines theatre, one of the A. H. Blank string managed by Arthur G. Stolte.

From lobby to special prologue sets the theatre was made to carry out the South Sea theme.

Ticket booth and lobby entrances were transformed to thatch-domed grass huts. Interior lights—the Des Moines has the most complete arc lighting equipment of any middle western theatre—were dimmed and made to correspond to the "dreamy" atmosphere of the Hawaiian music.

On the opposite page are cuts from photographs which give a good idea of what Mr. Stotle did to put over the Griffith feature, although, of course, they are minus the lighting effects that were one of the most artistic portions of the displays.

The lobby display was lighted in white under the canopy, blue in the first lobby and red in the second lobby, the effect from the street being very beautiful. The presentation opened with a special title, which said, "Des Moines Theatre Presentation." The curtains were then drawn and the house switched to darkness. The orchestra opened with a specially arranged prelude with smoke seen coming from the highest "volcano" of the stage setting provided, as shown on the opposite page.

Red flames and fire effects followed the smoke effect with the blue and amber lights turned in gradually until the stage was fully lighted, when a company of Hawaiian musicians and dancers were presented.

The set for the prologue was arranged in a box-like effect with all lights shaded from the audience, the appearance being as if looking through the palms out on the water. This was the presentation on one side of the theatre.

For the stage setting provided on the other side, Mr. Stolte used the box effect also, dimming his other stage setting before showing the second number. Blue and white lights were used in front of the set pieces with amber brought up from full dim for a sun effect on a back drop which was transparent. The five Hawaiian musicians were used for this setting.

Four short numbers were given by the Hawaiian's, finishing with a native dance. At the end of the dance the liglits were cut from the front of the set with only a red sunset effect showing on the back transparency. The musicians were again used at this point, playing on steel rings until the lights were all dimmed out.

All Des Moines was enthusiastic in its praise of the prologue and Mr. Stolte is convinced that his exploitation and presentation was instrumental in bringing many extra dollars to the Des Moines box office.

Harry Goldberg Originates Fine Advertising Stunt for Lytell Picture

HERE is a story which has a news, dramatic and an exploitation value. The exploitation value comes as a suggestion. Every exhibitor may not have a "Jimmy Doig" living in his city, but he can deputize some one to act as a "Jimmy Valentine," hand him the combination of the safe and collect all the publicity which Mr. Goldberg did with his exploitation stunt.

Here is the story of how Harry Goldberg, manager of the Sun theatre, Omaha, pulled a new one for his showing of "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

Mr. Goldberg based his exploitation on the story of the photoplay, relating the adventures of the master cracksman who opened safes by means of a delicate sense of touch.

Outside of his theatre he had a large safe from the Herring, Hall, Marvin Safe Company mounted on a stand which had posters announcing:

"Fifty Silver Dollars Locked in This Safe.
It's Yours If You Can Open It by Working
The Combination Only.
No Safe Blowers, Please.)"

Another poster read:

"Jimmy Valentine
Could Open This Safe.
Is There a Man in Omaha
Who Can Duplicate This Feat?"

The answer to the question turned out almost unexpectedly to be "Yes."

The man was Jimmy Doig, 22 years old, who, after thousands of men had toyed with the combination of the safe, strolled along and stood in the crowd for a while, watching the vain efforts of the amateurs, then got into the line of those who were waiting for a chance to try their hand.

Jimmy got at the safe in the manner of a cracksman to the manner born and developed by real professional training. Working coolly and methodically, he quickly found the combination and opened the safe.

"No, I don't make my living that way," the young man explained. And his record shows steady employment in Omaha as a stenographer. But his only answer to the curious as to how he came by the sensitive touch was:

"It must be from the typewriter; I use the touch system." A cut of Mr. Goldberg's lobby display, including the safe which Jimmy Doig opened like a Jimmy Valentine, is shown on the opposite page.

"Eli Eli" Basis of Prologue for "Humoresque"

UNDER the title of "Through the Ages," the Criterion theatre is staging a prologue for "Humoresque," which is especially effective. While not so defined on the program, the number is symbolical of "The Wandering Jew."

With stage and theatre in darkness, voices off stage begin the strains of the Jewish song, "Eli, Eli." Then, with very dim floods in purple and blue from the flys, a company of singers, headed by Emanuel List, basso profundo, assemble on the stage as if choosing it as a resting place during a journey. They are attired in the tribal robes of the Jewish people in the time of Moses. The song "Eli, Eli," is now used in full volume, with Mr. List as soloist and the chorus aiding in the singing. The wonderful melody of the Jewish lament, together with the artistic lighting, gives the number a peculiarly effective flavor. After the song is finished the company departs slowly, still singing as if beginning their wanderings again. Once off stage the song is allowed to die to but a faint echo, as if the tribe had passed out of hearing.

Ince Special Gets Unusual Exploitation

Los Angeles Premiere of "Below the Surface" Given Much Publicity

"BELOW THE SURFACE," the new Thomas H. Ince special which received its premiere at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, received an exploitation campaign for the showing that contributed its full share to bringing record crowds to the Rialto. Heading the list of exploitation was an unique three cornered link-up between the Los Angeles Record, Grauman's Rialto theatre and the publicity department of the Ince studios.

The Record has been conducting a campaign against the quack movie schools which operate about the cinema capital and was induced to go on a free "movie test" idea.

Test-desiring persons, those who had aspirations to become picture players were urged to Rialto to study the various characters in "Below the Surface" preparatory to assembling at the Ince studio for a collective pose before the camera, through the Record's pages which had previously announced that such a test picture would be taken for the purpose of securing "types" and character actors.

The initial spread in the Record stated that the ten persons who registered most effectively in the collective group tryout would be given individual tests prior to securing parts in the forthcoming Ince production.

Considerably more than two thousand individuals applied for the first test, which was here held on Saturday, May 15, and with the beginning of the second week's engagement, a young army of aspiring men, women and children thronged the theatre for the second preliminary trials to be staged on Saturday, May 22.

The class of persons participating in the plan is distinctive in that it represents a percentage of individuals who ordinarily do not patronize the Los Angeles theatre. An inspection of the home addresses submitted by the applicants disclosed the interesting fact that of the several thousand persons who responded for the first week's test, about one thousand four hundred of this number claimed adjacent suburbs and towns as their residences. This disclosure, it is pointed out by Sid Grauman, clearly indicates that the test-applicants may be classified as "extra" business — and revenue — for the Rialto register.

In the daily editions of the Record, the "follow-up" announcements on the unique "stunt" continue to attract attention and interest on page one. Following the collective tests news space and pictorial spreads were given to the ten winners and to human interest articles by the Record staff writers.

Simultaneously with the presentation of the Ince-Record Rialto drive in the Record, the Los Angeles Herald raised the curtain on a series of production articles under the signature of Thomas H. Ince. The coming of the series, which were described by The Herald as "of intense interest and instruction to all readers," were announced in boxed space on page one of the second news section for four days prior to the first installment.

The series continued for the entire week. The timeliness of the Ince production stories forcused additional attention to the Rialto theatre, where the name of Thomas H. Ince is displayed in four-foot electric lights over the theatre's entrance.

Ban on Kissing Lifted During Run of "Love Expert"

New and Original Idea Conceived for Exploiting Talmadge Picture

A STRIKINGLY original idea in exploitation conceived by N. A. Benson, manager of the Stadium theatre, Pittsburgh, turned out to be a money-maker for Mr. Benson and a real treat for all the lovelorn in Pittsburgh.

Love Expert"

We promise each member of the audience a thrill. Boys: Bring your prettiest girls. Girls: Make a good-looking fellow bring you

General belief was strong that Mr. Benson would have a beauty chorus traverse the isles or at least flit about the stage in abbreviated costumes. The novel announcement a week in advance brought many and varied impressions which were proven wrong or right on the opening night of "The Love Expert," when directly after the showing of this picture, Mr. Benson flashed this slide:

ANNOUNCEMENT — All Sweethearts are Entitled to one kiss directly after this slide and while the house is dark. Are there any "love experts" in the audience.

The slide was taken away and for five seconds or less the house became almost pitch dark save for fire-escape lights. A series of smacks that drowned out the orchestra's strains of "Kiss Me Again" was heard and the lights flashed on to find smiling young couples and not a few very pleased elderly people who had enjoyed a novelty.

Word of mouth exploitation that followed after the first night's kissing spread with more effectiveness than that which accompanied any other promotion effort ever attempted by the Stadium.

"The exhibitor who overlooks the advantage of injecting a little spice into his program with certain novelties even though they do not seem to hold much appeal for him, is overlooking a mighty attractive bet," said Mr. Benson. "Whether he sees and feels the lack of program novelties or not his patrons do. And that is the big thing. He must learn to look at his program through the eyes of the audience, and not from the angle of the exhibitor, who is bound in nine cases out of ten to be prejudiced as to the fan-merits of his attractions.

"When the Stadium was planning to play a four-day engagement, 'The Love Expert,' my ticket-taker came to me directly following the private showing of the picture at the Stadium with the suggestion that we might make an announcement stating that every fellow in the audience would be allowed to kiss his girl one time during the run of the picture. At first, for some reason or other, the idea did not appeal to me—as I figured that it might lead to some embarrassing situations in the audience, and might result in having to eject some of the spectators should they take the announcement serious and proceed to get rough. This, of course, would terminate their patronage of my house, and for this reason the idea did not strongly appeal to me at the outset. However, I turned the matter over in my mind, and decided that a good-natured stunt should be pleasing. It certainly was—and very profitable.

Memorial Day Special Has Exploitation Value

AT the Rialto, New York, a long strip devoted to the battlefields of France where the A. E. F. figured prominently is given a place in the Rialto Magazine and proves both a timely and interesting subject.

Among the scenes shown is one with a fine panoramic view of the American cemetery where so many thousands of Uncle Sam's soldiers are buried under the white wooden crosses that dot many acres at Sursnes.

Other equally interesting views of places in this far off country with which the American forces were identified are shown.

The Rialto has compiled the strip as a special Memorial Week offering, but such a reel would be interesting and possesses decided exploitation possibilties at any time, and especially for our next national holiday, the Fourth of July.

How Mayer Aroused Cincinnati's Curiosity

"Virgin of Stamboul" Exploitation Instrumental In Attracting Big Business

CINCINNATI recently diverted its attention from the Reds long enough to take an interest in the exploitation stunts which heralded the showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul" in the Grand Opera House in that city. The stunts were good and the interest was genuine, as the Grand Opera House box office showed at the end of the run.

Joseph H. Mayer, Director of Publicity for Universal, slipped away from New York and engineered the exploitation. Cincinnati is his home town and knows it. The first thing he did was to arrange for an attractive lobby display. This, he considers vital in the proper presentation of a big picture.

He then obtained a tally-ho bus and covered it with "Virgin of Stamboul" display signs, and arranged cut-outs of the characters of the picture, in the bus windows. The equipage circled Fountain square, Cincinnati, during the several days immediately preceding the opening, and aroused great curiosity.

The driver was dressed up like the 1001st night of the Arabian nights. A big bass drum, concealed inside the tally-ho, and administered by a strong-arm and a heavy drum stick, helped to herald the passage of the bus through the streets. On the top of the bus, two singers, sang Oriental songs through megaphones.

After several hours of intermittent drum-fire and song-barrage, the police took part and piped a mourning dirge over the proceedings. They put the quietus on the bass drum and the megaphone artists, but the bus drove on, silently encircling Fountain Square until the driver became dizzy.

In the meantime, a mysterious Turk appeared on the streets with a huge carpet bag. Every block or so he would open the bag. It formed a stand, which he set up on the side-walk, displaying an ad for "The Virgin of Stamboul." Everytime he did so, he had an argument with the police, and attendant crowds, all of which was highly pleasing to Mayer, who hovered in the offing, ready to go bail for his befezzed protege, should the police actually run him in.

Also, two pretty young women, dressed in the approved Turkish harem attire, visited every large store in the city, and approached clerks and customers with variations of the following questions:

"Have you seen Sari? She was to meet me here."

"The Virgin of Stamboul is coming here to meet me. Have you seen her."

These stunts, together with an elaborate newspaper advertising campaign, put the picture over with a bang.

Mexican Revolution Reel Worthy of Attention

THE Rialto Magazine contains a timely strip of considerable footage secured from Educational and released under the title of "A Day with Carranza," which has exceptional business-getting possibilties just at this time and for quite a period in the future, providing the Mexican revolution doesn't quiet down all at once, which is not probable if history is any criterion.

The reel is a mixture of a news weekly and a scenic, showing among other things some great shots of Mexico City, in which the spectator may view with some surprise evidence that said city is not the dwelling place of uncivilized people, if the beautiful buildings, handsome residences and broad, well-laid-out streets prove anything.

After the scenic part comes views of the late Mexican president, Carranza, showing him at his home, on horseback and in his official position. These are followed by some shots of his probable successor, Obregon, his victorious army entering Mexico City and a pageant staged outside the city celebrating the event.

As a whole, the picture is a mighty interesting offering, containing opportunity for attracting to the box office that portion of a city's residency which doesn't attend the picture house as a regular thing.

Gerbracht Attracts Extra Business by Lobby Display

Manager Joe Gerbracht, of the Twin Star theatre, Ames, Iowa, must be credited with an attractive conception in the arrangement of his lobby for the two-day engagement of "The Flame of the Desert." In the carrying out of an unusual display, he succeeded in suggesting the atmosphere of the picture in a manner calculated to arouse the curiosity of the passer-by.

For the days of the Farrar engagement the lobby of the Twin Star theatre was dressed to represent a desert. About two inches of white sand covered the floor of the lobby, while out of the sand, in places that did not block the entrance and exit doors, arose palms and southern grasses. Two miniature pyramids and a small cone tent made of Hindoo draperies added a distinctive tone to the display that brought much favorable comment from the patrons of the theatre.

Manager Gerbracht did not overlook the opportunity to use cut-outs from the stock lithographs, also a liberal number of cards and photographs. Long spray grasses and colored lights were the dominant feature of the stage setting arranged to place the audience in a receptive mood for the picture.

Book "A Gold Star Pilgrimage"

AS the Memorial Week special, the Strand theatre is showing a reel sponsored by Burton Holmes-Paramount under the title of "A Gold Star Pilgrimage," which is a short subject no theatre should pass up regardless, whether or not it is Memorial Day or Fourth of July.

As may be inferred by the title, the subject is a scenic trip to the places in France which have been made immortal in America by the fact that our soldiers in the great war fought their way to victory in and about them and where so many of them "Went West."

The showing at the Strand is announced as being by special request of the American Committee for Devastated France, but since the reel is released by Paramount it should be available in every city in the United States, and likewise should be secured at the first opportunity.

American audiences may be tired of "war stuff" in their screen drama, but they are still interested in seeing actual scenes of the places about which they have read and which became more than names in the geography by reason of their association with Uncle Sam's soldiers.

This reel properly exploited will bring to any theatre some business that could not be attracted by a "Miracle Man" or a "Birth of a Nation."

Harris Says Use Soft Pedal Occasionally

Exhibitors Are Sold on the Exploitation Possibilities Rather Than Worth of the Picture

DECLARING that the "soft pedal on the piano of rag-time motion picture promotion has almost rusted through its lack of use," Elmer Harris, manager of the Blackstone theatre, Pittsburgh has made a plea for a more sensible and appropriate line of exploitation.

With a number of instances to back up his contention that many exhibitors are not reaping maximum profits on account of their hammer-and-tong promotion angle to showmen.

"Exploitation, as it is practiced today, is not getting a square deal," Mr. Harris said, prefacing his interview. "It is batted around by ninety per cent of the people engaged in the film business, from the presidents of producing companies to the exhibitor with a 75-seat house. And only about four per cent of the people trying to make money out of exploitation use the soft pedal occasionally. Nor does a very large percentage try to harmonize the exploitation to the nature of the picture.

"The practice of having special feature attractions put on at private showings before booking would cure many promotion ills of the day." The exhibitor is usually sold on an exploitation campaign the instant he books his picture. It should be often he has his campaign cooked up just from reading the title. There is no reason whatever why he should exploit an attraction without knowing what it is, any more than a dry goods store should put in a big supply of clothing without knowing whether it is worth $5,000 or $10,000. It is extremely regretable of course, but this sort of exhibiting is being carried on in a great many houses. In such a case there is no way for the exhibitor to gauge himself, as he is working blindly, in the dark. He has no idea of what he is buying when he has not seen the picture with his own eyes, previous to the beginning of its run at this house—no matter whose assurance he has for the merits of the picture.

"As a matter of fact, once the exhibitor has reviewed his picture and taken it in from all angles, it is comparatively easy for him to judge just what kind of exploitation the picture will take.

"An exhibitor—he who makes motion picture special features his business, and deals with them as his grocery man does with sugar and eggs, should have slightly more than the average judgment, along this line. Why should not he, then, be in a position to judge how much exploitation his picture will stand for? And yet, consider how many exploitation campaigns have been terribly grotesque and out-of-line.

"The answer to the question is simple. It is one of the greatest temptations in the world to buy low and sell high. When the exhibitor is shown a comparatively cheap attraction, which he thinks he can dress up in a good looking lobby display advertising, bill boards and what-not, it is the greatest temptation for him to want to take this film and grab off all the coin he can on it, clearing as great a marginal profit as possible. The exhibitor is no different than any other business man. The same rules of business apply to the exhibition game as apply to any other branch of trade.

"Moreover, there is another angle to the perverted sense of exploitation. Promotion that does not fit the picture makes no impression. When we wanted to exploit 'Back To God's Country' we didn't throw away the First National press sheet and talk about our returned soldiers. When the time came to promote Anita Stewart in 'In Old Kentucky' we used the race track idea. Exploitation should impress the thought of the picture. If it does not link the picture and theatre with the idea at which it is aimed, it is not good exploitation."

"There are a great number of pictures that will stand big advertising, as big a campaign as the exhibitor wants to put forth, and that is why an exhibitor who likes to put out campaigns, should steer clear of big efforts for weak sisters and not risk his chance of cleaning up. It's a rule that works both ways. If you're spending money and effort on a picture that is meritorious you are bound to make a hit with your patrons.

Clara Kimbal Young Picture Completed

Coincident with the metropolitan premiere at the Astor Hotel, May 26, of Equity's third Clara Kimball Young production "For the Soul of Rafael," which was accorded an enthusiastic reception, Equity Pictures announce the completion at the Garson Studios, Los Angeles, of their fourth Clara Kimball Young output, "Mid-Channel." Under the direction of Harry Garson, cutting and titling of picture is now under way, and prints will be forwarded East within two weeks.

"Mid-Channel," a screen adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's drama of the same name in which Ethel Barrymore played the leading role severay seasons ago.

Madge Kennedy Ill, No Work for Few Days

Goldwyn has been forced to suspend work on its eastern production of "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," from the story by Robert Shannon. The delay was necessitated by the illness of Madge Kennedy, who is being starred in the picturization, and it is expected that several days will elapse before the star will be able to resume work.

Joe King is playing opposite Miss Kennedy, and the rest of the cast includes Leon Pierre Gendron, William Walcott, Helen de Bois, Robert Vaughn, Emile Hoch, Lilian Worth, Robert Tansey and Dorothy Haight. Lawrence Windom is directing.

Ralph Ruffner Joins Jensen-Von Herberg

Announcement was made this week that Ralph Ruffner had accepted a position with the Jensen and Von Herberg chain of theatres, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for the Seattle territory. Mr. Ruffner was formerly attached to the publicity department of the First National home office. His affiliations with the Jensen and Von Herberg interests will be in the position of director of exploitations for the Peoples, Star and Majestic theatres of Portland.

"Flying A" Sales Force Greatly Increased

In order to hold the high points made by the "Flying A" sales force during the S. S. Hutchinson Tribute Month, and to insure against any possible summer slump in business, the American sales organization has been increased. The summer campaign includes several Specials of high grade, among which are listed "The House of Toys," "Peggy Rebels" and "The Week End," a screen adaptation of the novel by Cosmo Hamilton.

Original Story Chosen for George Walsh

"The Plunger" is the title of the story selected by William Fox to be the next George Walsh starring vehicle to follow "Number 17." It is an original story by Thomas F. Fallon.

Cosmopolitan Has Fine List

Five Productions Nearly Completed and Many Others Planned

AN idea of the extent of Cosmopolitan Productions' picture plans can be gleaned from the fact that this company now has five new productions completed, or nearly completed, two more to be started this week and several others ready to be put into work within the next few months—every one of them taken from a world famous story or play.

"Humoresque," which is running at New York's Criterion theatre, is the latest Cosmopolitan Productions' release. Proclaimed by some critics as the pictorial success of the season, and the logical successor to "The Miracle Man," it is admitted by everybody who has seen it as one of the greatest stories of mother love ever put on the screen.

"The Restless Sex," Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle, is another Cosmopolitan Production that has been completed and scheduled for early release. This is the screen version of Robert W. Chambers' famous novel of the same name, which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Another picture recently completed is "The World and His Wife," with Alma Rubens as the featured player. "A Whiff of Heliotrope," by Richard Washburn Child, is also ready. "The Inside of the Cup" by Winston Churchill, is now being filmed, and Marion Davies has started on "Buried Treasure," while "Just Around the Corner," by Fannie Hearst, and "The Passionate Pilgrim," by Samuel Mervin are now under way.

Among other big features scheduled for early production are "The Young Diana" by Marie Corelli; "The Commandment" by Fannie Hurst; "The Wild Goose" by Gouverneur Morris; "Uneasy Street" by Arthur Somers Roche; "Zal" by Rupert Hughes; "Yellow Magic" by F. Britten Austen; and "Superman" by Fannie Hurst.

Vitagraph Builds on Coast

Additional Structures in Hollywood Provide for Big Increases

AN extensive building campaign approximately $200,000 in cost has been inaugurated at Vitagraph's Western studios by W. S. Smith, general manager, in keeping with plans outlined during the recent visit to Hollywood of Albert E. Smith, president of the organization. Work will begin shortly on a construction schedule to occupy the summer months and which is designel to give Vitagraph one of the most modern plants in the industry by early autumn.

The additional structures have been necessitated by increased production by Vitagraph in Los Angeles and the further increases anticipated for the future. Vitagraph will continue to maintain its Brooklyn studios, but more elaborate production by companies now maintained in the west has demanded extra facilities. Further, the improvements indicate a business precaution against the developments of the future.

Vitagraph's administration offices will be entirely renewed. A separate modern building will be erected for stars' dressing rooms exclusively. More stages will be put up, including one huge glass enclosed structure designed for the large sets of the feature companies.

W. S. Smith recently was the successful bidder in probate court for ten acres of an old Los Angeles estate which adjoins the original Vitagraph property in Hollywood. This has been in use for temporary sets for the last two months. Under the new plans much of the extra area will be devoted to permanent sets, work on which has already begun. Vitagraph now holds twenty acres in Hollywood.

Screen Stars Seen in Stage Production

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, according to reports, a theatrical drama of the speaking stage was presented with an all-star cast of motion picture stars at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, on the nights of June 3, 5 and 5, at which time a super-production of Augustus Thomas' famous drama "Arizona" will be given.

Clara Kimball Young headed the cast, playing the leading feminine role. It was Miss Young's first appearance in a drama on the speaking stage since entering motion pictures nine years ago.

Playing opposite her in the leading male role was Hobart Bosworth, whose fame upon the stage was equally as great as his success on the screen. The cast included such stars as Dustin Farnum, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts and William Desmond, while Sessue Hayakawa had the important role of the Chinese servant. Bessie Barriscale and Milton Sills were both cast in important parts.

Fox Sales Force Visit New York Studio

The new William Fox studio and administration building in New York was the scene of two important events last week, beginning Monday with the official opening of the structure and the meeting which opened the first day of the sixth annual convention of the Fox Film Corporation sales forces.

Early on Monday the representatives of the sales branch of the company gathered on the floor of the big studio. They were conducted through the maze of settings, and overlooked no detail of the highly efficient lighting installation with which Mr. Fox has equipped his productions department.

Preparing for Neilan's Work in Europe

Marshall Neilan, as recently announced, will make an extended trip abroad within the next few months. He will be accompanied by an entire producing organization, including several internationally known screen celebrities. In France, England, Spain, Ireland and Belgium arrangements are now being made by Mr. Neilan's foreign representative, Harry Ham, for the picturization of some of the most noted historical landmarks of the globe. These will be embodied in the different stories which the director-producer will stage during his six months abroad.

Goldwyn Closes Big Foreign Deal

Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has closed another record-breaking deal for Goldwyn's third year product. This time the sale is for Australia and New Zealand and includes Booth Tarkington's two-reel "Edgar Comedies," the first three episodes of which are now being enthusiastically received in the United States.

Special Opens at Hotel Astor

Many Notables Witness Premier Showing of "The Wonder Man"

WITH the Hotel Astor as its place of exhibition and under the auspices of the American Legion, the premier of "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, which took place last Saturday evening, was a remarkable motion-picture event. The premier showing of the production, which is now released for general distribution by Robertson-Cole, followed a dinner in the Rose Room of the Hotel Astor, at which the releasing company entertained one hundred leading newspaper reviewers, trade paper writers, sporting editors, cartoonists and journalistic figures.

The Robertson-Cole Company has issued the following statement in connection with the opening showing of its big special:

"The picture was viewed by one of the most notable assemblies ever gathered, from a standpoint of diversity and prominence. The boxes in the Grand Ball Room of the Astor, where the showing took place, were filled with dignitaries. Among them were the French High Commission; the International Sporting Club; representatives of the United States Navy and of the United States Army; Lieut.-Gen. Robert L. Bullard, head of the department of the East; the party of John G. Adolfi, who directed 'The Wonder Man'; Frank Hall, motion picture distributor; Chic Sale, the comedian and party; supporting actors of 'The Wonder Man'; and the American Legion Committee, representing the organization under whose auspices the picture was presented.

"The premier opened with the dinner which took place in the Rose Room of the Hotel. After this was finished the guests were escorted into a section which had been reserved for them near the middle of the first floor of the big ball room.

"By 8.30 the grand ball room was filled and a moment later a bugle sounded from the upper balcony, calling attention of the crowded floors to the Marine Band of thirty pieces which came from Ft. Totten for the event. Broadway, a short time previous, had been stirred by the strains of the band's music, when it stood in front of the hotel for fifteen minutes, in Times Square, playing popular and military airs.

"Inside, the band played 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' as the great crowd stood, and a minute later. 'The Marseillaise,' closed its concert and the program proper was under way. The overture and incidental music was played by an orchestra of 25 pieces, especially engaged for the Astor showing and following a special musical setting put out by the Robertson-Cole music service.

"Above a specially installed screen were the American and French colors intertwined, and below, on either side of the screen, were an American and French flag. The orchestra was hidden by palms and flowers. After the showing of the Robertson-Cole scenic, 'The Wonder Man' was shown to the public for the first time.

"The premier was a real one, for no exhibitor nor motion-picture men had been given a preview. None outside of John G. Adolfi, who made the production, and Robertson-Cole officials, had seen it. From the time when Georges Carpentier appeared on the screen through to the end the picture was greeted by frequent applause.

"Carpentier, as he is seen in 'The Wonder Man,' reveals the quality of winning and holding the sympathy of the spectator, to a remarkable degree. His wonderful smile and his appealing ways quickly drew the interest and friendship of the big audience, as evidenced by the applause which became thunderous in the scenes in which he knocks out his antagonist in the bout staged at a fashionable club.

"One feature of the showing which was met with great applause was the exhibition on the screen of a telegram from Georges Carpentier, thanking the American Legion for its support of the picture, and praising the American soldier, as he personally had known him in the world war."

In addition to the co-operation given by the Hotel Astor, a great number of stores, automobile sales agencies and restaurants along Broadway from Fortieth street as far north as Sixty-third street offered their valuable display windows to aid in advertising the initial showing of the picture.

Metro Has Bought "The Hunch" by P. Wilde

Metro announces the purchase of a new photoplay story, "The Hunch," by Percival Wilde. Although "The Hunch" is Mr. Wilde's initial effort for the silent drama after having written copiously for the stage, Metro officials state that the freshness of his style and deft construction stamp him as an author with a "motion picture sense," and they predict a great future for him in this new field for his talents. In fact, those who have read the Mr. Wilde's original 'script of "The Hunch," were so impressed by it that it is probable Metro will make use of more of his original screen stories.

L. J. Bamberger and Joe Levy Opens Office

Leon J. Bamberger and Joe Levy have become partners under the firm name of Bamberger and Levy, and will act in the capacity of general sales agents to the trade. They have established themselves on the second floor of the Putnam Building, 1493 Broadway, New York.

The following items have been quoted by Mr. Bamberger as coming within their field of operation:

"The sale of United States rights, state rights and foreign rights on both features and comedies; the sale of scenarios and stories; the booking of big productions on percentage; exploitation; publicity; advertising; financing; promotion; organization; systems installed; production of advertising and industrial films."

Realistic Sea Setting Results in Accident

According to a report from Metro, Edward Sloman, who is directing a picturization of Jack London's "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," sustained "painful cuts and bruises" during a filming of one of the scenes for the picture in the Metro studio at Hollywood. The accident is said to have occurred when eight tons of water were hurled on the deck of the "ship" that had been constructed indoors on a large rocker to give the proper rolling effect of a vessel laboring in a heavy sea. Mitchell Lewis, the star, is also said to have been tossed about considerably by the on-rush of water.

Bert Lytell Is Selecting Scripts

Will Do His Next Four Pictures in East; "A Message from Mars" Chosen

WADING through a mass of manuscripts was the first task that came to the hand of Bert Lytell, when the young Metro star arrived in New York last Saturday from the Pacific Coast, where he had spent nearly two years at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Lytell has returned to the metropolis to make a series of special productions at Metro's Sixty-first Street studios.

At least four pictures will be done in the East by Mr. Lytell, according to present arrangements, and as only one play as yet has been definitely decided upon for the star, he is reading a great number of vehicles with a view to picking out the other three. Metro officials have found Mr. Lytell's judgment in the selection of plays to be excellent, and upon his arrival in the East they turned over to him for his perusal an accumulation of literary material, designed for a male star of his qualifications.

"A Message from Mars," Charles Hawtrey's most successful play, written by Richard Ganthoney, is the one already decided upon for Mr. Lytell's early use. This whimsical comedy-drama is well known to many of the present generation of theatre-goers. Charles Hawtrey starred in it almost continuously for six years in England and the United States. The play has had well over a thousand performances, including several late revivals, and ranks among the first of the great successes in theatrical history.

"A Message from Mars" has a fantastic story slightly reminiscent of Dickens's "A Christmas Carol." A reviewer in this country at the time of the play's first appearance here at the Garrick theatre, October 7, 1901, described it as having the "rare merit of being novel in theme." The plot tells of a wealthy but hard-hearted and utterly selfish young man who is awakened to more generous sentiments by being brought into actual contact with human suffering through the nocturnal visitation of a strange messenger from the planet Mars.

Before leaving the West Coast Mr. Lytell completed his work before the camera in "The Price of Redemption," one of the most spectacular productions, it is said, that has ever been made by Metro. The picture is based on the powerful novel of East India, "The Temple of Dawn," by I. A. R. Wylie. It was adapted to the screen by June Mathis and directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald. The special settings and effect were by A. W. Alley and G. M. Carpenter, and the photographer was Sol Polito.

In looking through the voluminous new material submitted to him Mr. Lytell has announced that he will not confine his choice to any one type of drama. He is exceedingly fond of unusual character delineations and has achieved success in comedy roles as well as in straight ones.

C. B. Price Sells Film to Canada Exhibitors

C. B. Price, president of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., has just returned from Canada where he negotiated the sale of several of his productions. During the several weeks that Mr. Price was in Canada he visited the important cities of the Dominion and disposed of the Mona Darkfeather Indian dramas to the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., who also bought the Canadian rights for "His Pajama Girl," starring Billie Rhodes.

Goldwyn Product Sold in South America

Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has closed a contract at a high figure for the marketing of Goldwyn's third year product in Chile, Bolivia and Peru. The deal negotiated last week brings the largest return to Goldwyn ever realized in those South American countries.

Up-to-date exploitation methods are being adopted, and exhibitors, profiting by experience, are said to have come to realize the value of creating a following for certain stars Several of the Goldwyn artists are already well established with South American motion picture fans, and their popularity has created the exhibitor's confidence in the newer favorites on the Goldwyn program, such as Will Rogers and Jack Pickford.

June Mathis Adapting "The Four Horsemen"

June Mathis, head of Metro's scenario staff, who recently arrived in New York from Hollywood, already is deep in the task of casting into motion picture form Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." At Metro's Sixty-first street studios it was intimated that production of this celebrated story would start about the first of July. No mention was made of the probable members of the cast. It will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro, with an all-star ensemble.

Items Regarding Pathe Serial Activities

Robert Brunton has selected Jack Mathers for the heavy role, Natalie Warfield for a "vamp" part, and William Brown to play characters in the new serial, starring Charles Hutchison. W. S. Van Dyke is directing the picture under Mr. Brunton's supervision.

According to Pathe, reports from the branch offices show that the favorable verdict of the reviewers on "The Third Eye" is being verified by the cordial reception accorded it upon its initial showing in the various houses that booked it on release.

Sixty Features on Its Schedule

A MINIMUM of sixty special feature attractions, from fifteen independent producing organizations, will be released to exhibitor owners of sub-franchise by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., during the 1920-1921 season beginning August 30 of this year and terminating about May 15, 1921. This statement, together with an explanation of production sources and the nature of releases, is contained in an announcement made this week, preliminary to an official listing of the titles of the entire schedule, which, it is said, will be available for publication next week.

The new schedule carries an increase of approximately twenty-five per cent in the total number of attractions to be distributed by Associated First National for the coming season over the aggregate schedule for the season just ended.

The summer schedule of releases, which begins on June 7, with an Allan Dwan production, "A Splendid Hazard," presented by Mayflower, was announced two weeks ago. This has since been supplemented with two additional attractions, giving a total of nine releases instead of seven. Following the initial Allan Dwan production through Associated First National will be "Married Life," first of the series of Mack Sennett specials, to be released on June 14. "Yes or No," starring Norma Talmadge, will be given its first-run presentations the week of June 28, and will be succeeded on July 12 by the third Marshall Neilan production, which has not yet been officially announced under its releasing title. Constance Talmadge will star in "The Perfect Woman" as the production for first-run houses the week of July 19, to be followed on August 2 by the fifth Katherine MacDonald attraction for the Circuit, entitled "The Notorious Miss Lisle."

King Vidor's special feature, "The Jack Knife Man," from the famous story of the same title by Ellis Parker Butler, will be the second release for the month, with August 16 as the date, and the final attraction, concluding the summer season, will be "The Scoffer," the second Allan Dwan production to be released through First National by Mayflower.

The fall season for First National's exhibitor members will, it is announced, begin on August 30 with "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," the first of Charles Ray's personally produced attractions, and adapted from George Cohan's greatest stage success. The star is reported to have taken three months of constant work at the studios to complete this production, which is now being cut and edited, and is complete with the exception of about a thousand feet of important exteriors which, it is expected, will be photographed in New York City within the next thirty days.

Charles Chaplin has a total of four productions to deliver to First National under the terms of his contract, and Marshall Neilan will provide three special attractions after August 30, not including the third of his releases through the Circuit, which is scheduled on the summer season list for July 12.

George McManus, the famous cartoonist, paid a visit to the Chaplin studios recently and sketched the incomparable Charlie while the latter was making his next big laugh-producer for First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The picture shows Mr. and Mrs. McManus with little Jack Coogan, Jr., and the world's premier fun-maker

Norma Talmadge will star in four productions, including one exceptionally big special, and Constance Talmadge will have an equal number of new attractions for release between the dates established as the start and finish of the new season.

James Oliver Curwood has been given a contract for two personally supervised productions, adapted from his own stories. The first will be "Nomads of the North," on which he is now at work with a company in the north woods of Canada.

Charles Ray will provide productions. Katherine MacDonald is the only other star in the total of fifteen who will have a maximum of five productions, one of which is scheduled for release before August.

The remainder of the schedule will be made up of three pictures starring Anita Stewart, three in which Mildred Harris Chaplin will be starred, one production to be directed by Sydney Franklin and released under his name as the producer, four releases in which Lionel Barrymore will star under his contract with Whitman Bennett, three personally produced pictures from Allan Dwan, three from Alan Houbar, one special feature from Mack Sennett, three R. A. Walsh productions, a special release with Mr. and Mrs Carter De Haven in the stellar roles, and a minimum of twelve independently made specials of unusual calibre.

Blackton Release June 20

"Passers By" Surpasses Producer's Previous Works, Predicts Pathe

"PASSERS BY," the new J. Stuart Blackton production, has been scheduled for release by Pathe for June 20th. According to reports it will mark the highest point in the producer's career.

"Passers By" stars Herbert Rawlinson, and was adapted from the stage success by C. Haddon Chambers. This author is probably one of the best known in the United States, for in addition to "Passers By" he has written "Captain Swift," "The Saving Grace," "The Tyranny of Tears" and "The Idlers." Effects new to the motion picture have been introduced by Commodore Blackton. Most of the action is laid in London and in the time of the year when fogs are densest. He obtained remarkable results from his "fog" photography, which lends to the production an atmosphere as true as could have been obtained in London itself.

The Blackton studio in Brooklyn was transformed into a section of London during the filming of "Passers By," and because of Mr. Blackton's knowledge of the great English city he had every detail absolutely correct.

The feminine interest is maintained by Leila Valentine, Ellen Cassity and Pauline Coffyn, while considerable appeal is won by little Charles Stuart Blackton, son of the producer-director. Herbert Rawlinson, as Peter Waverton, is admirably assisted by Tom Lewis, Dick Lee and W. J. Ferguson, three highly capable character actors whose work in "Passers By" stands out as a conspicuous tribute to their art.

Sub-Franchises Granted

First National Exceeds Quota of Proposed Extension of Membership

WITH eleven hundred and twenty-two sub-franchise applications granted, and over two thousand recommendations for additional awards before the Executive Committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the first thirty day period in the extension of exhibitor membership privileges ended this week with an approximate total of three thousand theatres on record or seeking to be recorded, as part of the Circuit's cooperative market for independently produced attractions.

This result, it is said, exsceeds the quota fixed by Associated First National officials at the Chicago convention of members and exchange managers, by more than one hundred per cent. The Executive Committee, composed of N. H. Gordon, of Boston, Moe Mark, of New York, and H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of Associated First National Pictures, is expected to pass finally on all pending application for sub-franchise grants before the middle of June.

Delay in official action by this committee resulted from the determination of company officials to make a ten days' trip to Dallas, Texas, in response to requests from a committee representing independent exhibitors in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, that some plan be formulated whereby the sub-franchise plan could be made immediately available in that territory as a proposition separate from the previous First National affiliation there. This trip delayed the work of the Executive Committee in deciding on applications from all territories.

Important first run theatres in every territory have filed requests for sub-franchises and the great majority of these have been granted and issued. The total number of subfranchises authorized to date includes a membership extension, on the new plan, to every theatre owned and operated by the original members of First National who signed the agreements for the Associated First National proposition in Atlantic City last January.

An interesting feature of the awarding has been the group applications from several territories where First National exchange managers called conventions of independent exhibitors to discuss the plan in all its details, immediately after the Chicago meeting.

Dwan Presents Strong Cast

Five of Players in "A Splendid Hazard" Have Featured Formerly

ONE of the noteworthy features of "A Splendid Hazard," Allan Dwan's third independent production presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through the First National Exhibitor's Circuit, is said to be the appearance of an unusually strong cast. Headed by Henry B. Walthall, it consists of seven prominent players, five of whom have been featured in other productions.

In the role of Karl Breitman, "the man who took the greatest sporting chance," Walthall gives one of the most brilliant characterizations he has ever contributed to the screen. The feminine lead in "A Splendid Hazard" is played by Rosemary Theby whose work in serials and dramatic features has brought her to the fore as a screen star. The young American newspaper correspondent, who figures prominently in the story, which was written by Harold MacGrath and published originally as a book, is essayed by Norman Kerry, one of filmdom's best known leading men.

Others in the cast are Joseph Dowling whose performance as "The Miracle Man" in George Loane Tucker's sensational success of that name, attracted much attention and who is also featured in "The Kentucky Colonel," and Ann Forrest, who has starred in a number of Western subjects produced by Universal.

The supporting company includes Thomas Jefferson, son of Joseph Jefferson who attained fame in the role of "Rip Van Winkle." The former is recognized as one of the most skillful character actors on stage and in pictures and has a score of successes to his credit. Others in the cast of the Dwan production are Philo MacCullough and Jiquel Lance.

"A Splendid Hazard" is scheduled for release during the early part of June. According to a statement from Mayflower, reports received from First National franchise holders throughout the country indicate that exhibitor interest has been keyed to a high pitch by the box-office potentialities of the Dwan production.

Y.M.C.A. Worker Has Praise for Ray

What the motion picture meant as a means of recreation and inspiration to the soldiers during the Great War is described in a letter written by a former Y. M. C. A. worker to Charles Ray, thanking the first National star for his clean, wholesome plays that were a source of real service during the troubled war times. The writer, J. Franklin Candy, pastor of the Congregational Church of Geneva, Ohio, says the appeal of Charlie Ray was such that he could always count on a full house when a Ray film was showing.

The veteran war worker declared further, that because of the high tone of Ray's photoplays he was glad to urge the members of his congregation to take advantage of the star's wholesome films.

Broadway Showing of "Illiterate Digest"

What is probably a unique record in moving picture circles, was made recently by "The Illiterate Digest," by Will Rogers, which is produced by the Marion H. Kohn Productions. The N. Y. Independent Masterfilm Corporation acquired the New York distribution rights for this novelty reel from Joe Brandt. Through error, is the report, the first issue was sent to the Strand theatre on Broadway, N. Y., and through another oversight the reel was shown at one performance without actually being booked.

Chas. Maigne Awaits Star in New York

Charles Maigne has returned to the East after several months spent in directing pictures for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on the Coast, whither he went upon completion of "The Copperhead." He is awaiting the arrivel in two weeks of Thomas Meighan, who is finishing "Conrad In Quest of His Youth," under the direction of William DeMille, and who will come East to work under Mr. Maigne's direction in "The Frontier of the Stars," by Albert Payson Terhune.

Mrs. Drew Completes Fourth of Series

Mrs. Sidney Drew has completed the fourth of her series of two reelers for Pathe distribution, in the Essanay studio at Chicago. "The Unconventional Maida Greenwood" is the title of the successor to "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," which is to be released by Pathe on May 30.

Elaborate Premiere Is Planned

"Madonnas and Men," Jans Picture, to Be Shown

CONSIDERABLE of an event in the history of motion pictures is to take place at the 44th street theatre, New York City, on the evening of Sunday, June 13. At that time the Jans Pictures, Inc., special super-feature production "Madonnas And Men" is to be given its world premiere.

This presentation is to be in the nature of an invitation affair to which all those connected in anyway with the motion picture industry will be invited to attend. In fact, the officials of Jans Pictures, Inc., especially request that should anyone be overlooked when tickets are sent out a few days previous to the showing that they immediately inform the company so that seats can be sent to them at once.

The special showing of "Madonnas And Men" which was directed by B. A. Rolfe will give exhibitors, independent exchangemen and all others interested, an opportunity to view what is said to be a most remarkable story of ancient and modern times. "Madonnas and Men" will be presented with an augmented orchestra playing a specially prepared musical score.

It is expected that all of the members of the all-star cast will be present at this showing of "Madonnas And Men." These players include Evans Burroughs Fontaine, Edmond Loew, Faire Binney, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Anders Randolph and Raye Dean, as well as Carey Wilson and Edmund Goulding, who wrote the story, and Violet Clark, who was responsible for the continuity. These players, authors and the well known people of the industry who will be in attendance promise to make this premier showing of "Madonnas And Men" one of the most important events in local amusement circles that has taken place in many months.

Plans are already under way to give "Madonnas And Men" an extensive exploitation campaign not only in this country but through the British Empire and Europe as well. So confident are the Jans officials of the great success this feature is bound to achieve that they not only spent a small fortune to make it but will appropriate another one to give it the widest publicity and advertising.

Jot down in your date book right now that you are going to see "Madonnas And Men" at the 44th street theatre on Sunday evening, June 13th and keep the appointment, so you'll not miss seeing what Jans Pictures, Inc., assures us is a real triumph for the motion picture.

Film to Be Feature of Advertisers' Meet

A special film, showing the New York headquarters of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, is being made under the direction of Harry Levey, manager of the Educational and Industrial Department of the Universal Film Company. It will be one of the special features of the convention of the clubs to be held in Indianapolis from June 6th to June 10th. The picture will be titled "How the Truth Got into Advertising."

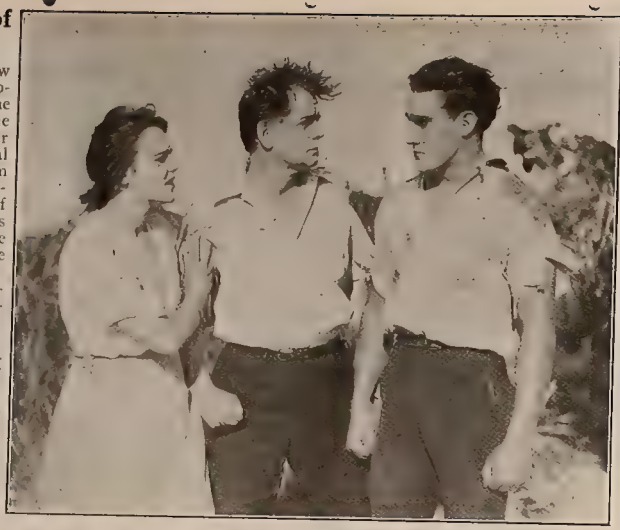
The Screen Advertisers Association of the World will be well represented at the convention.

Early Goldwyn Product Grows in Favor

Because managers of the smaller theatres have awakened to the fact that the first and second year's Goldwyn product is not too high class to be appreciated by their audience, there has arisen a strong demand for the circulation of these pictures in communities not heretofore visited. To meet this demand, a sales promotion department has been formed as a part of the sales organization. The promotion department will devote its energies to the marketing of the early Goldwyn pictures. New prints will be issued.

Pathe Claims "Scoop" for Its News Reel

According to a statement from the Pathe headquarters, O. A. Aultman, Pathe News cameraman defied death by violating orders that no motion-pictures of the overthrow of the Carranza government were to be made in Mexico City. He was hunted for days by the agents of the Obregon forces, says Pathe. They followed him when he made his escape from the Mexican capital with the negative of the revolutionary scenes. Aultman, however, eluded his pursuers and reached.



Husted Starts Work on Storyart Scenics

Work on the filming of the first of the Storyart Scenics, which Charles Clemens Husted is producing, was begun last week and it is said that the initial release will be in readiness for a private showing within a very short time.

Mr. Husted has as his camera man Earl W. Rossman, formerly one of the experts with the Prizma organization. A specially engaged cast of players has been used in the first of the Storyart Scenics.

"His Temporary Wife" Booking Fast

The W. W. Hodkinson organization announces additional bookings among big exhibitors for its all-star release, "His Temporary Wife," an adaptation by Joseph Levering from Robert Ames Bennet's magazine story. Jacob Lourie has engaged it for a week's run at his Modern and Beacon theatres, Boston. C. E. Stilwell will play it at his Casino in Spokane. The Poli chain in New England has booked the picture for its theatres in Bridgeport, Waterbury and New Haven.

Paul Gilmore, Hazel Hudson and Frank Williams in a scene from "The Isle of Destiny," a Character Picture

"Isle of Destiny" Is Ready

MORE than the usual amount of interest is expected to be manifested in "The Isle of Destiny," recently completed by the Character Pictures Corp., when it is shown on the screen. The story, which is from the pen of Mack Arthur, deals largely with a question that has always been prominent in the public mind—the question of whether the practical man or the dreamer and idealist is most useful to mankind—and the author's masterful handling of the matter brings about situations that should create wide comment among those who view the production.

"The Isle of Destiny" is offered as the type of story that has been found to be well suited to the demands of the screen, as it provided not only an interesting theme but a chance for spectacular scenes and beautiful backgrounds.

The Philippines form the early locale for the story. Jim Stafford, a self made man, has steadily worked himself forward until he has become owner of a large plantation. He is a firm believer in the doctrine of hard work and in reaching the top of the ladder his health has run down. He sells his plantation to return to America, and finally persuades Ruth Haney, who is tired of the dullness of the tropics, to marry him on their arrival in New York. Bob Elliot, a cousin of Stafford's has a discussion with the latter which results in a quarrel, Stafford upraiding Bob for not getting down to hard work. Stafford declares that money is the only thing worth while, Bob feeling differently. All three leave for the United States, Stafford bringing all his wealth in cash, fearing to leave it out of his possession. A few days out the steamer catches fire and the trio are wrecked and washed upon a desert island.

Through a chain of unexpected and thrilling circumstances the wealth that belonged to Stafford becomes Bob's property and their situations are reversed. Complications result when Stafford tries to regain his money and hold the girl. The story comes to a climax when a band of savages attack the huts and a real showdown is called for between the two men. The question as to the better man is held until the end and left entirely to the audience.

Paul Gilmore is featured in the production and there is a strong supporting cast including, Hazel Hudson, Frank Williams, Helen Pierce, John Hedges and last but not least Mac, a trick collie dog. "The Isle of Destiny" has gone through the cutting and editing stages and is now ready for showing. Announcements regarding its distribution will be made in a few days.

Pathe Says "Sherry" Is Winning Wide Favor

Edgar Lewis's second Pathe production, "Sherry" is being received with favor by exhibitors throughout the country, Pathe states. The screen version of George Barr McCutcheon's "best seller," was not scheduled for release by Pathe until May 30th, but advance screenings of it were held in each of the thirty-two branch offices of Pathe.

Like "Other Men's Shoes," which, until the release of "Rio Grande" held the Pathe record for numbers of bookings and average price per day, "Sherry" has a large amount of human interest. It is typical of the work of Edgar Lewis, who found greater opportunities for spectacular outdoor production in "Sherry" than in "Other Men's Shoes."

Palmore and Homan Point Out Error

A recent communication from the Palmore & Homand Co., of Baltimore, points out an error in the May 15th issue of the Motion Picture News, in which it was stated that the Baltimore State Rights Film Co. owned a building at 420 E. Lexington street, Baltimore. Palmore & Homand state that they are the owners of the building.

Blumenthal Sails to Boost Jans Picture

Ben Blumenthal, president and general manager of the Export and Import Film Corp., sailed for Europe on May 29. The reason for the trip, which is to be an extensive one, is the Jans Pictures, Inc., special super-feature production "Madonnas and Men." The Export and Import Film Corporation made contracts sometime ago whereby they acquired the foreign rights to all Jans Pictures, which contracts include "Madonnas and Men."

Exhibitors Commend Harold Lloyd

Pathe Exchange calls Harold Lloyd the "Laughter king." In a statement just issued Pathe submits a number of telegrams, voicing exhibitor approval of Lloyd's past performance, as the reason why the preceding title has been conferred on the comedian. Pathe, moreover, asserts that these telegrams are simply typical of the wide expression of approval which exhibitors everywhere are registering.

The Washington theatre, Boston, wires:

"Two reel Harold Lloyd comedies are certainly making a big hit with our patrons. They are greeted with applause and the house is in a continuous roar of laughter during the run of each comedy."

Jacob Albert of the Victory, Putnam, Conn., wires:

"I can play Lloyd day and date against any other screen comedian, bar none, and guarantee outdraw the other bird."

Holiday Bookings for "Slam Bang Jim"

"Duck Inn" is announced as the title of the second of the Mermaid Comedies which will be released by Educational Films Corporation through its own system of exchanges. "Fresh Start" is the initial release of the series.

Dan Lederman Resigns Posts

"SMILING DAN" LEDERMAN, genial general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the past two years, has resigned, to get a few months' rest and recreation from his strenuous labors. That he has performed some labor while general manager of the Big U outfit is readily apparent when you note the different organizations he had to resign from in order to make a getaway.

Dan pulled a good laugh when he handed in his resignations for it took him half a morning to write them out. He held the following official capacities for the Big U: Assistant treasurer, assistant secretary, assistant director, assistant to the president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, assistant treasurer and assistant secretary of the Big U, treasurer of the Canadian Universal Film Exchange, assistant secretary Motion Picture Realty Company of California, assistant secretary and assistant director of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; director of the Roma New York Film Company.

Nearly thirteen years ago Dan started the first motion picture theatre west of the Missouri river at Topeka, Kansas, in the days when 500 feet of miscellaneous junk film was considered "some show." There were no posters, no slides, no photographs, no advertising, no aids or accessories of any character. All he used in those days was a painted card done with a marking pot and brush reading, "New Big Show Today, Admission 5 Cts." "People wouldn't come to picture shows those days," says Dan, "and I had to send men to street corners to hand out complimentary tickets to get people to attend." After five months he opened the Elite Amusement Co. and with a flourishing business new houses were opened. One in Junction City, two in Wichita, one in Leavenworth, three in Lincoln, three in Omaha, three in Council Bluffs, two in South Omaha, one in Burlington, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Lederman, who are motoring from New York to Omaha

Before he had quit opening theatres he had thirty-seven houses under the control of his company. To be exact it was just thirteen years ago to the month when Mr Lederman entered the film business during the formation of the old Pittsburg Calcium Light Company and shortly afterward took the management of the General Film Company's branch at Omaha.

After an extended period with the General Film Dan associated himself with the Mutual and later went with the Universal with whom he has remained until last week. As a boy and in his early teens Dan was employed by the Missouri Pacific Railroad, where he remained for several years when he went with the Santa Fe and in his employment with that Company climbed the heights to the chief clerkship of the road. Later Dan went with the Queen and Crescent Route.

It was during his stay with the Rubber Trust that Dan got his first idea of pictures and for thirteen years without a break Dan has given his concentrated time and labors to the industry.

For twenty-seven years without a break Dan has worked without a real vacation and his resignation from the Universal was to save a little of the Old Dan for further use in the commercial world.

The manner in which Dan carried the load of "official capacities" while with the Universal has made him "a thirteen wonder," he being an official in no less than twelve organizations and while the labors of his position as general manager of the New York office of the Universal demanded all of his time he still found time to look after the interests of the many organizations in which he was directly associated

Personality as A Screen Asset

Picture Demands Brains as Well as Beauty of Its Real Stars

THE American Film Company, Inc., has issued the following statement concerning the character of the leading parts to be found in each one of its three forthcoming productions, "The House of Toys," "The Blue Moon" and "Whispering Smith." "The House of Toys" has been picturized from a novel by Henry Russell Miller, "The Blue Moon" by David Anderson and "Whispering Smith" by Frank H. Spearman. The statement issued by the American Film Company is submitted in the following:

"For super-specials such as the American has been putting out, President S. S. Hutchinson believes that not only a beautiful heroine and good acting are imperative, but that the personality of all the players must be as nearly as possible in accord with the author's own concept of his characters. Pursuing this course, R. R. Nehls, the general manager, has been at the Coast studios with the directors making an exhaustive study of the personal equation in each case. For instance, the choice of Mme. Marguerita Sylvia for the heroine of Samuel Merwin's novel, 'The Honey Bee' is an unusually good illustration of this point. A woman of matured thinking and strong personality put the idea across in a forceful way, whereas the prettiest little flapper would have made this powerful heart drama simply the ordinary type of love story. So in 'The House of Toys,' Seena Owen seems born for the role she carries—a romantic, selfish girl in love with love, and with no sense of the obligation she was incurring in marriage with a poor young architect; while Helen Jerome Eddy, as 'the other woman,' carries her role with the winsome simplicity of the true woman which is her chief personal charm, and which, in the drama, gives ample reason for the wife's anxiety regarding the power of the stenographer or female assistant her husband meets in business.

In 'The Blue Moon' directed by George L. Cox, another all-star cast includes Pell Trenton, and Elinor Field in the leading roles. As the Pearl Hunter, the man of few words who mixed with the roughest characters of the river scum on the Indiana flats, was one of them, yet apart, a man who did not know his own name, yet through whom the characteristics of a fine family strain shone this is Pell Trenton's part in 'The Blue Moon.' And little Elinor Field is the Wild Rose whom he loves. Incidentally the audience will learn some interesting things about pearl hunting.

"Charles Clary and Irene Rich who carry prominent roles in 'Whispering Smith' are with the American by special arrangement during the production of this one drama. Kathleen O'Connor and Billy Elmer are also in this all-star cast.

"According to R. R. Nehls, a premium should be placed upon the intellectual apparatus of the players; and camera beauty, not necessarily even 'skin deep,' is not claiming and holding as many devotees as in the past. The charm of personality and individuality is not lost through the medium of the film, as was feared at one time by the actors of the legitimate stage. True, the attraction of the human voice is lost, but the qualities which are responsible for the tones are still in evidence on the silver sheet, and there again 'It's the man that you are' that counts even in the movies

Miss Dean to Resume Work

Continuity of "Outside the Law" Being Written; Browning to Direct

ELABORATE preparations are being made at Universal City for the next Priscilla Dean feature, which will be started within the next two weeks. Tod Browning, who directed Miss Dean in her last production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," will direct her next picture. He is also the author of the new story, which is called "Outside the Law." The continuity is now being prepared by Lucien Hubbard, scenario chief at Universal City, and the technical department is busy with plans and blueprints for a series of elaborate settings.

"Outside the Law" is a crook drama of a new type. It has no crooked police or dishonest city officials. All the principal characters move in the same orbit, and the featured role of the story is that of a Chinese philosopher who preaches the doctrines of Confucius.

Miss Dean will have the role of the daughter of a keeper of a notorious gambling den in San Francisco's Chinatown, a part that will afford her better opportunities, according to Mr. Browning, than any character yet provided her. The part was fashioned to her temperament and personality by the man who knows her professional side better than any one else, for Tod Browning is the director who first brought Priscilla Dean into prominence several years ago and who has shared in her rapidly increasing popularity.

The filming of the story will include a three weeks stay in San Francisco and a week's tour in an ocean liner. A super-excellent cast is now being engaged.

Joe Ryan and Jean Paige in Vitagraph's thrilling serial, "Hidden Dangers"

Bebe Daniels in Good Role

To Star for Realart in Adaptation of Saturday Evening Post Stories

BEBE Daniels' first production as a Realart star will be "You Never Can Tell," an adaption of two short stories that were published recently in the Saturday Evening Post by Grace Lovell Bryan. According to J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, the selection of this material will give exhibitors an accurate line on the manner in which the company intends to satisfy the public's insatiable taste for "something different."

Miss Daniels' first starring vehicle will deal with the adventures of a cigar-counter girl in a large New York City hotel. Miss Daniels will have the role of Rowena Jones, daughter in a large family of six, who decides that her living conditions are unbearable and that it is up to her to become a martyr by marrying a rich man.

All she needs to do is to find the rich man. Her first experience is a heart breaker. Charles Allentown, uncle of the celebrated heir to the Armour millions, Vincent Armour, pays a lot of attention to her at the cigar counter of the Giltmore and then takes her one day for dinner to a Long Island resort hotel. When his wife finds them there and reveals his ulterior motive Rowena gets the first real jolt of her career.

However, undismayed, Rowena continues her search for a "rich mate." She lands one eventually but only to find the doors of society closed to both herself and the man she has married. Next, her mother-in-law gets busy and lays plans to get rid of the disconcerting daughter-in-law. However, Rowena is equal to Mother-in-law's ruses, and how she eventually maneuvers her husband's unfriendly parent, wins a recognized place in the family circle and establishes herself in the graces of society is told in the action of the picture.

Serial Release in July

Vitagraph's "Hidden Dangers" Half Completed on West Coast

ON his return to New York from the West Coast late last week, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announced that "Hidden Dangers," the Vitagraph serial in which Joe Ryan and Jean Paige are co-starred, will be released in July. More than half of the fifteen episodes have already been completed on the coast under the direction of William Bartram.

The story of "Hidden Dangers," which was written by Mr. Smith and Cleveland Moffett, has received many words of praise from exhibitors who have seen the first episodes screened and who have booked it on the strength of this early action. Mr. Bertram, the director, however, in a wire to Mr. Smith this week, claims that the big "walloping" thrills, as he styled them, are yet to come.

"If they like those first two episodes," he said, "just wait until they see episodes eight and nine and the thrills that you worked out here with Mr. Moffett. "The Jekyll-Hyde idea of the serial gets stronger as the story unfolds," Mr. Bertram said. The exhibitors are already referring to this production as "the Jekyll-Hyde serial," as Joe Ryan plays the dual role, appearing at times as a genial retired physician and again as the leader of a vicious criminal band.

Good Cast Seen in "Suds"

Mme. Rose Dione, Albert Austin and Harold Goodwin Support the Star

THE cast selected to support Mary Pickford in her new picture "Suds" is said to embody an unusual high class of screen talent. The following statement, issued from the offices of the United Artists' Corporation, describes the past achievements of the members of Pickford cast.

"Prominent in her support is Mme. Rose Dione, for a long time one of the leading members of Sarah Bernhardt's company in Paris and who since the outbreak of the war has appeared in French dramas at the French theatre in New York, and more recently came to California to appear in the silent art. Mme. Dione's screen debut was in 'The Secret Garden' and recently she appeared in 'The Luck of the Irish.'

"The principal lead—the possessor of the shirt upon which this story is founded, is Albert Austin, an English comedian of note, who for the past four years has been prominent in all of Charlie Chaplin's productions, and was loaned by the world famous comedian to Miss Pickford for this production.

"Harold Goodwin, who scored such a success in support of Miss Pickford in 'The Heart of the Hills' is also seen in 'Suds' as Benjamin Pillsbury Jones, master of transportaion for the laundry.

"Nadyne Montgomery, the clever English character actress who has played in a number of eastern productions, but who more recently has appeared at the Little theatre in Los Angeles, has a splendid part as one of the girls in the laundry who is rather skeptical of Amanda's aristocratic lineage. Miss Montgomery being a fluent linguist, also acts as interpreter for Mme. Dione.

"One of the principal members of the organization, but who is entirely new to the film world, is Lavender, the woe-begone nag which pulls the laundry wagon. Lavender was selected out of some two hundred applicants for the position, being the most dilapidated specimen of horse flesh ever seen around any studio."

Carpentier on Broadway

"The Wonder Man" Booked at Strand to Follow Showing at Hotel Astor

Moe Mark, manager of the Strand theatre, who has booked "The Wonder Man"

Moe Mark, director of the Strand Theatre, New York, and of the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, has booked "The Wonder Man," the Georges Carpentier picture. It will be shown, according to an announcement by Robertson-Cole, which is distributing the production, for a week in the New York house, immediately following the close of the Astor Hotel engagement, and in the Brooklyn house for the week following this New York engagement.

Despite the fact that the picture ran eight days at the Astor Hotel, under the auspices of the American Legion, thereby giving Broadway opportunity to see it, Mr. Mark immediately booked it and for his two New York houses, and for several other houses outside New York, for which he engages attractions.

These bookings, neither of which will be started until the end of the Hotel Astor engagement show Mr. Mark's opinion of the picture. Recognizing it as one of the big attractions of the season, he felt in booking the picture for a week on Broadway and for the following week in Brooklyn the previous American Legion showing on Broadway was a preparation for success in his houses.

Together with the Astor Hotel showing of eight days, which began Saturday evening, May 29, the Strand showing will give "The Wonder Man" fifteen days on Broadway, a run which has been equalled by only a few productions. Considering that Brooklyn is part of New York city, and easily accessible, this give the Carpentier picture a total run in leading houses of the Greater City of 22 days. Following these showings, in the most advantageous positions possible, there will be countless others in the more important neighborhood houses of New York City, as the summer progresses.

Goldwyn in Book Tie-up

Appleton & Co. and Producer Will Exploit "To the Highest Bidder"

THE latest important purchase announced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is Maximilian Foster's tremendously successful story, "The Trap," which ran in McClure's Magazine from December to May, and was read, it is conservatively estimated, by not less than five million people. In novel form, this amazing tale of love, mystery and intrigue will be published by D. Appleton & Co., some time in July, and the book will be exploited in connection with the picture.

Executives of Goldwyn Pictures and Appleton & Co. have decided to change the title from "The Trap" to "To the Highest Bidder," and the author has approved the alteration. When the book appears it will carry the new title, it is stated.

The co-operative exploitation campaign, to be shared in by Goldwyn and the publishers, is being prepared far in advance to include every possible angle for advertising tie-ups. D. Appleton & Co., recognized as the "house of best sellers," has come to appreciate the great impetus given to book sales through the picturization of a novel and a simultaneous release. In the instance of Maximilian Foster's latest work, the publishers plan going further than ever in uniting the publicity given the book and the picture.

The campaign to accompany the publishing of "To the Highest Bidder" will incorporate the fact that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is issuing a screen version, so that readers of the novel will be prepared to look for the picture when it is shown at a local theatre. Window cards, suitable for display space, will be distributed through Goldwyn exchanges to book-dealers in all parts of the country.

Says Will Rogers Has Scored Big Success

Goldwyn expresses the opinion that Will Rogers' work in "Jes' Call Me Jim" places him securely in the front ranks of screen comedians. Goldwyn forwards a copy of a telegram said to have been sent to Samuel Goldwyn by Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand, New York, following a week's showing of the picture at the big Broadway house:

"Will Rogers scored most genuine success of the season in 'Jes' Call Me Jim.' The theme of the story is sincere, direction perfect, and the magnetic personality of Rogers so contagious that Strand audiences enthusiastically applauded the picture at every showing."

Barbara Bedford With Tourneur Organization

Contracts were recently consummated under the terms of which Barbara Bedford will be a member of Maurice Tourneur's organization for a number of years to come.

Barbara Bedford at the present time is unknown to photoplay fans throughout the country. She came to California a few years ago, and Maurice Tourneur recognized in her a most unusual and promising young lady.

Industrial Scenario Is Bought at High Price

Harry Levey of the Universal Industrial and Educational Department has purchased a scenario for an industrial picture at the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, it is stated. In addition five other scenarios have been purchased by him during the past week, the prices paid ranging from one thousand to two thousand dollars, it is declared.

"Shore Acres" Crowds Washington Theatre

"Shore Acres," with Alice Lake, played to standing room at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre, Washington, D. C., during a week's run beginning Sunday, May 9th. News of this was contained in a letter from Nelson B. Bell, general press representative of the Crandall theatres, to the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation which produced and distributes "Shore Acres."

Four Episodes of Ruth Roland Serial Here

The first four episodes of "Ruth of the Rockies," the serial in which Ruth Roland will make her next appearance as a Pathé star, were shipped in complete form to New York from the Astra studios recently for the purpose of an initial screening for the Pathé officials in the home office.

Louise Loraine, playing a prominent role in Universal's new serial starring Elmo Lincoln, "The Lightning's Eye"

Read to Send Agents to Key Centers

Pursuant to his co-operative exploitation policy, J. Parker Read, Jr., will dispatch personal representatives in each key section of the country, whose duty it will be to get in personal touch with the exhibitor and the distributor in the key centers.

Mr. Schlager is expected to leave on a second tour within the month. He will cover the eastern division while the other personal representatives will cover the balance of the country.

Humorous Is Added to Universal Staff

Universal has engaged the services of another popular writer. The latest acquisition is Don Kahn a recognized writer of humorous literature. Kahn formerly was on the staff of Puck and Judge. From now on he will write comedies for Universal.

Experts Laud "Doug's" Next

Scene from "Friends and Enemies," a new Comedyart comedy produced by Special Pictures Corporation

Tom Gibson to Produce Fifty-Four Comedies

Charles Carpenter, general manager of the Eclipse Film Company, announces this week the closing of a tentative contract with Tom Gibson, formerly director of Hank Mann, Gale Henry, etc., to produce the series, "The Problems of the Potts Family," by Wycliffe A. Hill. The contract calls for fifty-four two reel comedies and covers a period of two years. Pictures one and two have already been completed by Mr. Gibson.

Anita Stewart Picture Has Feminine Appeal

"Harriet and the Piper," Anita Stewart's latest Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction, now in the course of production, is said to have an unusual feminine appeal. The story is by Kathleen Norris and was published first as a serial in the Pictorial Review, one of the leading woman's magazines. It is now being published in book form.

THE headquarters of the United Artists Corporation announces that following the completion of "The Mollycoddle," starring Douglas Fairbanks, many communications have been received from the Coast — some from persons prominently associated with the industry—which proclaim Fairbanks' next picture as "another big winner." The receipt of these commendatory messages is made the subject of a statement from the United Artists' offices. The statement follows:

"Douglas Fairbanks has come through with another big winner. That's the consensus of opinion of West Coast experts who were given the opportunity of seeing the first print this week of 'The Mollycoddle.'

"Messages telling of the exceptional value from box-office and patron standpoints of the picture have been received by Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation, who has set June 13th as the release date for this production, the third 'Doug' has made for the 'Big Four.'

"This universal opinion comes from such disinterested persons as Allan Dwan, the well known director; Anita Loos, the celebrated scenarist; Charles Chaplin, and a host of others who were the guests at a private viewing of the working print. The message received by Mr. Abrams states:

"'Just finished cutting working print "Mollycoddle." Length approximately six thousand feet. Chaplin says brilliant, clever and a wonderful characterization, the best picture he ever saw Douglas in. Dwan says, "best picture Doug ever made in his entire career." Anita Loos unqualifiedly agrees with Dwan. Mary Pickford very enthusiastic. We all think it a knockout.'

"Everything seems to point to the fact that Doug has come through with another spectacular production, one that will add more laurels to those already won by his exceptionally clever 'big four' pictures. Heredity and environment supply the themes for this production and 'The Mollycoddle' is unlike anything Fairbanks has yet been seen in, a new idea and a story which finds him in a character which will not alone please his host of admirers, but one which will add tremendously to his already gigantic following.

"Fairbanks has made a departure from the usual type of picture, for which he is famous, having done away with much of his stunting which has been supplanted by a sweet love story, affording him an opportunity to place himself in a rather subdued character of a sympathetic nature.

"The Mollycoddle" Is Departure from Usual Brand

"Right from the beginning a story is woven in 'The Mollycoddle' and with each following episode it builds up to a great moral and finishes up in whirlwind fashion.

"There is a fight participated in by the star and Wallace Beery, who shoulders the 'heavy' work, which surpasses any business of this character yet brought to the screen. For fully ten minutes the two batter each other and in such a spectacular manner that the realism is nearly perfect.

"Among the outstanding features of 'The Mollycoddle' are the scenes which were taken at the Hopi Indian reservation in Arizona. Twenty-five hundred Indians perform in this episode and regardless of the picturesqueness of their presence in the production it marks their initial performance in motion pictures.

"It was only after days of considerable debating that Fairbanks was given the permission by the Chiefs to photograph the members of the tribe and when the Redskins finally did get in action they proved to be a tremendous asset.

"Considerable attention will also be drawn to Ruth Renick, the new leading woman playing opposite the star, who is a newcomer to the screen. Miss Renick, because of the manner in which she responded to her part, indicates that a successful future in the film world is assured. The credit for the direction of "The Mollycoddle" falls to Victor Fleming."

Educational Lists Its Releases

ONE two-reel comedy every week is provided for in the initial release schedule of Educational Films Corporation through its own exchanges, starting with the week of June 20. There will also be a Chester-Outing every week, with a Bruce Scenic Beautiful and a Screenic alternating. There will also be other special releases weekly, including two single-reels among the first block.

One Two-Reel Comedy Every Week; a Fine List of Scenics

Prints and supplies of material are now being shipped to the various exchanges in preparation for the opening. It is possible that some of the offices will not be ready for business at the time set, but the mechanical arrangements are being pushed and wires received at the New York offices indicate that those jointly interested in the various exchanges are seeking to overcome every difficulty.

Four of the releases for the first week have already been given pre-release showings in New York theatres, and Educational points out that the opinions of the critics makes them a known quantity for the theatre. The comedy offering is a Chester, "Four Times Foiled," which was given its original showing at the Rivoli. It was then placed on the bill at the Rialto for another week and afterwards billed for a record run over the entire Loew metropolitan circuit. It received 84 days or twelve solid weeks showing on Broadway or in its immediate vicinity.

"The Hope of Adventure," a Robert C. Bruce Scenic, made on his recent trip to Alaska, had an important position on the Rialto bill this month. The Strand last week played two of the pictures that are numbered among the initial releases. One of these was "Pigs and Kava," a Chester-Outing taken on the Samoan Islands and the other "Modern Centaurs," which was given a share of the billing at the Strand. This picture portrays some remarkable riding by a troop of Portuguese cavalrymen.

The first of the Mermaid Comedies will be seen the week of June 27. This is "A Fresh Start," directed by Jack White, of Sennett comedy and Sunshine fame, and featuring Marvel Rea. "Kiss Me Caroline," the first of the Christie Comedies to be released by Educational under the new contract, will be shown in leading theatres for the first time during the week of July 4. Bobby Vernon is the featured player in this picture, the cast including Teddy Sampson, Neal Burns, Vera Stedman and the Follies Girls. The initial "Torchy," produced by Master Films, with Johnny Hines as the red-headed office boy will get its first general showing during the week of July 11.

Tyrad Pictures Changes Title of Feature

The Tyrad Pictures, Inc., has changed the name of "The Scar of Shame," in which Lucille De Tar plays the stellar role, to "Broken Hearts."

"Tit for Tat" Will Be Hallroom Comedy

The new two-reel Hall Room Boy comedy will be titled, "Tit for Tat." Percy and Ferdie become mixed up in a criminal chase with an eye to collecting the reward. The criminal turns out to be the exact double of Percy and the resultant complications lead to many warm and fistic arguments. "Tit for Tat," closely follows "Four of a Kind," "Tell Us Ouija," and "Movie Madness."

Stage Presentation of Universal Feature

During the recent National Electric Convention in Los Angeles, a special show was staged for the visitors at Universal City. Several scenes from "The Virgin of Stamboul" were put on with the original cast and original settings.

Exhibitors to Feature "Screen Snapshots"

From reports coming in from various parts of the country there is good indication to believe that many exhibitors are going to feature "Screen Snapshots," the new bi-monthly release in the same manner as they do their five reel features.

Sidney Franklin

Barthelmess to Be Starred

Griffith Star to Head Own Company; to Work in Griffith Studio

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, whose work in "Broken Blossoms," "Scarlet Days" and the "Idol Dancer" raised him high in the ranks of filmdom, is to be a star in his own right.

From the Griffith headquarters, however, comes the news that Mr. Barthelmess is not leaving David Griffith. "The situation at the Griffith studios at Mamaroneck," says the announcement, "is rather interesting just because it is so unusual in these days of selfish personal advancement at the other fellow's expense. For instance, news comes of the starring ambitions of Mr. Barthelmess, or Mr. Harron, or Miss Lillian Gish, and the idle gossips begin to say: 'They're leaving Griffith.' Now, as a matter as fact, these Griffith players who are 'going it on their own' actually are getting nearer to Mr. Griffith than they have been before. That may sound strange, but a lot of true statements often do.

"As an illustration, when Miss Dorothy Gish, following her triumph as the Little Disturber in 'Hearts of the World,' went to Mr. Griffith and told him she had received an offer to head her own companies, Mr. Griffith smiled and said: 'All right, I'm for you, and I'll give you all the help I can.'"

The Richard Barthelmess productions will be made at the Griffith studio, and are expected to begin immediately following the completion of "'Way Down East," the Griffith super-feature in which Mr. Barthelmess will be seen as David Bartlett.

Other Griffith players who are soon to head their own companies are Robert Harron and Lillian Gish. Practically all the pictures will be made at the Griffith studios.

Equipment Shipped for New Bombay Studio

The Sunlight Arc Corporation announces unusual activity in its New York service department preparatory to the first shipment of accessories abroad for the proposed Famous-Players-Lasky studios in Bombay, India. Nine cases, comprising two complete Sunlight Arc units, are to be shipped May 31st aboard the City of Chester. The Sunlight Arc Corporation anticipates a rapid extension of its foreign trade in the near future.

Al. Kaufman Engages Sidney Franklin

Albert A. Kaufman has just closed a deal with Sidney Franklin, according to an announcement made last Friday, which involves a long-term arrangement between the producer and the director, calling for four super-special productions to be staged yearly. These pictures are to be known as Sidney Franklin productions and will be produced on an elaborate plan.

Screening of "Restless Sex" Is Postponed

The special private showing of Marion Davies' latest starring feature, "The Restless Sex," a Cosmopolitan Production, which was announced for Wednesday evening, June 2, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, has been changed to the following Wednesday, or June 9, at the same time and at the same place.

Reelcraft Sets Release Date for Series

The Reelcraft Pictures Corporation announces June 20th as the date set for the first release of the series of two reel farce comedies in which Milburn Moranti is featured.

The releasing of this series has been held back until there were sufficient releases on hand to assure an uninterrupted program to be released every other week. Distribution will be through the Reelcraft and allied Exchanges covering the entire United States and foreign countries.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

Universal has taken a year's lease with an option to extend the lease for five years on a building at the corner of Congress and Jefferson Streets, and the physical handling of all Universal film in the Chicago territory will be done at that building. The two-story structure is absolutely fireproof and has an extensive sprinkler system, having been erected for a celluloid factory which occupied it for some years. It is conveniently located only two blocks west of the river and one block from express offices and railroad depots. The present commodious offices of Universal on the fifteenth floor of the Consumers Building will be retained and Manager Lesserman plans an auto service between the Consumers Building and his new film building for the convenience of exhibitors. He also has had a private wire installed between his office and the new building. It is reported that Metro and Hallmark also will have their films handled in the Universal Building.

J. J. Doyle of Chicago has acquired patent rights to the theatre signs, manufactured by the Enterprise Sign Company, Inc., and Charles C. Pyle Company, and is preparing to push the sale of these signs throughout the country. Headquarters have been opened by Mr. Doyle in the Tacoma Building, 5 N. La Salle street, Chicago.

J. R. Kratz, owner of the New Princess Theatre at Monticello, Ill., has appointed W. C. Martin manager of the house which is scheduled to open the first week in June.

Jack Graumont, Chicago manager of Metro, has returned from the convention of his company held in New York last week and reports that he is enthused over the sales plans developed at the convention and the release program which was outlined.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges, has returned to New York after a week spent in Chicago conferring with Manager Lesserman over the problem of the future location of Universal's office and distributing rooms in the Windy City.

Harry Weiss, manager of Superior Screen Service, Inc., and the leading Isaac Walton of the screen industry in this territory, went to Logansport, Indiana, over the Decoration Day holiday and returned with a creel full of fish. Next to putting over a contract, there is nothing Harry enjoys more than hooking a lively bass.

Lewis Gasnier, Leon Barry and Tom Walsh were in Chicago for a few hours enroute to Los Angeles, where they will start work on "Kismet," featuring Otis Skinner.

All booking and collection records were broken by the Chicago Pathe Exchange during the month of May, according to Manager Aschmann who also looks forward to splendid business during June. All Pathe features released during the month just past had loop showings. Extra time bookings on many features were a feature of the month's record.

Eddy Brislane, slayer of Manager Mills of the Crawford Theatre, who recently was convicted of first degree murder, has been sentenced to hang and will pay the extreme penalty on June 18th.

Rayman K. Aitken was elected commander of the American Legion, Cinema Post 494, at a meeting which was held in the studio at the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company last week. Edmund A. Bertram was chosen adjutant and George Kilgore sergeant-at-arms. It was decided that the regular meeting nights would be on the first and third Fridays of each month. Commander Aitken wishes that all Chicago veterans in any way connected with the motion picture industry would make mental note of these meeting nights and be present at the Rothacher Studio. An intensive membership campaign will be opened with a dance which will be held in the same studio within the next few weeks.

Samuel I. Levin, General Manager for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has left on a motor trip of the east to be gone several weeks, during which time he will cover New York and Pennsylvania and New England, making all the important large cities. Motoring is a great hobby with Mr. Levin and each year he takes an automobile trip to some distant section of the United States. Mrs. Levin will accompany him.

O. F. Spahr, manager of the Enterprise Optical Company, will be in Cleveland for the Exhibitors' Convention week and will divide his time between a booth which his company will have at the Motion Picture, Machine and Accessory Show and the convention hotels. He has arranged for the use of one of his Motographs for the projection of Independent Producers pre-release pictures at the show. Another Chicago accessory man who will be prominent in Cleveland during the week is Carl Fulton. The products of the E. E. Fulton Company will be exhibited by Argus in the Argus booth at the show. Dan Barton of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company also will be in Cleveland and will be prepared to demonstrate Barton Pipe organs and Bartolas to interested exhibitors. Mr. Barton will be accompanied by a staff of expert organ men.

Lee Herz of Silee is back in Chicago from New York with four new feature pictures which he purchased from Ayone in the East. Mr. Herz also has deals pending which will add several more good pictures to the Silee's list. The four just purchased are "Blind Love," featuring Lucy Cotton, which has received wonderfully favorable criticisms from the trade press and three Rex Ray five-reel features, the first to be released being "The Unknown Ranger."

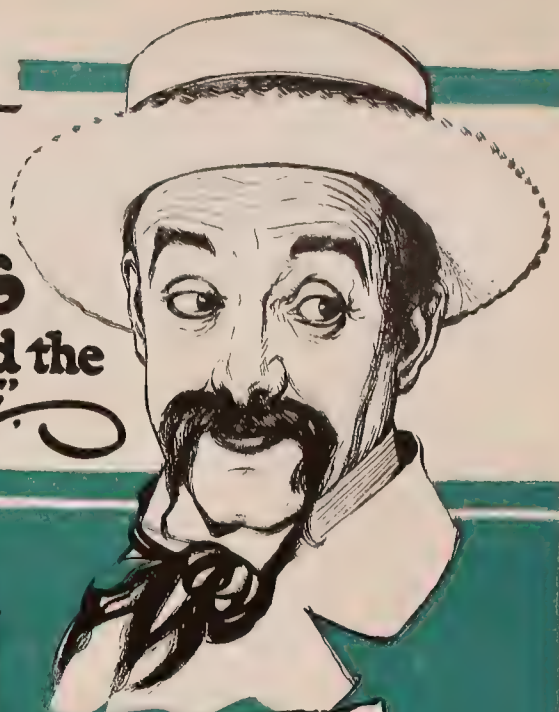
Richard Kippling, who has been in Chicago for the past two weeks conferring with Eddy Eckels over the recently formed Independent Films Association, has left for Los Angeles by way of Minneapolis and Duluth and plans to open offices for the new association in Los Angeles at once, as well as get production started on a series of feature pictures which he plans to distribute through Independent Films Association.

Announcement was made during the week that Tom Bourke, for several years connected with Chicago's largest daily newspaper, had been appointed general publicity representative for Ascher Brothers, owners of one of the largest string of motion picture theaters in the West. Mr. Bourke took active charge last Monday. His first work will be directing the publicity for the opening of the new Ascher houses in Dayton, Peoria and Cincinnati. A special staff will be appointed to work under the direction of Mr. Bourke, who was at one time dramatic editor of the Chicago American, a writer for years for the Tribune and one of the first daily newspaper men to devote space to the exploitation of motion pictures.

C. A. Meade, sales manager of C. B. Price Company, Inc., was in Chicago this week, where he screened the new picture, "His Pajama Girl." During his trip through the Middle West he also visitted Detroit, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Pittsburgh.

Chicago schools will utilize the movies in instruction work next year, according to E. S. Davis, president of the Board of Education, who expects attendance to grow accordingly. Among the films to be used in the educational work will be those showing the work of colonists, astronomy visualized and geological history.

"The Woman He Chose," the Swedish Bioscope production being put on the state rights market by the Mickey Film Company, has made a big booking record in Chicago, more than one hundred and ten theatres already having shown it, according to President Ludwig Schindler of the Mickey Company.



Andreas Dippel's experiment in combining Grand Opera and movies has not proved the success that the Maestro expected and the big auditorium will be dark this week. Mr. Companeri is arranging, however, to resume on June 6th and hopes to put the same sort of a show over at a two dollar rate for reserved seats, although during the first week of the performance, he charged one dollar. His reason is that the plain people are not sufficiently educated in music to be lured by a good picture to sit through an opera, but that the people accustomed to opera will be willing to pay the higher rate and attend.

ROLIN ONE REEL COMEDIES

with "Snub" Pollard and the funny little darky, "Sammy"

"Cut Your Cards." (Snub Pollard Comedy Released by Pathe. One Reel.) An amusing card game is the piece de resistance of this comedy. Snub and a pal are dodging the landlady when they fall headlong into a "quiet game" being held by various gentlemen of color, Hibernians and Jews. The new arrivals are warned that the game is on the level and to prove it each player produces a weapon. Revolvers, raisors, lead pipes and axes are some of the implements carried as means of protection by the gentlemen. Snub carefully manages to sneak the hand which a burly chap is betting his entire fortune upon, and, of course, the scene ends in one of those wild riots without which no slap-stick comedy is complete. The picture contains fun of a hilarious sort and no lack of action. Snub Pollard with his soulful and innocent expression puts a lot of fun into the card game, and where feminine pulchritude is needed he is ably assisted by a pretty brunette who revels in the name of Marie Mosquini.

TRADE REVIEW

"Speed to Spare." (Snub Pollard Comedy in One Reel. Released Through Pathe.) Snub Pollard is seen as an elevator boy in this extremely amusing short subject. Most of the comedy arises from the sprightly manner in which Snub dashes into his elevator when trouble approaches, and dodges all sorts of people by landing at the floors just vacated by his pursuers. Eventually he capures a gang of desperados by allowing them to chase him and then steering them into a jail. Snub is assisted in the merriment by the little colored chap who provides so many laughs in these features. The picture is highly amusing, is lively every foot of the way and is sure of putting an audience in the best of humor.

"Trotting Through Turkey"—Pathe

Few single reel comedies have been produced on as elaborate a scale as this one. The settings and draperies throughout hold the eye, the photography is unusually good and the entire affair a very satisfactory offering. It opens with a scene in the Palace of a Turkish sultan, where a giant wrestler manhandles his hapless opponents. Snub Pollard, starred in the piece, and his little colored companion appear upon the scene to shoot stuff for a news weekly, teach the members of the harem how to shimmie and incur the aid of the Sultan's displeasure. Snub is pitted against the giant grappler and with the aid of the peppery fluid is returned the victor. That scheme in itself is not especially humorous, duc to the many forms in which it has been employed, but the reel has much that is of value, is splendidly staged and ranks with Pollard's better ones.

"Drink Hearty"—Pathe

Prohibition has been used as a source of humor in more than one comedy, but the barn gin-mill in this one has been filmed so as to result in giggles and much of the material used is clever. Snub Pollard is the star and works earnestly. The mustached comedian looks funny enough and does not shirk work. In this he has been given satisfactory stuff and the result is an acceptable reel—another of his good ones.

MAX LINDER IN
"THE LITTLE CAFE"
A Feature Comedy Adapted
From The Broadway Stage
Success By Tristan Bernard

Chorus of impatient men patrons; "Boy, a little service please!

Unspoken comment of the women; "Isn't he cute!"

Proprietor of the Cafe; "I hope he chokes before he ruins me!"

The Girl aloud; "Get busy, you loafer!"

(Her unspoken thought); "He's adorable!"

Presenting the only Linder in a story of chortles and roars; his role that of a millionaire waiter who cannot quit his job, but who endeavors to work by day and play by night, with the inevitable complications.

Exploit Short Subjects Urges C. C. Burr

That exhibitors all over the country are passing up big opportunities by not properly exploiting their short subjects is the contention of C. C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., who are producing "Torchy" comedies. "A short subject," says Mr. Burr, "if it is properly exploited, will outdraw the average feature."

"A few live exhibitors who have sensed the value of meritorious two-reelers," continues Mr. Burr, "have not been backward in exploiting them, with the result that they have more than made good at the box office. Hugo Reisenfeld has featured the Shackleton "Bottom of the World" pictures, first at his Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York for two weeks and now at the Criterion, with splendid results. The novelty and quality of the subject gave them general interest and word of mouth advertising which is life to the picture theatre.

"Wonder Man" Author Is Revealed

Not until the picture was projected on the screen in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor in New York did it become known that the author of Georges Carpentier's first American starring vehicle, "The Wonder Man," was written by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman.

Robertson-Cole, producers of the mystery drama, kept the identity of the author a secret by pre-arrangement, with Dr. Goodman. It was agreed at the time Dr. Goodman entered into arrangements to write the script that the authorship should be kept secret until the first presentation of the picture.

D. Clarke on Screen in Two Broadway Houses

The season's record for Broadway appearances in pictures is being claimed for Downing Clarke, former actor-manager under the Belasco banner. Mr. Clarke is having the distinction of making appearance via the screen in two different Broadway shows for two successive weeks.

In "The Wonder Man," the Georges Carpentier production being showing in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Astor, Mr. Clarke plays the role of Judge Robert E. Stoner, and at the Strand theatre, Mr. Clarke appeared on "The Man Who Lost Himself."

Nelson and J. F. Polanp Join Ince Forces

Jack Nelson, who joined the Thomas H. Ince forces several months ago as director of the Douglas MacLean company, has been placed under a long-term contract to continue the direction of MacLean in his new role of a star in his own right.

Joseph Franklin Poland, for the past six months a member of the Ince scenario department, also has affixed his signature to a contract which calls for his exclusive services for a long period of time.

Wm. Fox Names June Releases

DRAMATIC offerings predominate in the schedule of releases listed by Fox Film Corporation for June. Along with the regular quota of Sunshine Comedy films and Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, William Fox, president of the company, has arranged to present five of his stars in as many features during June.

Notable among these features is a new William Farnum picture, "The Joyous Troublemakers," the original story of which comes from the pen of Jackson Gregory. It is said to be a big picture with a big cast of celebrated players supporting the magnetic Mr. Farnum, and is, as usual, a directorial masterpiece of J. Gordon Edwards. "The Joyous Troublemakers" was adapted to films by Charles Kenyon, who has contributed in this respect toward several Farnum successes, and John Doyle, the Farnum photographer, again has developed some new angles, working with Mr. Edwards.

The Tom Mix number on the Fox schedule is the first of the original stories written for this star by H. H. VanLoan, the noted short story writer who has come speedily to the fore as author of many successful screen entertainments. "Three Gold Coins" is the title.

The cast supporting Tom Mix ranks with those found in all Mix pictures and includes Margaret Loomis as leading woman, Frank Whitson, Bert Hadley, Dick Rush, Margaret Cullington, Sylvia Jocelyn, Bonnie Hill, Sid Jordan, Walt Robins and Frank Weed. The adaptation is the work of Alvin J. Neitz.

Winifred Westover, leading woman for "Buck" Jones in Fox features

In "White Lies," the Gladys Brockwell vehicle which comes to the first run houses in June, this star has a role in which she is called upon to demonstrate her histrionic ability as she has in no other Fox production for some time. The play is based on the novel by Charles Beade, and in it are many intensely heavy scenes between Miss Brockwell and her leading man, William Scott.

"White Lies" was directed by Edward J. LeSaint from the scenario by Charles Wilson. In addition to the leading man, William Scott, Mr. Fox has given his emotional star able support consisting of Josephine Crowell, Evans Kirk, Violet Schram, Charles K. French, Howard Scott, and Lule Warrenton.

The June release starring William Russell is a screen version of Ridgwell Cullum's story "Twins of Suffering Creek," one of the most successful of this noted author's works. In the picture with Russell are Louise Lovely, leading woman; E. A. Warren, Bill Ryno, Henry J. Hebert and Joe Ray. The direction was by Scott Dunlap and the photography by Clyde DeVinna.

The second production of Vivian Rich as a Fox star is titled "A World of Folly" and both story and scenario are by Jane Grogan. An unusual feature, about this picture is the fact that the cast includes but four persons in addition to Vivian Rich, the star. These four are Aaron Edwards as lead; Augustus Phillips, long known to theatregoers and followers of stock in various parts of the country, P. M. McCullough, and Daisy Robinson.

Among the short subjects scheduled for June, Fox offers four rapid-fire Sunshine Comedies -"Monkey Business," "Oh, What a Knight!" "Mary's Little Lobster,' and "His Musical Sneeze.' The Bud Fisher contributions for the month, in Animated Cartoons costarring the funny fellows, Mutt and Jeff, include four breezy black-and-whites. They are "The Toy Makers," "The Tango Dancers," "One Round Jeff" and "A Trip to Mars."

Forms A New Releasing Policy

EDUCATIONAL Films Corporation announces that hereafter it will pursue a policy of issuing one and two reel "specials" in scenic, tropical and scientific subjects without reference to series. This plan has been determined upon as the result of the immense number of inquiries received for "Modern Centaurs" and "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" in advance of their release.

"We believe that the five years' success of Educational," says a statement from that company, has fully proven the place that the short subject deserves on the program. We feel that we have convinced the exhibitor that the question of length should not be the chief one considered, but quality, and we feel very sure that when they are furnished with exceptional product in short subjects they will give these the attention that they deserve.

"At the Criterion Theatre "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes' was featured in the electric signs and in the newspaper advertising where it was called 'Alaska's eighth wonder of the world.' The slogan was fully justified by these remarkable pictures made by the expedition sent to the Mount

Educational to Issue "Specials" Outside of Series

Katmai region by the National Geographic Society. Similarly, 'Modern Centaurs' was strongly billed by the Strand during its showing last week and the hearty applause with which it was greeted by audiences was a tribute to its entertainment value.

"The reviews given both these pictures by the motion picture trade papers and the New York dailies were unusual, and they have resulted in scores of inquiries coming from exhibitors in all parts of the country. Educational believes that it is a healthy sign when exhibitors pay this unusual amount of attention to a short subject. It shows that they are interested in their whole bill and that they are getting further and further away from the circus method of advertising a single attraction and selecting the remainder of their offerings at random.

"We intend to make a real specialty of these specials. We will not attempt a regular schedule because we will offer one only when there is something really special to offer."

"Sex" Is Novelized for Newspapers

More than 800 newspaper editors throughout the country are now in receipt of a seven chapter novelization of "Sex," Louise Glaum's most recent J. Parker Read production. Such publications as the Augusta Herald, the Syracuse Post Standard and the Boston Post will run the story according to an announcement from the company. It is expected to be a great aid to the exhibitor in the exploitation of "Sex."

Exhibitors See Latest Ince Production

A private showing of Thomas H. Ince's latest special production "Homespun Folks," delighted several prominent exhibitors who were the guests of Producer Ince this week. Among those present were Sid Grauman, Otto Lyttle and Roscoe Del Rose.

Sennett Feature to be Released June 15

Following private screenings at Pasadena, advices from Sol Lesser and E. M. Asher, who claim that "Married Life,'" Mack Sennett's initial special feature attraction to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is one of the greatest comedy knockouts ever produced, First National this week authorizes the statement that June 15th has been set as a national release day.

Among the members of the cast Ben Turpin and Philys Havers stand out prominently. The Sennett beauties have a prominent place in the production, the nature of which takes in almost everything.

"The Vanishing Dagger" Released Shortly

Universal's long heralded policy of making serials that are high class adventure and travel pictures, instead of the usual serial hodge-podge of torture chambers and crashing railway trains, will have its initial try-out in the next few days, when Eddie Polo's international serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," will be released.

Polo and his party crossed the Atlantic last summer in order to film scenes in England, Scotland and Wales, and the continent of Europe. Three months were passed abroad. Many thousand feet of film were taken showing the actors in the serial enacting incidents of the plot in the actual settings called for in the scenario.

Eileen Percy at Work on Another for Fox

Word has reached the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation in New York that Eileen Percy, who has been made a full-fledged star by William Fox, is about to start work upon her second stellar production under that banner. Several popular short stories and novels have already been purchased by the producer for use by Miss Percy, and the selection of the first to go into work was put up to the star herself. She chose F. Scott Fitzgerald's "Myra Meets His Family."

Ince's Studio Tests Attract 2,000

The complimentary motion picture tests and tryouts, staged by Thomas H. Ince as an exploitation feature for Hobart Bosworth's "Below the Surface," attracted approximately two thousand ambitious men, women and children to the Ince lot recently. The test drive was staged in conjunction with Sid Grauman and the Los Angeles Record.

Bosworth Completes "Bucko MacAllister"

The Hobart Bosworth company returned to San Francisco this week to complete the "ship-burning" scenes that were started when the company were in the Bay City a few weeks ago. These scenes will complete Bosworth's Read production, "Bucko MacAllister."

Ray Signs with Rothacker

The Prints of Star's First National Pictures to Be Done by Rothacker

Charles Ray

CHARLES RAY has just completed arrangements in Los Angeles for the services of Rothacker prints in his forthcoming First National series. Mr. Ray, in signing with the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, issued a statement to the film concern asserting his satisfaction that his First National productions were to be Rothacker printed, and declaring that the importance of this detail of production could not be underestimated.

The first of Mr. Ray's productions to be printed in the Rothacker laboratories will be his picturization of "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," the well known George M. Cohan comedy-drama. As the initial First National attraction to be presented by Arthur S. Kane, in which Mr. Ray makes his bow as an independent star, every detail of production is being carefully considered, it is stated, and the selection of the Rothacker concern for printing reflects the faith which the star and his sponsors have in the standard of work done by the Chicago concern.

In a statement to the Rothacker company Mr. Ray makes plain his estimate of the important place which film-printing should occupy in the process of photoplay production. According to the First National star, it has frequently been the misfortune of stars and directors to see particularly effective work into which they had put time and money eradicated in the final showing by mediocre print work. Upon the ultimate appearance of a picture play on the screen everything depends, and therefore the printing of a film should be considered one of the greatest considerations, according to the First National star.

S. Hayakawa Gone West

To Resume Work for Robertson-Cole; Makes Statement of Plans

AFTER a fortnight's sojourn in New York City, Sessue Hayakawa, the Robertson-Cole star, has returned to California to resume work for Robertson-Cole under his new contract with that organization. Before leaving for the Coast, Mr. Hayakawa issued the following statement:

"While the pictures which are now being released are excellent attractions, and represent a maximum of entertainment for the time and money invested, the ones just ahead will be better, for the natural reason that I will have both greater time and means to put into them. Already we have chosen out first picture, and I will start work on it immediately upon my arrival on the Coast.

"This picture, and the others of the new series, will have strong dramatic stories, and the most colorful artistic atmosphere obtainable. Beyond these elements we will stress another factor, which is the spiritual. By this I don't mean anything heavy, or psychological, but an all pervading spiritual tone, which goes home to the brain as well as the emotions.

"If you think it over, you will find that the photoplay which has nothing behind it but thrills, and rapid-fire action—such as many of our passing successes have—makes its appeal only to the emotions. We thrill for the moment, and then forget. Let me show you how differently the great success, which lives for years, gets over.

"The latter sort of picture—the kind you never forget—has beyond its action, its love interest, its drama, a spiritual—perhaps one might esay an intellectual—tone which appeals to the mind. It carries conviction. It impresses in an indelible manner. It goes deeper than the emotions, appealing direct to the spirit. That is what we know we are going to be able to do under the new contract which provides at least three months for each picture, and an unlimited financial support."

Terriss Will Complete Picture in East

After three months on the Coast where he has been directing the big Vitagraph special, "Trumpet Island," Tom Terriss is on his way East with a large company to make the final scenes for this picture in New York City and along the Hudson. It is stated by Vitagraph that an expenditure of $200,000 has already been realized on this production.

Marguerite De La Motte has the principal role. The male lead is Wallace MacDonald. Joseph Swickard, Arthur Hoyt, Marcelle Daly, Hallam Cooley, Percy Challenger and numerous other widely known players make up the supporting cast.

Realart Executives Are Presented with Gifts

The managers' dinner at the Hotel Astor, New York, which closed the recent convention of the Realart field forces, was marked by the presentation to Morris Kohn, president of the Realart Pictures Corporation, of a massive gold set; and to John S. Woody, general manager, of a valuable platinum and diamond watch and a pearl-linked platinum chain. The presentations were made by Ben F. Simpson, Realart's San Francisco manager, on behalf of the assembled managers.

Mr. Kohn in his response thanked the men not only for the gift but especially for the spirit of fraternity that prompted it. Mr. Woody expressed his gratitude for the rare marks of appreciation conferred on him and declared that the way the managers had met his approaches of good fellowship had fairly staggered him. Parchments, personally signed by the donors, accompanied each one of the gifts.

Christie Names Cast of "So Long Letty"

Al Christie has secured Grace Darmond to play the title role of "Letty" in the production "So Long Letty," the filming of which will soon start at the Christie studio in Hollywood.

Another big name which has just been added to the cast is that of T. Roy Barnes. Walter Hiers has been secured through the courtesy of Charles Eyton and Frank Garbutt of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. The other important girl part in "So Long Letty" is to be played by Colleen Moore who is under contract with the Christie company for a long period of time.

"Miss Hobbs" Opens at Sid Grauman House

With a list that showed 3,500 bookings in the most representative houses in the United States, "Miss Hobbs," the initial production in which Realart's recently launched star Wanda Hawley appears, was given an enthusiastic premier at Sid Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles, announces Realart Pictures Corporation.

Sid Grauman wired J. S. Woody, Realart's general manager, that "Miss Hobbs" was a "perfect production and superior to anything of a similar-theme" and that "its national premier was gratifying in the extreme."

Exploitation Campaign for "Sex" Feature

F. B. Warren, general manager of the Associated Producers and formerly manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and Sig Schlager, a representative of the sales department of the J. Parker Read, Jr., Productions, have mapped out an exploitation campaign for Mr. Read's production, "Sex," it is stated, in an announcement from the Read offices at Culver City. Great stress has been placed on the feminine appeal of the picture, it is declared. Mr. Warren has supervised the distribution of the paper from the Hodkinson office, while Schlager has arranged number of tie-ups.

Bebe Daniels, who will star in multiple reel features produced by Realart

Record Duplicated by "The River's End"

The statement first started at the New York Strand in connection with Marshall Neilan's initial independent production, "The River's End," that this picture proved the biggest attraction in the history of this theatre has again been duplicated by the Empire theatre, Portland, Me., it is stated, in a telegram from Manager Boucher of that house. After the usual run of three days, it was extended another day. The business of the fourth day was so great that Manager Boucher again extended the booking two more days.

Mr. Boucher's telegram to the Neilan company read as follows: "The River's End proved a most successful week's run of any picture in the history of our house. Truly great production. You have a real winner. Congratulations."

Universal Announces Tsuru Aoki Release

Universal announces as a special attraction the release of "The Tokio Siren," with Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa), June 14th. Norman Dawn directed this production, which is a comedy-drama of modern times with a touch of picturesque antiquity including old Japanese ruins and the religious ceremonies of the Buddhist worshippers. The picture is based on Gwendolyn Logan's story "Sayonara."

Percival Forms Company in New Jersey

Earnest P. Percival, formerly connected with the Lubin company, has opened his own studios in Gloucester City, N. J., to specialize in the production of two reel comedies and a series of features. The first comedy will be entitled "Their Troubled Honeymoon." Mr. Percival is president of the new company; Charles P. Thompson, vice-president, and Henry A. Miller, secretary and treasurer.

Do Fans Like Actors or Types?

Leslie King Champions Cause of Character-Actor on Screen

"DOES the moving-picture public want to see Actors or Types? Is it more profitable for the producers to carry in stock a few players, with sufficient ability and training to portray any number of characters with convincing realism, and such expert knowledge of make-up that their appearance is thoroughly satisfactory; or to use time, which means money, in a constant search for persons whose resemblance of the character needed is indubitable, but who may or may not possess dramatic ability?"

These are the pertinent questions put forward by an actor who should know what he is talking about, a man with twenty-five years' experience in big and little repertaire companies, a man who has been through the mill of presenting nine parts a week—Leslie King—creator of such unforgetable characters as One Lamp Louie in "The Shielding Shadow," Evil Eye in "The Evil Eye," the poor Coolie in Herbert Kaufman's "Content," the secretary in "Here Comes the Bride," and Blinky Bill in "The Fatal Fortune.'

Mr. King maintains that with ultra-finesse in the practice of the art of make-up, an inventive genius can devise means that will completely eradicate any lines indicating where nature leaves off, and artificiality begins—the straight, pronounced lines denoting the artificial beard, putty nose and blend of the wig. His make-up is absolutely camera-proof, he asserts, and his book of 'stills," none of which has ever been retouched, he assures us, proves his assertion.

This being true, certainly public taste is unquestionably in favor of the real actor, who can create a character beyond the latitude of his own personality, and present it with all the fine transitional acting which actually "puts across" a part, as opposed to a player chosen for a part because of certain physical peculiarities, who can satisfy so far as appearance goes, but through lack of experience and training, or through inability to visualize any personality foreign to his own, inevitably loses the fine shadings that are the greatest joy of the play to the observing playgoer.

We can assume, then, that the only reason for the producers ever casting types rather than actors is due to the one remaining argument in their favor—namely, the commercial element—money saving.

"It's an important factor," Mr. King admits, but he is quite ready with impressive facts on that point also.

"It takes the time of the casting and assistant directors, and often of the director himself, to look up certain types," he says. "Time costs money! Frequently a set may be ready. Suddenly an overlooked character is called for. There is no one suitable at hand. The set, the star, the director, with their salaries going on, are kept waiting, while the necessary search is made. Whereas, a competent character-actor might have stepped into the breach and filled it."

"In selecting the type," Mr. King continues, "there is always the chance of pulling a lemon. Again the star and the other players wait, while the director exhausts patience and energy trying to squeeze out of the lemon what isn't there—ability to 'put it over.' That time costs money!"

"Furthermore, there are often times when the good character-actor can play more than one brief part in a picture. And the really worthwhile actor shouldn't object to playing a small part, when his services are not otherwise required, provided of course, that he is under contract, and that there are times when he is given opportunity to prove his ability to the public. So is another salary saved."

Mr. King's recommendation to producing companies is that they carry in stock two character-actors who have had long experience in dramatic stock work, which insures their being versatile, and, as a rule, make-up artists. One of these men should be tall, the other medium sized. The director hands the script of his play to these men, and tells them to submit characterizations for certain parts that he designates. These two men may play four or more, or only two parts in the play. The director may have ideas, himself, about the physical characteristics of the types required. He states them and his stock actors act upon his suggestions. They appear before him with the characterizations called for. The chances are that they will be exactly what the director wants. If not, they will serve as a basis upon which to arrive at the desired result.

We can only add to Mr. King's statements that we are thoroughly in sympathy with his ideas. We prefer, and we believe sincerely that the public prefers, actors to types. Everyone knows how frequently a character part is responsible for spontaneous applause during the showing of a film—applause that means infinitely more to the box-office power of the play than a polite hand-clapping at the end. And we hope with Mr. King, than whom we have never met a more ardent and sincere devotee of his profession, that the producers will realize this, and accord the capable actors the recognition they so fully deserve. Marguerite Jones.

Artist Will Be A Director

Penrhyn Stanlaws Signs Contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

ALTHOUGH at the height of his fame as a painter and illustrator, Penrhyn Stanlaws, creator of the famous Penrhyn Stanlaws girls for magazine covers, and author of several successful plays, has given up painting and in the future will devote himself entirely to motion pictures, it was announced yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Stanlaws, who has signed a long-term contract to devote all his time to Paramount Pictures, will spend the next twelve months in the Famous Players-Lasky eastern studio studying the motion picture art to become a writer and director of Paramount pictures. In directing pictures it is Mr. Stanlaws' purpose to apply his knowledge of drama and artistic effects to the staging of photoplays that will combine dramatic story with artistic charm.

The engagement of Mr. Stanlaws, Mr. Lasky said, was in line with his policy of obtaining the services of noted writers and artists to work directly for Paramount Pictures. Mr. Stanlaws' decision to abandon painting in favor of motion pictures is said to be due to his belief that the production of beautiful motion pictures is more worth while than the painting of pretty girls' heads.

"The motion picture, because it is a picture of moving things," said Mr. Stanlaws, "gives an artist a vastly greater opportunity than oil or water color or pen and ink drawings. With the immense world-wide audience which the motion picture affords I do not think an artist or a writer can afford to ignore this great artistic force. I have always been a student of the drama and, therefore, am intensely interested in this new great dramatic medium."

Big Houses Are Booking "Simple Souls"

Philadelphia, Chicago and New York are leading in Pathe's booking race on Blanche Sweet's newest Jesse D. Hampton release, "Simple Souls," which was adapted from the celebrated novel by John Hastings Turner, and published by Scribners.

The principal circuits in the Metropolitan area have booked "Simple Souls." The most important theatres in the Loew, Moss and Fox chains of theatres have been granted exhibition dates on the productions.

Jack Dillon in East; on Brief Vacation

Jack Dillon, Mary Pickford's director, is at present in New York, enjoying a short vacation after completing "Suds." It is expected that Mr. Dillon's stay in the East will be limited to two weeks as he is scheduled to direct Douglas Fairbanks' fourth "Big Four" production and must leave shortly for the Coast to make necessary preparations.

Adolph Zukor's Annual Statement : : : :

"IT has always been my custom at this time of the year to make a statement regarding the place and policy of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the season to come. I have endeavored to place before exhibitors facts upon which they could base a fair estimate as to what our organization had to offer them, and I have striven to make clear to them the reasons why they could depend upon Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a dependable source of supply of quality pictures in quantity. My statement for this year is as follows:

"Paramount Pictures for September:

George Fitzmaurice production 'The Right to Love,' with Mae Murray and David Powell, as fine as 'On With the Dance."

Elsie Ferguson in Mrs. Humphry Ward's 'Lady Rose's Daughter.

Charles Ray in 'The Village Sleuth,' supervised by Thos. H. Ince.

Thomas Meighan in the famous story 'Civilian Clothes.'

Dorothy Dalton in Sir James M. Barrie's story 'Half an Hour.'

'Humoresque,' Cosmopolitan's production of Fannie Hurst's story.

Dorothy Gish in 'Little Miss Rebellion.'

Wallace Reid in 'What's Your Hurry.'

Paramount Pictures for October:

'The Restless Sex,' an elaborate Cosmopolitan production of Robert W. Chambers's story.

'Fatty' Arbuckle in 'The Round Up,' his first big feature picture.

Douglas McLean in 'The Jailbird,' a Thos. H. Ince production.

Wm. S. Hart in 'The Cradle of Courage,' third of his own production.

Cecil B. DeMille's 'Something to Think About!'

'A Full House,' the famous farce, with Bryant Washburn.

Maurice Tourneur's production, 'Deep Waters,' from F. Hopkinson Smith's story, 'Caleb West, Master Diver.'

Charles Ray in 'An Old Fashioned Young Man,' a Thomas H. Ince production.

Ethel Clayton in 'The City Sparrow.'

'Held by the Enemy,' from William Gilberte's famous stage play.

Paramount Pictures for November:

George Melford's finest work, 'Behold My Wife,' Sir Gilbert Parker's story.

George Fitzmaurice production, 'Idols of Clay,' with Mae Murray and David Powell.

Ethel Clayton in 'Rozanne Ozanne.'

Wallace Reid in 'The Charm School,' from a Saturday Evening Post story, by Alice Duer Miller.

Dorothy Dalton in 'The Winter City Favorite,' a story of city gaiety.

Enid Bennett in 'Her Husband's Friends,' a Thos. H. Ince production.

'Burglar Proof,' a comedy, featuring Bryant Washburn.

Billie Burke in Clyde Fitch's play, 'The Frisky Mrs. Johnson.'

ADOLPH ZUKOR.

What Jesse L. Lasky Has to Say : : : :

"THE motion picture has reached a state that demands organization — the big, intricate, highly specialized organization, which alone is capable of producing the type of photoplays that please the public and are successful at the box-office.

"Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has this organization. Famous Players-Lasky has it because the men at the head of this corporation long ago had the vision to see that the day was coming when the public would demand that producers produce photoplays and not merely manufacture movies. The production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation did not spring into being overnight; it is the fruition of years of patient toil, eternal vigilance, alertness to the constant growth of the motion picture art, and the combined efforts of a corps of men and women who have blended the best talent and genius of the new art with a fine loyalty to an ideal. Only such an organization, backed by resources which places every possible facility and aid in the hands of directors and stars, is capable of producing the newer and finer type of pictures which the season now closing has so conclusively shown to be what the public wants.

"Only such an organization could have ready—in exchanges to be shown to exhibitors—the really notable list of photoplays which we now have on hand for the coming season. It is by means of this organization that we have been able to produce twenty-five pictures four months in advance of the opening of the season, September 1.

"The best promise which the production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation can make for the next year is the twenty-five pictures which have already been made. These pictures include such sterling photoplays as George Fitzmaurice's special production 'The Right to Love,' the Elsie Ferguson picture, 'Lady Rose's Daughter,' Thomas Meighan in 'Civilian Clothes,' Roscoe Arbuckle in 'The Round-Up,' a wonderful new Wm. S. Hart picture, 'The Cradle of Courage,' and 'Something to Think About,' which I am assured is one of the best pictures Cecil B. DeMille ever made.

"Just as the public has now come to discriminate between good and mediocre photoplays—and discriminate by reading motion picture advertising—so the motion picture has grown to a point that demands infinitely more than a director, a camera, and a star. And the new season beginning September 1 marks the crossroads where exhibitors and producers must elect whether they want to climb the road to better pictures or make the easy descent along the other road to mediocrity, oblivion, and bankruptcy.

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's production department will continue on the high road. It is our plan to make 104 pictures during the coming year—and every one of these productions will be given all the care and skill and thought that long experience and the best of production genius can supply.

"That the public wants the big, special production, was established this year, not only to our satisfaction, but also to the satisfaction and profit of the thousands of exhibitors who were foresighted enough to book such splendid Paramount productions as George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man,' Cecil B. DeMille's wonderful productions, 'Male and Female' and 'Why Change Your Wife,' George Melford's 'Everywoman,' 'The Sea Wolf,' George Fitzmaurice's 'On With the Dance,' 'The Copperhead,' and that remarkable photoplay, 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.'

"In the season of 1920-21 it is our intention to develop this policy of big, special productions. Specials will be produced in the ratio of two to every four Paramount pictures made. And the making of these specials will be in the hands of such masters as Cecil B. DeMille, George Fitzmaurice, George H. Melford, William D. Taylor, who made 'Huckleberry Finn' William DeMille, and other prominent directors whose names will be announced later.

"Back of every one of our directors, back of every one of our stars, is a vast invisible force of writers, artists, technicians. Experience has shown that even the best directors cannot do their best work while burdened with the cares and innumerable duties of business. Their task is to make pictures; and they cannot produce the best pictures unless the multiplicity of details are removed and placed in the hands of an organization. Thus the organization we have built up assures the exhibitors of America the very best work of the artists assembled for the production of Paramount pictures.

"Moreover, the photoplay material which we place in the hands of our directors and stars is not the output of hack writers. We have a big reservoir of novels, short stories, and stage plays, the work of recognized writers, which enables us to choose only the very best material for our artists.

"Our studio facilities have been enlarged to such an extent in the last year as to surpass even the imagination of the men who started this art. The new season will see us producing pictures in Hollywood, in the new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City, in our new studio in London, and in our new studio about to be built in Bombay, India. Every one of these studios is of such magnitude and is so well equipped as to afford the greatest possible resources for directors and artists. The new Eastern studio in Long Island City, for instance, will allow eight companies to work on its stages at the same time. In the London studio only big special productions will be made, with English casts in English settings. This will bring a new, and utterly distinctive note to the screens of America. But the most far-reaching studio development of the coming season will be the production of pictures in our new studio in Bombay, affording as it does the production of photoplays in a picturesque land that is virgin territory to the motion picture director.

"This is what I mean by production organization. This is what I mean when I say that successful photoplays cannot be made on promises and publicity. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's production organization, like its distributing system, is world-wide. It has the resources and the facilities to bring to the screens of American exhibitors the very best photoplays that can be produced anywhere in the world; and in the season of 1920-21 it is our intention to use this vast production organization to the utmost of its powers, to the end that exhibitors will be able to promise their patrons the very best in motion picture art."

"Two a Week; One Hundred and Four a Year"

MORE than one hundred features will be released during the forthcoming season, according to an announcement of Al Leichtman, general manager of the Department of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release in the season of 1920-1921," says Mr. Lichtman, "at least 104 feature productions, at the rate of two each week, beginning September 5.

"Forty per cent of these negatives are now completed. Before July 1 more than twenty-five of these productions will be on their way to the exchanges so that exhibitors can review them.

"The plan for booking these productions will be so elastic that they will be available to every exhibitor who wants a steady supply of the best pictures for his patrons.

"An enormous amount of capital is tied up in these Paramount pictures, but Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is ready to forego immediate returns and in order that it may establish a policy of giving every exhibitor an opportunity to see a picture before he books it and to allow him his sufficient time to prepare an exploitation campaign and a supporting program based upon personal knowledge of the features he is going to give his public.

"All productions throughout the year will be shown to exhibitors several months before release date.

"Success can come to exhibitor, distributor and producer only through a consistent supply of good pictures, intelligently presented and properly exploited and one of the greatest necessities is plenty of time for the preparation of everything that goes into the making of a successful showing. Our producing department is taking all the time needed for making perfect pictures and now under the new plan we are giving the exhibitor, in turn, the advance information necessary for him to present these pictures with the careful attention that is due them.

"The producing organization that has in the past given the exhibitor of Paramount Pictures the dominating position in his community is the same organization that has already completed pictures that are as fine, perhaps even finer, than the best that have ever been delivered to exhibitors from our studios.

"We shall ask exhibitors to judge completed production, not promised productions, and shall rise or by their judgment and by that of the great public that Famous Players Lasky Corporation, through the exhibitor has so well served in the past."

New Studios Increase Facilities : : : : :

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, today stands at the beginning of a new era in film production. With the opening of its new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City, the completion of its elaborate studio in London, the development of large studios and laboratories in Bombay, India, and the constant improvement of its West Coast plant in Hollywood, the corporation finds itself in possession of facilities for producing photoplays of a quality and a diversity of appeal never before equalled in the motion picture field.

Unique among structures of its kind, the new Famous Players plant in Long Island City, which will be in operation next season, represents the best efforts of specialists and experts in motion picture production working in combination with leading engineers in the fields of construction, lighting and ventilation. In it the Eastern production activities of the organization, now scattered through four studios, will be housed under one roof.

Architecturally the new studio is one of the most interesting buildings in the metropolitan area, its exterior suggesting a great railway terminal rather than the home of a business concern. Its principal lighting, especially for production work, will be by an elaborate electric plant, which will allow 7,600 volts, alternating current to be received from the Central station.

Another departure from convention is to be found in the direct current feeder system for lighting the studio stage, designed to supply 10,000 amperes to the main studio at present, which later will be increased to 15,000 amperes. In this feeder system alone 20,000 pounds of copper are used. This system will feed ten overhead remote switchboards, each of which can be controlled by the cameraman or director from any point on the studio floor.

The main studio floor in the new building measures 120 by 228 feet. Above it rises a dome roof which does away with the necessity of supports, leaving the entire space clear for the construction of sets. Grouped about this floor are the departments actually concerned in the making of the picture. Here is located the Art and Decoration Department.

Adjacent to the Art and Decoration Department is the carpenter shop and the assembling room, separated from the stage by huge sliding doors, of such size as to permit the moving in and out of completed sets. These doors are designed to prevent the noise attendant on the construction of sets from reaching the stage and interrupting the work of the stars and the directors. Across from the carpenter shop is the scene dock for the painting of scenery and backgrounds.

Below the main stage is another stage of the same size, about which are grouped the lighting, heating and ventilation plants, the restaurant and the property and paint rooms. On this stage, which is broken by the supports of the main stage set forty feet apart, will be constructed the smaller sets.

On the main studio floor there is a magnificent miniature theatre, designed for the use of executives of the corporation and for special showings of featured pictures; the seating capacity is about fifty on the orchestra floor and a balcony has been provided for any overflow or for an orchestra.

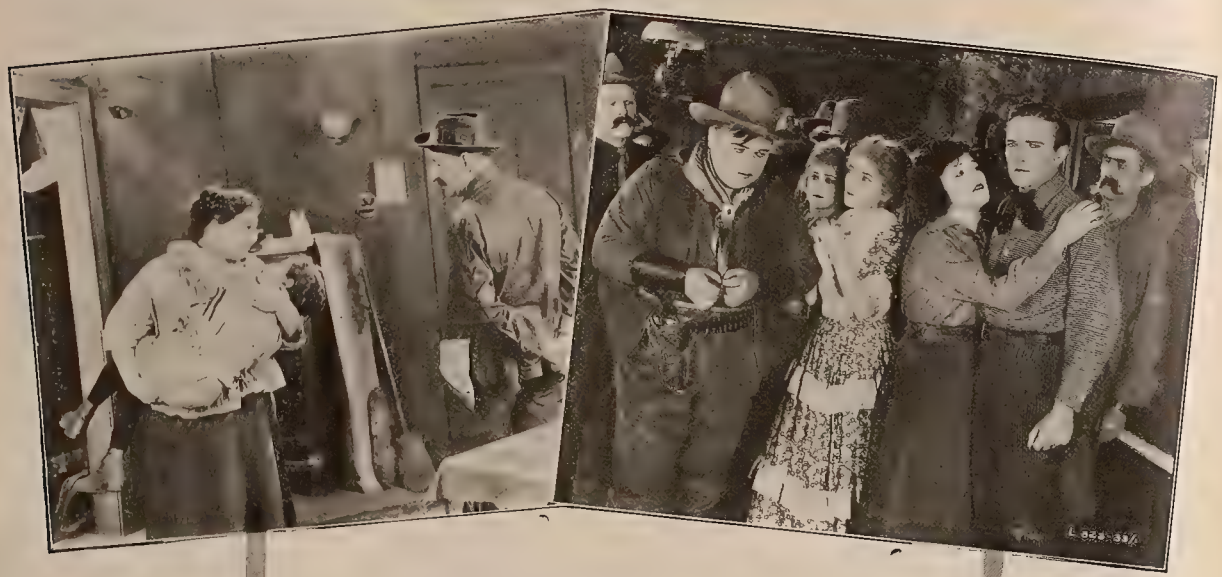
On the mezzanine floor of the building are the offices of Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky, a boardroom, private offices for directors, cutting, assembling and projection rooms. On the second floor is the scenario department and library, and elaborate suites for stars, including reception room, secretary's room, dressing room, bath room and several large closets.

In another large building, occupying the street front across from the city block which the studio proper fills, is the new laboratory, designed by and equipped under the personal supervision of Frank E. Mayer, assistant secretary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In this building will be housed the work of four laboratories, two in New York and two in New Jersey, in which the developing and printing of all Paramount Pictures made in the east, is now being done. In addition to office space and a complete research laboratory the building will contain two separate and distinct laboratories. On the first floor six developing machines of the latest type, with a capacity of 30,000 feet of finished film per hour, have been installed under the supervision of the Spoor-Thompson Company.

The London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., in which Paramount pictures with British casts will be made, has been hailed by experts as one of the most complete and best equipped studios in the world. It compares favorably with the largest American studios, sufficient room having been provided on two stages for the filming of five large productions at one time. Every modern convenience for the comfort of the large staff of workers has been installed. The office of the casting director is near the main entrance and the office of General Manager Milton E. Hoffman and his staff are also located here. Beyond these offices are the quarters of the costume department, the paint shop and the stage, 110 feet by 65 feet. Twenty-two dressing rooms, each with a private bath, a model projection room, and other features have been provided. The studio will use more electric power than the entire tram service of Islington, the district in which it is located.

The recent announcement that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in conjunction with a syndicate of British and Indian bankers, would soon begin the production of motion pictures in Bombay, India, for distribution throughout the Indian Empire and other countries of the Far East, marks one of the most important and far-reaching developments in the history of the motion picture. The name of this newest subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., and it begins its operations with a paid-in capital of $3,000,000.

Arrangements are being made for the erection of a mammoth studio and laboratory in Bombay, the principal city of the Indian Empire, where the most approved American methods of picture production will be introduced by American experts. Not only will Paramount Pictures be produced in a Paramount studio in India, but they will also be distributed through a system of Paramount exchanges modeled after the efficient exchange system in this country.



Frank Meyer, who has been in charge of the construction and real estate division of the corporation, and Tarkington Baker, have already sailed to begin work on the Indian project. Mr. Meyer will erect the studio and Mr. Baker will remain in India as the general Indian representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Five years ago the Lasky studio at Hollywood occupied the building which, recently, was too small for the properties of the present studio Today the Lasky studio has four stages cover a floor space of 47,000 square feet. The studio lots cover ten acres and the plant also includes a ranch of 1,200 acres where exteriors are taken, gigantic laboratories, mills and manufactories of all kinds.

"Paramount" Universally Known

WHAT has been done by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the way of national advertising is set forth in detail in the following statement issued from the headquarters of that organization. "Without the shadow of a doubt, the name of Paramount is shown to more people than any other in the whole realm of entertainment," reads the Famous Players statement. "For six years it has been constantly before the public, spread across the length and breadth of the United States in the most ingenious, the most carefully planned, the most widespread and the most successful campaign ever conducted in the interest of the screen.

"Ask any person who reads what Paramount is. The answer of nine persons out of every ten will be, 'The pictures that are advertised in the magazines.' Ask what the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is, or what it has done, and the answer inevitably must be: 'That is the company that has sold the motion picture to the American people.'

"When the policy of nationally advertising Paramount pictures was first inaugurated, many who professed to be wise in the film industry pronounced it a foolish waste of money. But these men lacked the vision which the sponsors of Paramount possessed. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended the first two years. Rival producers and distributors declared that the plan never would succeed because it carried no direct appeal to the exhibitors. But Famous Players-Lasky has kept on, each year increasing its appropriation and increasing its space in the national magazines, building up from week to week, month to month and year to year, an ever-multiplying clientele for the motion picture and selling, coincidentally, Paramount Pictures to that clientele.

"That this policy has been tremendously successful needs no further proof, Famous Players-Lasky officials hold, than that furnished by the fact that American exhibitors are now taking in an annual gross revenue, according to Government statistics, of approximately eight hundred million dollars and that something like eleven thousand theatres in the United States are now numbered among Famous Players-Lasky customers.

"Aside from the straight human appeal of the copy, which is prepared by some of the most expert copy writers in the country, there are two big elements which have made the Famous Players-Lasky national advertising a decisive factor in bringing about the results cited in the paragraph above. One is the fact that the campaign has been continuous from the time of its inauguration. The other is the slogan, always implied if not directly stated: 'Look for the Paramount or Artcraft trademark.'

"Keeping everlastingly at it brings success, is the motto which has guided the Famous Players-Lasky policy. Intermittent advertising never sold a constant product a fact which other film companies that have indulged intermittently in national advertising have failed to grasp. 'We'll try it,' summarizes their attitude, instead of 'We'll do it!' Then when a dull period sets in, the first victim of retrenchment is the advertising appropriation. The result is that the product is forgotten by the public and the money has been thrown away.

"On every sheet of poster advertising, on every lobby display, on every newspaper mat or cut advertising Paramount pictures, the identifying word 'Paramount' is conspicuous, thus linking every theatre playing Paramount pictures with the national advertising campaign. And most important of all, the company's far-sighted production policy, reflecting a determination to produce only pictures that will justify and fulfill its advertising promises the real Gibraltar of Famous Players-Lasky success—has made the name Paramount more than a trade mark; it has made it the hallmark of the best in motion pictures.

"The recognition of the value of the Paramount name and its enhancement through the Paramount national advertising is rapidly becoming universal among exhibitors. Concrete evidence of this recognition is constantly being brought by letter to the attention of Famous Players-Lasky executives. Within the past thirty days dozens of attesting letters have come, unsolicited, to the home office.

"An approximate circulation of 12,000,000, with readers conservatively estimated at 50,000,000 has been reached at regular intervals throughout the past year by the Famous Players-Lasky national advertising. Including the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Country Gentleman, Pictorial Review, Woman's Home Companion, Colliers, Christian Herald, American Magazine, Red Book, Motion Picture Classic, Photoplay, Picture-Play, Motion Picture Magazine, Film Fun, Photo-Play World, Photo Play Journal, Theatre, Vanity Fair, Shadowland, Boy's Magazine, St. Nicholas, Boys' Life, American Boy and Lone Scout, the list of publications is a truly imposing one. All advertising in these magazines is of full page dimensions.

"Supplementing this space, special full page advertisements of individual pictures have been run in those magazines in which the stories originally appeared, as, for instance, 'The Woman Thou Gavest Me,' by Hall Caine, in Hearst's; 'The Miracle Man,' by Frank L. Packard, in Munsey's; 'The Dark Star,' by Robert W. Chambers, in Cosmopolitan; 'The Dark Mirror,' in McCall's, etc. Moreover, at various times specialized circulation has been gained for individual productions through the utilization of so-called class publications."

National Advertising Stands Approved

ELWYN M. SIMONS, of the New Family theatre, Adrian, Mich., writes the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters as follows:

"I liked your advertisement, 'The Luxury of Being Certain,' so well that I could not help writing that these advertisements you people are printing in your national advertising are bringing me lots of money. When your first ads began to appear I saw the advantage I would hold over any future competitors if my theatre were known in Adrian as 'The Paramount Artcraft Picture House.' Consequently I started in five years ago to use that trademark in all my ads. To tell you the story of the results obtained by using 'A Paramount Artcraft Picture' would be relating my success in the motion picture business here. . . . So continue the splendid work. I think so much of your advertising and tying up my advertising with yours that from now on to the end of the year I am planning to book only your pictures as fast as they are released."

Past Year's Record Reviewed

THE year 1919-20 has been the biggest in Famous Players-Lasky history in many ways but probably the outstanding feature has been the number of big productions released and the box-office successes scored by them wherever they have been shown. In fact, so successful has this policy of "big pictures" proved that it has been decided to concentrate more and more on the production and distribution of features of this character.

The month of September furnished an indication of what exhibitors might expect as the result of the adoption of the big pictures policy. The first two releases were "The Witness for the Defense" and "The Valley of the Giants," both of them far beyond, in point of elaborateness, the average feature hitherto characterized as a special. Then came George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," immediately pronounced by many critics the finest photoplay ever made. Following successive and conspicuously successful pre-releases showings at the George M. Cohan, Rivoli and Broadway Theatres in New York, the production swept the country off its feet, setting up in a few months a gross box-office record which even the most optimistic of Famous Players-Lasky executives had scarcely hoped for.

October offered, among other big attractions, Maurice Tourneur's "The Life Line" and the Houdini feature, "The Grim Game," with its sensational airplane collision, a feature of the picture which packed houses wherever it was shown. Then in November came Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," destined to smash attendance records in hundreds of houses and to duplicate if not surpass the success of "The Miracle Man." In passing, mention should be made of "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave," which introduced Thomas H. Ince's co-stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, and which, although not a big production, in the generally accepted sense, soon took first rank as a money winner.

December brought the Ince special, "Behind the Door," starring Hobart Bosworth, declared by many to be one of the most intense as well as one of the most perfectly produced heavy dramas ever thrown on the screen. Then came George Melford's "Everywoman," with its wonderful all-star cast headed by Violet Heming, Theodore Roberts and Wanda Hawley, and offering the most remarkable advertising opportunities which exhibitors quickly seized and made the most of.

The outstanding feature of January was "The Copperhead," starring Lionel Barrymore in the elaborate screen version of Augustus Thomas's great play, for which a whole village was constructed and twice rebuilt to represent three periods of America's history, and in which hundreds of people appeared.

In February came George Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance," and Twain's immortal "Huckleberry Finn," carrying a wide human appeal, not only on account of the popularity of the story but because of Mr. Taylor's admirably sympathetic interpretation.

Following Elsie Ferguson in "His House in Order," released among others in March, April brought the Robert Louis Stevenson masterpieces, "Treasure Island" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the former a Maurice Tourneur production and the latter furnishing John Barrymore the vehicle for his greatest dramatic triumph on either stage or screen, says Famous Players. The same month saw the release of "The Toll Gate," William S. Hart's first independent production as a Famous Players-Lasky star and pronounced not only by Mr. Hart himself but by many of his admirers the best picture he ever made.

Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" and George Melford's "The Sea Wolf," released in May, have just started on their careers and if present indications are borne out, box-office records are going to take a lot of beating before these two have run their courses.

The above productions are cited by Famous Players as already proved box-office successes which have justified the "big pictures" policy. For the remaining three months of the current year Paramount exhibitors are promised

DeMille and Hart Plans Announced : :

WITH the signing of his latest five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Cecil B. DeMille and his productions become an assured part of Paramount Pictures for the forthcoming half-decade.

"Cecil B. DeMille stands today at the pinnacle of motion picture production success," says the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "Consistent quality resulting in consistent success has been the motto of his career and will continue to be the working slogan of his future activities.

"During the past two years, Mr. DeMille has given to the screen some of the most powerful photodramas ever presented to the public. Such tremendous successes as 'Old Wives for New,' 'For Better, For Worse,' 'Male and Female,' and 'Why Change Your Wife?' have been universally recognized as the greatest screen achievements of that period.

"No less notable triumphs of the past include 'Joan the Woman,' 'The Cheat,' 'The Little American,' 'The Whispering Chorus,' 'The Woman God Forgot,' 'Carmen,' 'Til I Come Back to You,' and a host of others equally well and favorably known.

"Successful as his past efforts have been, Mr. DeMille's plans for the future promise even greater achievements. At the head of the list of these is his forthcoming production 'Something to Think About,' heralded by those who have seen it in the making as the greatest cessors. It is a photoplay destined to appeal to the hearts of millions of spectators with a lesson that is both wholesome and timely.

"Notable casts are taken for granted now-adays in Cecil B. DeMille Productions, and 'Something To Think About' is a striking example of quality in this respect. Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts, Monte Blue, Claire MacDowell, Mickey Moore, Theodore Kosloff, Julia Faye and other notables are numbered in the role of the cast.

"Although it is impossible to name the future productions of the famous producer, Mr. DeMille has secured a number of stories for scenarization. The stories in question are from the pens of some of the best known American writers including Salisbury Field, author of 'Twin Beds' and 'Wedding Bells,' Hector Turnbull, Jeanie Macpherson and others. He is also negotiating for the work of a famous British author whose name cannot be divulged, but those whose works are known and appreciated by millions of English speaking readers.

"Wide variety of theme is promised in all of these productions. Mr. DeMille has definitely abandoned the 'series' plan of which 'Old Wives For New,' 'Don't Change Your Husband,' and 'Why Change Your Wife?' form an illustration. In the future he plans to alternate, using stories of striking contrast in succession.

"No announcement regarding probable casts is possible at this time beyond the fact that a new actress is shortly to make her formal [illegible] under the Cecil B. DeMille

"Approximately four special productions a year will be made, following the established Cecil B. DeMille schedule in this respect. This number is variable, it is understood, but the director-general does not expect to exceed that number."

The production program of William Hart, another prominent producing factor of the Paramount-Artcraft group, is also discussed in detail by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "The first of William S. Hart's personal productions for Paramount release, 'The Toll Gate,' has already established in the minds of the public and the exhibitors the high quality of the pictures the Western star and producer has planned for his output," says the Famous Players-Lasky statement. "'Sand,' the second of the nine great photodramas of Western life which Mr. Hart will make for Famous Players-Lasky, is a worthy successor to 'The Toll Gate' and the third of the list, 'The Cradle of Courage,' though differing in theme considerably, is declared to be one of the most powerful screen plays ever enacted.

"A fourth picture is completed but not yet titled, and the fifth is now in production. This leaves four more to be made according to present plans.

"Around his production activities, William S. Hart has built up an organization of exceptional strength. The roster is as follows: E. E. Allen, manager; Lambert Hillyer, director, who also collaborates with Mr. Hart in many of the stories filmed; Joe August, A. S. C., head cameraman; Dwight Warren, second cameraman; Cal. Hoffner, technical director; LeRoy Stone, film editor; Bennett Musson, scr[illegible] editor; Paul Conlon, press repres[illegible] tative and William Curran, a[illegible] tant director.

"Mr. Hart chooses his casts fr[illegible] among the pick of the sc[illegible] players, and has been singularly [illegible] cessful in selecting types that w[illegible] perfectly fitted to the roles. A n[illegible] leading woman, Eva Novak, sis[illegible] of Jane Novak, appears in [illegible] fourth and fifth productions ma[illegible] under the new schedule.

"In 'The Toll Gate,' Anna Nilsson, the lovely Scandinav[illegible] actress, appeared to advantage [illegible] leading woman; in 'Sand,' M[illegible] Thruman, beautiful and talent[illegible] has the feminine lead, and A[illegible] Little, always a favorite, is seen [illegible] the same capacity in 'The Cra[illegible] of Courage.'

"It is interesting to note that se[illegible] eral of the coming pictures a[illegible] from original stories by William [illegible] Hart and Lambert Hillyer, who co[illegible] laborated on 'The Toll Gate' successfully."

Mr. Hart in speaking of his a[illegible] sociation with Famous Playe[illegible] said:

"There is little to add to what[illegible] have frequently said in regard t[illegible] my associations with Famous Play[illegible] ers-Lasky Corporation and my ow[illegible] work in the production of photo[illegible] dramas. The best evidence of m[illegible] feelings toward the organization i[illegible] that when I signed the contract t[illegible] make nine special pictures for Para[illegible] mount I was beseiged with offer[illegible] and had money alone been the ob[illegible] ject of my endeavors. I migh[illegible] have made even more profitable con[illegible] uections."

F. P.-Lasky Exploitation Forces

IF one were to pick out the most distinctive features of the year 1919-20 in motion pictures it undoubtedly would be the development of exploitation, or, to speal definitively, the application of expert showmanship to the exhibitors of pictures. In this development Famous Players-Lasky has been in the advance guard, dominating in the size of its exploitation organization and in the quality of its personnel, in its methods of operation, in the amount of its services to exhibitors and in the results which it has obtained.

The Famous Players-Lasky field exploitation force was organized last Summer by Claud Saunders, exploitation manager, who, as theatrical manager and expert showman with many years of experience is known in practically every city and town of 5,000 or more in the United States. At the outset Mr. Saunders placed twelve men in the field and so pronounced was the success of these men that the number was increased after the beginning of the present calendar year so that now there is an exploitation man working out of every Famous Players-Lasky branch exchange.

Stated in a few words, the duty of the exploitation field force is to enable exhibitors, through the employment of every conceivable legitimate means, to increase their receipts from the showing of Paramount pictures. These men, trained in showmanship, bend their energies especially to the utilization of natural resources of publicity and exploitation which exhibitors for the most part have neglected in the past. Their line of duty embraces the task of increasing the interest of local newspapers in motion pictures in general and especially in Paramount pictures; interesting other lines of business in seasonable and mutually advantageous tieups; and not only giving the exhibitors the benefit of his ideas and experiences but assisting him in carrying out and applying his own, all with the purpose of enabling him to make money and to dominate his theatre's territory.

In choosing the men for these important posts great care has been exercised, practically every man has been conspicuously successful in some branch or other of the so-called show business, it is claimed by Famous Players. For instance, John P. Goring has been a theatrical producer, has managed road and stock companies and for the past six years has been engaged solely in the picture business as manager and as special exploiter of big productions.

Leslie F. Whelan for six years was engaged in special publicity work for high-class Lyceum attractions and for several noted operatic and concert stars, including John McCormack. Lately he has specialized in the exploitation of super-special pictures in New York and adjacent territory.

H. Wayne Pierson was for a long time advance agent for Cohan & Harris and other prominent theatrical firms and then exploited D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance."

Charles L. Winston, experienced in the editorial room of the Boston Post, had also managed Keith theatres in Boston and other New England cities and had done a large amount of special picture exploitation.

Al. G. Birch, with an early experience in the management of carnival and road shows, came to Famous Players-Lasky from the editorship of the Denver Post a rare combination of qualifications for his present position.

These are but few, cited to illustrate the calibre of the men who constitute the field force. The entire personnel, with the present assignments, follows: A. G. Burch, Denver; E. O. Child, Portland, Ore.; Frank A. Cassidy, Chicago; Norman H. Dixon, Des Moines; Oscar A. Doob, Cincinnatti; John P. Goring, Kansas City; John D. Howard, San Francisco; Benjamin Laskin, Charlotte; Walter Lindlar, Minneapolis; Elmer E. Rutter, Pittsburg; John C. McConville, Buffalo; Albert A. Nathan, New York; Paul L. Morgan, New Haven; Hal Oliver, Omaha; Eli M. Orowitz, Detroit; N. K. Parkhurst, Salt Lake City; Norman Peel, Oklahoma City; Herman Phillips, Washington; H. Wayne Pierson, Atlanta; Monte Rice, Los Angeles; Charles Raymont, St. Louis; Daniel Roche, Chicago; Wayland H. Taylor, Seattle; Fred Walters, Cleveland; Leslie F Whelan, Dallas, Spencer G. Sladdin, Boston, and Charles L. Winston, Philadelphia.

The accomplishments of these men have been a matter of weekly record in the trade press and the results of their work are being reflected daily in letters to the Home Office from enthusiastic and grateful exhibitors, "and for the exploitation man who knows his business as does Mr. Winston," wrote H. E. Ellison of the Rialto and Princess Theatres, Denver. "This big showing due entirely to exploitation methods and assistance of Boston Office," wired Roger Upton, of the Majestic, Fitchburg, Mass. "I cannot tell how much I appreciate the efficient co-operation received from your man Taylor," wrote Fred B Walton, of the American, Bellingham, Wash. "Necessary to close ticket box every performance, largely due to exploitation," was the message received from H. F Skinner, of the Alhambra, Ogden, Utah, and pages could be taken up with similar messages from exhibitors in cities and smaller towns of all sizes in all sections of the country, states Famous Players.

Exploitation has come to stay, and as in the present year, it will continue to be one of the biggest factors in keeping Paramount exhibitors in the van in the year 1920-21, declare officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Three Exchanges Opened During Year

WITHIN the past year the Famous Players-Lasky Department of Distribution, under the direction of Al Lichtman, its general manager, has opened three new branch exchanges, the better to handle the rapidly increasing volume of business and give even better and quicker service to Paramount exhibitors than in the past. These new exchanges are located at Charlotte, N. C., Oklahoma City, Okla., and Albany, N. Y. Another is in immediate contemplation at Indianapolis, Ind., and it will be opened for business just as soon as a suitable location in that city can be obtained. This will make a total of thirty branch offices in the United States, splendidly manned and thoroughly equipped for the rapid and efficient distribution of Paramount Pictures and the accessories which are the usual stock in trade of the film exchange.

In addition to these new offices in this country, there was organized during the year in Canada a new Canadian distributing organization known as Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd., with George W. Weeks as general manager and W. A. Bach as assistant general manager. The headquarters of this organization, which is directly connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Distribution Department and is under the jurisdiction of Mr. Lichtman, are in Toronto, with branch offices in Montreal, St. John, N. B.; Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

The territory served by the new Oklahoma City Exchange embraces all of the State of Oklahoma except ten counties in the Southeastern part; the Northwestern portion of the State of Arkansas and the Panhandle of Texas. A large number of thriving cities are included in this territory which has a total white population of nearly two millions.

The Charlotte territory contains a white population of 1,750,000 and embraces all the State of North Carolina, a big share of South Carolina and the Northeastern section of Tennessee. Both of these exchanges are in the Southern District, the executive offices of which are in Atlanta. Leslie Wilkes is manager of the Oklahoma City branch and David Prince is in charge at Charlotte.

The Albany office, just recently opened, is located at 33 Orange street in the Capitol City and serves a large section of Eastern, Central and Northern New York which was formerly taken care of by the New York and Buffalo Exchanges. The manager is Joseph Seidleman, who was connected for a long time with the New York Exchange.

Details as to the new Indianapolis Exchange will be forthcoming as soon as the plans are completed.

The big organization over which General Manager Lichtman presides is said to be as near perfect in its operation as human ingenuity can make it. Under Sales Manager Sidney R. Kent, the sales force has increased the volume of business tremendously. The idea that the duty of the personnel is not only to produce revenue for the organization but also to render real service to exhibitors has been kept constantly in the foreground. To this end the office of general service manager has been created and Frank V. Chamberlin has been appointed to the position. Mr. Chamberlin has been connected with the department for several years in various positions of responsibility, and with him in charge Paramount exhibitors have already learned that Paramount service now has a larger meaning than ever before.

Gloria Swanson Will Remain with Lasky

Speculation as to the future screen activities of Gloria Swanson was settled yesterday when Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announced that Miss Swanson has renewed her contract with Famous Players for a period of five years.

Miss Swanson, whose work in the Cecil B. DeMille productions, "Male and Female," "Why Change Your Wife?" and "Something to Think About," stamped her as one of the foremost artists of the screen, will be featured only in big productions of the same high standard as those in which she recently has been appearing. These pictures will be from stories written by famous authors and dramatists, and will be produced on the same elaborate scale that has marked her recent screen vehicles, such as "Why Change Your Wife?" and "Male and Female."

An indication of the nature of the pictures which will be Miss Swanson's vehicles is given in a statement by Mr. Lasky that Cecil B DeMille, who discovered Miss Swanson and was the first to give her opportunity for the development of her talents, will select her stories and will personallly supervise all her productions. Mr. DeMille will see to it that the public's desire to see Miss Swanson in wonderful gowns and in lavish settings will be entirely satisfied in all fture Gloria Swanson productions. By her beauty and her striking gowns Miss Swanson has come to be known as one of the best-dressed women on the screen, and in future pictures she will maintain this reputation, it is stated.

"Expect Conditions Will Improve"

THE gradual improvement in exchange rates and indications that the nations of the world are succeeding in bringing about a satisfactory readjustment of business conditions on a peace basis, give promise of a record-breaking increase in the film export business during the coming year, in the opinion of E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department of the Famous-Lasky Corporation. The greatly increased demand for Paramount Pictures is reflected in inquiries received at the home office from all parts of the world and in reports received from the various distributing offices and agencies throughout the world.

"Despite, the unsettled business conditions existing in the world, the foreign business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has shown a tremendous increase in the last year, and we expect a continuation of this record-breaking growth in the coming year," said Mr. Shauer in discussing export conditions. "The international appeal of Paramount-Artcraft is indicated by the fact that it is becoming necessary to increase and improve our distributing facilities in all sections of the world in order to meet this demand. Much time and attention will be given to the improving of the distributing organizations. The coming year undoubtedly will witness an important addition to the chain of foreign offices and allied organizations now supplying the world-wide demand for Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

Offices and distributing arrangements for Paramount-Artcraft are maintained in thirty foreign countries. This does not include the numerous agents who are distributing these productions in other portions of the world. The coming year, it is expected, will witness an important growth in the chain of distributing offices now encircling the globe.

The foreign offices and allied organizations for the distribution of Paramount Artcraft pictures are as follows:

Famous Players Lasky Service, Ltd., distributors for Great Britain and Ireland, with offices in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Cardiff, Leeds, Newcastle and Dublin. The Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributors for Canada, with offices at Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver; Feature Films, Ltd., distributors for Australasia, with offices at Sydney, Adelaide, Perth, Melbourne, Brisbane, in Australia, Wellington in New Zealand and Hobart in Tasmania; Societe des Etablissments Gaumont, distributors for France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, French Colonies, and protectorates Egypt, and Asia Minor, with offices at Paris, Lyons, Toulouse, Bordeaux, Marseilles, Lille, Nantes, Nancy, Strassbourg, all in France; Brussels, Belgium; Geneva, Switzerland, and Cairo, Egypt. Others are Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, distributors for Denmark, Sweden, Norway and Finland, with offices at Copenhagen, Denmark, Stockholm, Sweden and Christiania, Norway; Sociedad General Cinematografica, distributors for Spain, Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay, with offices at Barcelona, Spain; Buenos Aires, Argentina and Montevideo, Uruguay; Peliculas D'Luxo America DoSul, distributors for Brazil, with offices at Rio de Janeriro and Sao Paulo; South Pacific Paramount Company, distributors for Chile, Bolivia and Peru with offices at Santiago, Chile; Caribbean Film Company, distributors for Cuba, West Indies, Venezuela, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Guatemala, San Salvador and Honduras, with offices at Havana, Cuba, and San Juan, Porto Rico; Continental Film Company, distributors for Mexico, with offices at Mexico City; Nippon Katsudo-Shasin Kaisha, distributors for Japan, with offices at Tokyo.

Foreign Production on Big Scale

AN event of international importance and one which will add greatly to the prestige of Paramount Pictures abroad is the completion of the large studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., in London. Production work already has been begun under the direction of Milton E. Hoffman, general manager of the Islington studio, and the coming year will witness the completion of a number of notable Paramount Pictures in this new Paramount studio.

This is the first American studio to be built abroad, and is the forerunner of other similar developments of vast significance to the world film industry. Announcement has already been made of the plan to build a large studio in Bombay, India, for the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Co. Ltd., and other announcements of a similar nature may be expected during the coming year. On the occasion of his recent visit to Europe, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, completed arrangements for the formation of producing companies in France, Belgium, Spain, Scandinavia, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland. These various corporations with an aggregate capital of approximately $15,000,000 will begin the erection of studios and the work of producing pictures as soon as conditions are found to be ripe for the inauguration of these ventures. This time, it is believed, will soon come, as Europe is giving its serious attention to the work of readusting itself to peace conditions.

Modern American methods of filming productions will be utilized in these foreign producing units, which will some day completely encircle the earth, according to present expectations. British artists and technical experts will be employed largely in the London studio, the director, artists, cameramen and others being given a period of training under American experts. The works of the foremost British writers will be produced in the locations actually selected by the author or described in his story, the studio being the hub of producing activities which will include all of Great Britain and possible frequent excursions of France and other nearby countries for exterior scenes. The great wealth of scenic and historical material in the British Isles offer the widest possible opportunity for the filming of pictures on the scale which will be demanded of future Paramount pictures.

The first production to be filmed in London will be "The Great Day," the famous Drury Lane success which attracted international attention in stage circles some years ago. A cast of famous British players will be used in filming this production, which will be staged on a lavish scale. The release of this picture in America some time during the coming year will do much to bring about a better relationship between the film industries of Great Britain and America, in the opinion of officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The fact that Hugh Ford is to direct this first American-British production is evidence of the care and attention which will be given to the making of this ambitious Paramount picture. As Mr. Ford had much experience as a director and producer on the English stage, before coming to America some years ago, his selection for this task is held to be ideal.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has sailed to London to inspect the new studio and to assist in launching production work. It is expected that Mr. Lasky will map out the year's program for the new studio which is to be under his charge, and that important announcements concerning future plans will be made shortly after his return to America.

During the last few months arrangements have been completed for the filming of the works of a number of notable British writers, and additions are expected to this list on Mr. Lasky's return to the United States. All of Sir James M. Barrie's successes, including "Peter Pan," "What Every Woman Knows" and "The Little Minister" have been obtained for filming as Paramount Artcraft pictures. Henry Arthur Jones' new play also is to be filmed by Paramount, it is announced.

The British studio in which some of these stories will be filmed is one of the most modern and complete producing plants in the entire world and compares most favorably with the Lasky studio at Hollywood and the mammoth new Famous Players studio now nearing completion in Long Island City.

The building formerly occupied by a large power company has been converted into a splendidly equipped studio capable of providing accommodations for five large productions at one time on its two big stages. Many months have been required to finish the studio because of the difficulty in getting labor and materials. When contractors asked to submit bids for the transformation of the power plant into a studio refused to accept a contract calling for the completion of the studio within a specified time, the work of altering the structure was undertaken by the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

While it is too early to announce definite plans for the immense new studio to be erected at India, it is known that it is to be a producing plant which will compare most favorably with the London and American studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of the company, who has had charge of the arrangements for the building of the New York City studio, has sailed for Bombay to begin the work of organizing this new producing unit, which will be under the general supervision of Jesse L. Lasky. The studio and laboratory will be in charge of American experts, Parkington Baker, well known in American film circles, will act as general Indian representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and will be in direct charge of the producing and distributing organizations which will be provided in India. The pictures produced in the Bombay studio will be released throughout the entire world, and will be of the character having an international appeal. It is expected that the first picture made in India will be ready for release by Christmas.

Seven Specials Ready Now

IN a series of statements just issued, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation emphasizes its seven special productions, now completed and available for distribution in the near future. The statements from the Famous Players Home Office are submitted in the following:

"A vivid, virile story with a theme standing out in striking contrast to 'Why Change Your Wife?' 'Male and Female,' 'Don't Change Your Husband' and any of his previous successes marks 'Something to Think About,' the first Cecil B. DeMille super-special for Paramount during the coming season, to be released in October.

"For the first time in recent years the most distinctly individual director of motion pictures has left out the society background for a plot and turned his attention to a human, gripping story of the country. The delicate touches of married life which formed the groundwork of the DeMille domestic dramas and the lavish sumptuousness which made 'Male and Female' the most talked of picture of the past few years, have both been supplanted by a new facet of the DeMille genius.

Exhibitors who have found the advance notices of previous DeMille pictures more than upheld by record breaking attendances have another opportunity, it is said, to realize upon the unusual treatment of 'Something to Think About.' The idea of right thinking furnishes the basic idea for the story. In the early scenes the quaint rural characteristics of Luke Anderson, dogmatic blacksmith, and his daughter, Ruth, have a rollicking humor that is veneered with DeMille's expert hand. When the daughter, already engaged to a rich young man of the neighborhood, elopes with Jim Dirk, a handsome newcomer, the clouds of tragedy gather quackly. Luke Anderson in a moment of frantic rage at what he regards as his daughter's unforgiveable disobedience to his will, is responsible for the destroyal of his sight as he works at the anvil. Then a series of swift climaxes come in rapid succession until the mental will power brings with it the restoration of his daughter and her own happiness through the instrumentality of her little boy."

"'Humoresque,' the Cosmopolitan Production directed by Frank Borzage, and featuring Alma Rubens in an all star cast, will be released in September as a Paramount Picture, and is expected to be the film sensation of the year. Acknowledged by critics as the logical successor to George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man,' it is a story of sublime mother love, perhaps the most appealing motion picture seen on the screen in a long time, it is a story of rare emotions, of superb characterizations, of a great love and a great sacrifice. It has more pathos than 'The Music Master' and more humor than 'Potash and Perlmutter.'

"'Humoresque' is the creation of Fannie Hurst, the famous writer. Dealing with the inspired love of a wonderful mother who by sheer will power pushes her son onto the pinnacle of musical fame and makes him a great violinist, it is a motion picture that tugs at the heart strings. And yet there are plenty of humorous touches. With rare artistry and finesse, Director Borzage has succeeded in blending tears with laughter, tragedy with joy, in such excellent proportions that the result is magnificent. Unrivalled for its humanness, its humor, its pathos, and its sublimity, 'Humoresque' stands out as the supreme screen achievement of the season.

"Frances Marion made the screen adaptation. Alma Rubens, a beautiful and well known player, is featured. The others in the all-star cast are Vero Gordon, who plays the difficult role of the mother, Dore Davidson, who plays the role of the father, Gaston Glass, who plays the role of the son, Miriam Battista, Bobby Connolly, Louis Stearns and Sidney Carlyle."

"Put them all together—a startling story adapted from Sir Gilbert Parker's most famous novel, a meritorious cast headed by Elliott Dexter and Mabel Juliene Scott, surpassing outdoor scenery in the heart of the great west and the direction of George Melford—and the answer is the Paramount special production, 'Behold My Wife,' to be released early in November.

"The idea of taking a delicate, unsophisticated Indian girl and thrusting her upon the staid conventions of an English home and family which give the motive to 'Behold My Wife!' offers something unique in motion picture plots. It is the spirit of revenge which prompts Frank Armour to marry Lali and send her, unaccompanied and friendless to his English estate. Through the dissolving scenes the young savage learns to assimilate unknown customs and slowly transforms herself into a model for her society-worshipping 'in-laws.' The pith of the love story finds outlet in the return of her husband and his subsequent awakening,—a story handled with the delicacy of a master-director so as to leave no feeling of revulsion over the trick to which the wife has been subjected but merely admiration for her consumate skill in converting her disadvantages into a triumph.

"The story has been adapted to the screen from Sir Gilbert Parker's 'The Translation of a Savage,' easily the most fascinating story from the pen of this English novelist. This author's works have been found to be excellent screen material. Many have already been made into films, two of them' The World for Sale,' and 'Judgment House' have previously been produced by Paramount. 'Behold My Wife!' however, offers more opportunity for colorful scenery and histrionic art than either of the others."

"Settings and effects of far greater beauty than he has ever achieved in any of his former productions mark the work of George Fitzmaurice in 'The Right to Love,' the second special production which he has directed for Paramount, which will be released in September, adapted by Ouida Bergere from Claude Farrerre's famous French novel, 'L'Homme Qui Assassina,' its scenes are laid in Turkey and along the moonlit Bosphorus, giving Mr. Fitzmaurice every opportunity to indulge his talent for bringing to the screen the exotic atmosphere of the East.

"The story of 'The Right to Love' is one of intense dramatic quality- a strong, virile conflict of human emotions. As a play, dramatized from the novel by Pierre Frondaie, who also adapted Pierre Louy's 'Aphrodite' for the stage, it was a dramatic success in Paris. Later, translated into English by Gilbert Cannan and Francis Keyser as 'The Right to Kill,' it was produced in London, at His Majesty's Theatre, with great success. The scenario for the Paramount version of the story was written by Ouida Bergere, author of 'On With the Dance,' and many other scenarios which Mr. Fitzmaurice has skillfully directed.

"Mae Murray and David Powell, who scored so heavily in Mr. Fitzmaurice's first Paramount special, 'On With the Dance,' again play leading roles under his direction. In the role of a young wife and mother, mistreated by her husband and living solely for her little son, Miss Murray has a part which develops the great emotional promise she showed in 'On With the Dance.'"

"Roscoe 'Fatty' Arbuckle, long a favorite in short comedies, makes his bow as the star in long features as 'Slim Hoover,' the fat sheriff, in George Melford's special production of 'The Round-Up' for Paramount. In it he has a role which offers him every opportunity for the expression of his individual type of humor, combined with a more serious element which presents him as an actor of talents hitherto unsuspected by his admirers. Indeed, as played by Maclyn Arbuckle in the original stage version, the part was classed as a serio-comic, for although there was an abundance of comedy in the delineation, it was by no means predominant, making the character a sturdy, wholesouled, human sort of an individual.

"'The Round-Up,' written by Edmund Day, was first produced in New York at the Broadway Theatre by Klaw and Erlanger in August, 1907. Its success was instantaneous and after a long season in the metropolis it was sent on the road where it continued in popularity for a number of years. From the standpoint of settings, number of players and scenic and dramatic effects, it was one of the biggest productions which ever toured the country. A highly dramatic story of Indians and rough and ready plainsmen, the big scene of the stage play was a battle in a narrow Arizona Canyon. In the screen version, this scene, staged in natural surroundings with hundreds of Indians, frontiersmen and soldiers, gains tremendously in its melodramatic appeal."

"'The Cradle of Courage,' William S. Hart's third picture under his new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, offers him one of the most varied roles of his career as well as one of the most unusual parts he has ever played. At different times in the action he appears as a soldier, a policeman, and, later, as the peaceful citizen of a seaport town.

Throughout the picture there are many incidents filled with stirring action. The scenes in the trenches, on board the army transport, the fight in the backroom of the waterfront saloon, and the safe robbery, all lend themselves to the sort of acting in which Hart does his best work.

"Ann Little is the leading woman in the new picture, playing a part which is as varied as the star's and which, at one point, requires her to appear disguised as a boy.

"'The Cradle of Courage' was written by Fred Bradbury and adapted for the screen by Lambert Hillyer, who also is the director."

"All the languorous charm of the South Seas, the beauty and calm of Grecian skies, and the glitter and intrigue of London's fast set go toward making 'Idols of Clay,' the new George Fitzmaurice special, a picture of unusual pictorial and romantic interest. Coming as it does on the heels of such notable triumphs as 'On With the Dance' and 'The Right to Love,' Mr. Fitzmaurice's latest contribution to the silversheet, which will be released in November is sure to elicit comment as a worthy successor, both dramatically and artistically.

"Ouida Bergere, who wrote the scripts for both 'On With the Dance' and 'The Right to Love,' mapped out the continuity from an original story of her own—the first original story she has done for Famous Players-Lasky on her new contract. It affords excellent opportunities for Mr. Fitzmaurice to display the genius for designing the exquisite pictorial effects which have won for him a place in the front rank of present day directors.

"The story concerns the love of Faith Merril, a naive little daughter of a South Sea Island pearl smuggler, for Dion Holmes, a young English sculptor, who has sought the quiet of the South Seas in order to forget a certain unpleasant shattering of what illusions he has entertained about women in general and one woman in particular.

"Mr. Fitzmaurice has surrounded Mae Murray and David Powell, who play the roles of Faith and Dion, with an exceptionally fine cast."

"more of the same," among others being the Thomas H. Ince special, "Below the Surface," featuring Hobart Bosworth, and William S. Hart in his second independent production, "Sand?" scheduled for June; the big Commopolitan production, "The World and His Wife," in July; and "The Fighting Chance," William DeMille's "The Prince Chap," with Thomas Meighan, and Maurice Tourneur's "The Devil to Pay," in August.

There is the record of another Paramount promise fulfilled, and in the light of the completeness of its fulfillment the announcement that the policy is to be continued and even amplified takes on an added significance for Paramount exhibitors.

Forthcoming Paramount Features : : :

FROM the number of its forthcoming releases Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has singled out the following for special mention in a series of statements just issued from the headquarters of that organization. The pertinent paragraphs of these statements, having to do with the various productions that Famous Players contemplates releasing at future dates, are submitted below in summarized form.

"It was particularly fitting," says Famous Players-Lasky, "that when Dorothy Dalton signed a long-term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation she should make her debut as a Paramount star in a story of such force and repute as Sir J. M. Barrie's 'Half an Hour,' which will be released in September. This play, one of the most successful of the esteemed author, was first produced on the American stage in 1913 at the Lyceum Theater with Grace George in the role of Lady Lillian, which is enacted on the screen by Miss Dalton. For a long time afterward Blanche Bates played the role in vaudeville."

"Tried and proven in two stage forms, first as a straight farce and then as a muscal comedy, Fred Jackson's play 'A Full House,' which will be released in October as a Paramount Picture with Bryant Washburin in the leading role, offers this player unusual opportunities for the type of fun making in which he has already been so successful in 'Why Smith Left Home' and 'Too Much Johnson,' The story, a tangle of humorous situations in which incriminating love letters, stolen jewels, an exchange of suitcases, and a persistent police force, are ingeniously interwoven, has shown itself to be a producer of sure-fire laughs."

"Never since her first appearance as a Paramount star has Dorothy Gish had so resplendent a role as she has in 'Little Miss Rebellion,' released in September, as her first Paramount picture of the coming season. In 'Little Miss Rebellion' Miss Gish will appear in the royal purple of the little kingdom of Bulgravia, and if you think that Dorothy is not born to the blue blood, just glance at her full name—Her Sublime Grace the Grand Duchess Maria Louise, Countess of Bulgravia, Hereditary Countess of Gorodny, Countess of Warsaw, Honorary Colonel of the Life Guard."

"Three different periods—1860, 1890 and the present decade are shown in 'Lady Rose's Daughter,' a picturization of Mrs. Humphry Ward's famous novel, which released in September, will be the first Paramount Picture of the new season starring Elsie Ferguson. Miss Ferguson, stunning in gowns of the reigning fashion of each period, provides another treat for the hundreds of thousands of film patrons who have learned to regard her screen styles as models to be copied later on Fifth Avenue. Supporting Miss Ferguson is a splendid cast, including David Powell, Holmes E. Herbert, Ida Waterman, Warren Cook, and Frank Losee."

"The perplexing complications of a debonair young man of town who suddenly finds that he has fallen heir to a young ladies' seminary furnish the laughs for 'The Charm School,' Wallace Reid's Paramount starring vehicle released in November. A breezy comedy plot with acting to match bring Wallace Reid to the screen again in the kind of picture he has made his own, the kind that audiences all over the country clamor for. Since his initial success in 'Believe Me, Xantippe,' the dashing young star has not had a play which abounds in more comedy than this."

"Real romance in the form of a bulky motor truck lumbering along the highway at a 20 per crawl disproves the "nothing new beneath the sun" theory and provides a genuine thrill in 'What's Your Hurry?" the picture starring Wallace Reid, which will be released in September. In the role of Dusty Rhoades, daredevil speeder to whom a motor truck means nothing, Wallace Reid finds a part which for thrills and exciting drama is worthy of his work in "Excuse my Dust," "Double Speed" and "The Roarin' Road," all Paramount Pictures which are still fresh in exhibitors' memories for their box-office success."

"The mysticism and romance of South Africa, its diamond mines and the witchcraft of its natives form the background for 'Rozanne Ozanne,' which, set for November release one of the most powerful photoplays which Ethel Clayton has ever appeared. 'Rozanne Ozanne' was written by Cynthia Stockley, famous for her stories of South Africa and the tropics. In 'Rozanne Ozanne,' which first appeared as a two part story in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, Miss Stockley has surrounded a charming love story with a veil of mystery woven from the many Kaffir legends which she gathered during the years of her residence in Rhodesia and the diamond country.'

"Everybody in town was at the station waiting for the train that would take them all on their annual excursion to Crystal Springs. That is, everybody was there but Johnny. Johnny's best girl was there, of course, all dressed up. But the train came in and not Johnny. Then, a minute before the train pulled out, Johnny came sprinting up to the station and explained that he couldn't take Jenny after all; he was broke. And that's how Bryant Washburn loses his girl at the very start of his November Paramount picture, 'Burglar Proof.'"

"'The Restless Sex,' Marion Davies' newest starring feature for Cosmopolitan Productions, which will be released in October as a Paramount Picture, is announced as a spectacular drama of modern society life, a massive production with magnificent settings and scenic investitures, and a cast of more than six hundred players.

"The Restless Sex" is Robert W. Chambers' greatest novel. First appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, it has had a tremendous circulation."

"An actual explosion by which half a building is torn away, supposedly the devastating result of a Confederate shell marks the culmination of a series of stirring climaxes and paves the way for the final scene in 'Held By The Enemy,' the Paramount production of William Gillette's greatest play, which will be released in October with an all star cast. For stirring scenes and excitement the history of the motion picture industry has seldom offered stronger situations than in this picture. In the memory of men and women of North and South alike the story of the great struggle will never grow dim, and 'Held by the Enemy' brings to the screen the pleasantest memories of those years, in a strongly dramatic plot."

"Havana and the gay throngs which visit it during the racing and carnival season form the background for so many of the scenes in 'Civilian Clothes,' the Paramount screen version of Thompson Buchman's play which was one of the season's successes at the Morosco Theatre, New York, and which enjoyed runs in the larger cities of the country as well as a successful road tour. With Thomas Meighan as the star, Hugh Ford as the director, and Clara Beranger as the scenarist, the photoplay offers a combination of talent that is not often found in one picture."

"In the Frisky Mrs. Johnson,' her next Paramount picture, adapted for the screen from the play by Clyde Fitch, Billie Burke finds a role with a far greater emotional appeal than any part she has yet played on the screen. The superficially frivolous Nell Johnson is at heart a very real woman, willing to make the greatest sacrifice—the loss of her good name—to save from disgrace the sister whom she loves devotedly. Edward Dillon, who directed Irene Castle in 'The Amateur Wife,' directs Miss Burke in 'The Frisky Mrs. Johnson.'

"Actual events in which practically the whole world is interested and atmospheric locale that never fails to charm are two important factors in the Paramount production of 'A Winter City Favorite,' written by Charles Belmont Davis, brother of the late Richard Harding Davis, which will be released in November with Dorothy Dalton as the fascinating heroine. This is the third production the star has made since she signed her new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It is also the third production in which Harley Knoles has been her director."

"Ethel Clayton appears in the novel role of an Apache dancer in her Paramount picture, 'A City Sparrow,' released in October. This marks a distinct departure for Miss Clayton, who has been appearing recently in stories of married life, notably, 'The Thirteenth Commandment' and 'Young Mrs. Winthrop.' Although Miss Clayton is unmarried in this picture, the theme of marriage plays a vital part in the production.

"Sam Wood's direction is at its best in this story by Kate Jordon, Clara G. Kennedy did the scenario. Walter Hiers and Lillian Leighton bring a vein of comedy which is in effective contrast to the serious theme."

"Notable among the November Paramount releases wil be 'Deep Waters,' Maurice Tourneur's production of F. Hopkinson Smith's best seller, 'Caleb West, Master Diver.' Jack Gilbert has written the scenario and a typical all-star Tourneur cast will be seen. The locale of the story is the New England Coast and the story deals with the building of a lighthouse. One climactic scene follows another in rapid succession, threatening disaster at any moment. There is a shipwreck at night, filmed as only Tourneur can produce scenes of this character and there are also many under-water scenes produced by an entirely new device which promises something distinctly novel."

"Charles Ray in 'An Old Fashioned Young Man'—story and scenario by Agnes Christine Johnston—will be one of the October releases. In this Thomas H. Ince production Ray plays the role of a youth who has the old-fashioned ideas of love, marriage and home. This picture is replete with the wholesome, genuine small-town atmosphere for which Ray pictures have come to be so distinctive and popular. Jerome Storm directed and the production has the unique distinction of having been filmed without an iris, or "fade-out," and consequently has aroused considerable advance interest in film circles. Ethel Shannon is Ray's leading woman."

"A typical Ray picture, aptly describes Charles Ray's new picture, "The Village Sleuth," from the Ince studios. This September release is from the pen of Agnes Christine Johnston.

"Douglas MacLean, Thomas H. Ince's popular young star, will be seen for the first time in a Julien Josephson story when "The Jailbird" is released in October. Under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, who handled the production of 'What's Your Husband Doing?' Mr. MacLean in this picture is certain to find a still more secure place in the hearts of motion picture fans."

Many Famous Stories on Hand

THE producing department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has no lack of screen stories upon which to draw for their future productions, according to an announcement of the company. Among the works now on hand are all the works of Sir James Barrie, including "Peter Pan," "The Little Minister," and "What Every Woman Knows"; "The Secret Orchard," Channing Pollack's dramatization of the novel by Agnes and Edgerton Castle; "Brewster's Millions," by George Barr McCutcheon; "The Conquest of Canaan," one of Booth Tarkington's earlier stories; "Free Air," by Sinclair Lewis; "The Husbands of Edith," by McCutcheon; "Peter Ibbetson," Du Maurier's famous novel; and "Camille," Dumas' perennial favorite. Other stories by Cosmo Hamilton, Ben Ames Williams, John A. Moroso, Max Marcin, Mark Swan and Owen Johnson are also available.

STATE RIGHTS—EXPORT

Foreign Rights of Cohn Comedies Are Sold

A contract has been signed by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and Jack and Harry Cohn, producers, conveying to the former organization the world distributing rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, to the "Hall Room Boys" Comedies.

Plans formulated by Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the "Hall Room Boys" Comedies, will provide for the production of twenty-six releases per year, retroactive January 1st, 1920. Under the terms of the contract, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation acquires the foreign distributing rights to these comedies for a period of three years, effective with the first release January 1st, 1920. This insures a minimum output of seventy-two comedies during the contract period.

Arrow Sells Rights on Comedy Series

Coincident with the announcement this week that Muriel Ostrich is to be starred in two-reel comedies statement made by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporaion, reporting the sale of the territorial rights to the series of twelve productions.

Mr. Shallenberger announces the sales of the rights in the following territories: New York, Northern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Kentucky, Michigan, Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas, New England, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, Kansas and Missouri, Illinois and Indiana.

Exclusive Sells Rights on Neilan Revival

The Exclusive Features, Inc., announce that many territories have already been sold on the revival of Marshall Neilan's "The Country That God Forgot." The territories already sold include, Texas and Arkansas to the Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Texas; Oklahoma to the Tucker Brothers of Oklahoma City, the Southern states, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, North and South Carolina to the K. & R. Film Company of Atlanta, Georgia, and Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Quality Film Corporation of Pittsburg, Pa.

Ayon Sells Rights on Gerald Bacon Picture

Nathan Hirsh, of the Aywon Film Corporation, last week sold the rights to "Blind Love," the Gerald Bacon photodrama starring Lucy Cotton, for the state of Illinois to the Silee Film Corp., of Chicago. In addition Silee purchased from Aywon the Illinois rights to the series of Rex Ray Western pictures.

Mr. Hirsh has also completed arrangements whereby he will put on the state rights market a series of Western photodramas directed by D. W. Griffith when he was connected with the Biograph company.

Reelcraft Engages Warner

Noted Author to Write Stories for Matty Roubert Comedy Series

WILLIAM HENRY WARNER has been engaged to write the stories in which Matty Roubert, the twelve year old "leading man" is to be starred on the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation exclusive short subject program.

Mr. Warner is the author of "Mothers of Men," "The Bridge of Time," and many short stories, plays and articles on travel. His latest book "The Bridge of Time" is now being published in both New York and London.

The addition of Mr. Warner to the staff of the Matty Roubert producing unit is but the fulfilling of a promise to make the forthcoming series of pictures complete two-reel feature comedies in every sense of the word. The stories will concern the romances of youth, dealing with the enjoyable and universal appealing adventures of boys and girls in their teens.

Two of the stories for Matty Roubert have already been completed. One is titled "She's a Vamp," and the second story deals with the greatest joy in the lives of all youngsters—when the circus comes to town, and requires the service of a real Circus for its production. It will be titled "Circus Day."

William L. Roubert who is in

direct charge of the productions has endeavored to have every member of his producing staff and expert in their line. Production has already been started at Fort Lee.

Reelcraft plans to release these pictures at the rate of only one a month allowing ample time for the producing unit to make complete productions suitable for presentation in every theatre in the United States. Distribution will be through the Reelcraft and allied exchanges.

Pioneer's Summer Plans

Releases Will Continue During Hot Weather to Meet Demands

FOLLOWING the plans which proved successful last year, the Pioneer general staff announced that during the coming summer months there will be no cutting either in its number of releases or in the quality of the productions to be offered to the exhibitor.

June will see Louis Huff in "What Women Want" put out under the Pioneer banner, while July, August and September will be the release months of Jose Collins in "Nobody's Child," Grace Davison in the "Hidden Code" and Emily Stevens and Montagu Love in the "Place of Honeymoons." All of these pictures are said to be large and notable productions.

The Pioneer general staff believes that it owes a certain duty to the exhibitors handling its pictures to give them as good if not better pictures during the slow months as it does during the winter season. Last summer the Pioneer released some of its biggest productions with no falling off of the estimated receipts.

Usually during the hot spell there is a dearth of large pictures and the Pioneer believes that their summer offerings will help to meet the demands of the enterprising exhibitor.

Christie States Plans Under New Deal

As was recently announced, the Educational Film Corporation and Christie Comedies have perfected an arrangement whereby Educational will distribute all of the Christie product not otherwise contracted for. The new deal between Educational and Christie will include twenty four feature comedies, according to a statement from the Christie studios, meaning a gross business of a million dollars for two reel comedies alone, it is declared.

Two of the new series have already been started by Christie. The players in them include Bobby Vernon, Fay Tincher, Eddie Barry, Neal Burns, Dorothy Devore, Teddy Sampson, Vera Steadman, and Charlotte Merriam and Jimmie Harrison.

C. B. Price Manager Is Touring Mid-West

Mr. C. A. Meade sales manager of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., has left for a trip through the middle west stopping at Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Pittsburgh. In these various centers he will screen the five reel comedy drama which this company is marketing, Billie Rhodes in "His Pajama Girl." Mr. Meade expects to be away from New York for several weeks and upon his return may plan a second trip through another section of the country.

The state right purchasers who have already bought this subject for their territory have expressed their opinions of its big worth in no uncertain terms, according to an announcement from the C. B. Price offices.

Kremer Open Special Service Bureau

Victor Kremer, president of the New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc., announces the establishment of a special department in the exchange to take care of exhibitors' publicity wherever the same may be desired by them. He announces that between the hours of ten to twelve each day the publicity department shall belong to the exhibitor exclusively, and no charge will be made for the service.

Mr. Kremer believes that a good picture never grows old, and with this in mind he has closed for the famous Chaplin comedies and for features, starring Bryant Washburn, H. B. Walthal, Taylor Holmes and others of like calibre, it is stated.

Walter Hiers Engaged for Christie Film

Walter Hiers, the comedian, has been secured by Al Christie for a big part in the forthcoming production of, "So Long Letty." The acquisition of Hiers was made possible, it is stated, by the courtesy of Frank Garbutt and Charles F. Eyton of the Lasky Company, who arranged their schedule so as to permit Hiers to play for Christie for a period of six weeks.

Colleen Moore will play one of the other important parts in "So Long Letty," having already been cast for the role of the domestic wife.

"Son of Tarzan" Under Way

National Busy with Edgar Burroughs' Jungle Serial

A PICTURIZATION of "The Son of Tarzan" from the book of the same name by Edgar Rice Burroughs, is now being made at the studios of the National Film Corporation, the world distribution rights of which will be controlled by David P. Howells.

"The Son of Tarzan" is said to be a new departure in serial making in that it takes the story values from Mr. Burroughs' book and develops them to a highly dramatic point of serial filmization with a background of spectacular jungle settings.

"It is to be no mad jumble of blood and thunder, nor a series of unrelated incidents intended to be mystifying, but it will be a consistently constructed dramatic production from a story which has proved itself intensely popular with the public and which is one of a series which have met with unusual success on the screen," said Mr. Howells.

The company has offered Harry Revier, who is wielding the megaphone on this production, unlimited resources with orders to make the serial on a par, in every detail, with special productions. It is being filmed on the same elaborate scale which distinguished the previous Tarzan pictures.

Burroughs' previous works, "Tarzan of the Apes," and the "Romance of Tarzan," both of which were filmed as features by National and "The Return of Tarzan," which is also a five-reeler directed by Mr. Revier, have all scored highly with the public.

Mr. Revier, with Jean Temple, casting directress spent a long time in gathering together a cast capable of meeting the peculiar requirements "The Son of Tarzan" calls for. Innumerable changes had to be made before the company had its proper quota of talent. To be sure of their services all the "extras" were signed up for the entire length of the serial's production time.

The cast represents the four corners of the globe. Among those selected are: Karla Schramm, who is a Scandinavian; Mae Giraci of Italy, Eugene Burr, Howard Johnstone and H. W. Kearley, all of New Zealand, and a carefully selected quota of male and female talent, drawn from all parts of the world with which the story deals and conversant with the life and mannerisms of their respective peoples.

Gordon Griffith, who is playing the part of the young son of Tarzan, was one of the stars in "Huckleberry Finn." He also played the juvenile lead in "Tarzan of the Apes," the earlier National production. He was selected for the new role because of his unusual daring and pronounced ability before the camera.

Due to the unusual nature of the lighting action and acrobatic feats which the story calls for, the entire cast has been undergoing rigid training to fit it for the literally savage life ordeal which the filming of "The Son or Tarzan" will entail.

Roy Somerville who is photo-dramatizing the story has written original script for Douglas Fairbanks, the Gish sisters, the Talmadges and other leading screen stars. Capt. Harry M. Rubey, president of National, has given him a free hand to make the "Son of Tarzan" a serial classic. Revier and Somerville plan to make each episode a two-reel feature in itself. They will be so filmed that each will have an engrossing and fast moving plot replete with fascinating adventure and romance of the jungles, while each episode will be closely knit in the continued narrative. Because of the strange and tropical scenery the film is expected to offer a peculiar atmosphere of romance and the unknown as the background for the exploits of the "Son of Tarzan."

Pioneer Will Release One Picture a Month

Pioneer Film Corporation now finds itself in a position to announce to the exhibitors of the country that they may count upon one picture a month every month during the future. Pioneer has on hand and in preparation eight productions featuring such stars as Emily Stevens, Marie Doro, Montague Love, Mary Anderson, Louise Huff, Alma Rubens and Jose Collins which will be released monthly during the coming fall and early winter.

Billy Franey Comedies Go Well Is Report

Billy Franey, the comedian, appearing in a series of one-reel comedies, being produced for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, has proved the big surprise of the Reelcraft exclusive one and two-reel program. A wire from the Consolidated Film Company of Los Angeles, informs that the Billy Franey picture of "The Water Plug," went over as a great success at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles.

The Chicago Reelcraft exchange next reported the Billy Franey comedies as booked into Barbee's Loop theatre in Chicago, for full week-runs.

European Rights Sold on "Determination"

The United States Photoplay Corporation has contracted for the entire European rights for "Determination" with the Stoll Film Company of London, England.

Howard Hall, the dramatic writer, has been added to the scenario staff, and has been placed in charge of the continuity of the story "Determination." This production will be first released in New York City, and then follow into London. Arrangements are being made to show it in one of the largest houses in the Stoll chain in Drury Lane, it is stated.

Ward Lascalle Avoids Haste

Will Spend 12 Weeks on Each "Comedyart" Release

BELIEVING that quality product can only be made by the expenditure of a sufficient length of time during which scenario writer, director, cameraman, players, sub title writer and film ties, Ward Lascalle, director general of the Special Pictures Corporation, has announced that twelve weeks will be spent in the production of each "Comedyart" release.

This new policy is heartily endorsed by President Louis W. Thompson and H. J. Roberts, general sales manager, is arranging his releasing schedules so that this innovation in comedy making can be carried out to the fullest extent.

Four companies are now making the 1400 foot comedies used in "Comedyart" releases. Extensive remodeling of the Balboa studio at Long Beach has been effected in order to facilitate the making of the Special Pictures short reel fun features.

Milburn Moranti heads one producing unit; Charles Diltz, a former Rolin director, a second unit; George Cooper, formerly with Taylor Holmes productions and Vitagraph comedies the third; while the fourth producing unit is being personally directed by Director General Lascalle.

Among the better known comedians who are being featured by Special Pictures are Joe Bonner, former Vitagraph player, and well-known English, stage comedian; Max Asher, former associate of Kolb and Bill and other comic stars; Sandy Roth, formerly with the Ziegfeld follies and Gus Edwards reviews on the Orpheum time; and Tex Hewson, the "cowboy mirth maker." Hazel Powell, Alma Lucille and Peggy Weightman are among the beauties who act as feminine foils to the fun makers.

Lascalle has re-organized his producing staff to include George Larson, chief cinematographer; Joe Moranti, technical director; Charles Gorton, transportation and location superintendent; Lucille McGowan, modiste, and G. Gillette, studio auditor. "Friends and Enemies" is the title of the latest Comedyart release of Special Pictures Corporation.

Fine Arts Denies Rumor

Never Contemplated Withdrawing "Mary's Attic" from Market

FINE ART PICTURES, INC., in a statement to the motion picture trade denies absolutely the rumor which has been circulating recently that their six reel supercomedy feature, "Up in Mary's Attic," will not be released on the state right field. They very emphatically wish to impress the fact that "Up in Mary's Attic" will be released through the independent exchange men, that they have never considered releasing it in any other manner, and that all reports to the contrary are not true.

Charles F. Schwerin and L. L. Hiller, who are in charge of the territorial sales for "Up in Mary's Attic" have laid specific stress in all of their dealings with state right buyers or their representatives on the fact that "Up in Mary's Attic" will be sold as was originally intended, to the independent exchangeman.

That this is the case is evident for many reasons. To begin with, Fine Art Pictures state that they believe in the independent market as the best channel for the distribution of a production such as "Up in Mary's Attic." They believe that the independent distributor and the independent exchangeman can put over a production of this type in a manner that will bring out to the utmost its value.

Two important territories have already been sold for the independent market. Nat Robbins, of Utica, N. Y., who has purchased the rights for northern New York State, and Willis Kent of Quality Pictures, Denver, Colo., has purchased the rights for Colorado, Idaho, Utah and Wyoming.

Talmadge Re-Issue is Selling Rapidly

Joe Brandt, director general of the National Film Corporation, which company is planning to re-issue "Captivating Mary Carstairs" in which Norma Talmadge is starred, states that the list of unsold territory on this feature is growing smaller every day.

This film will be ready for release about June 1st, it is said, at wthich time new posters, advertising matter, press sheets and publicity and slides will be available for exhibitor use.

More Exchanges Ally with Reelcraft

Reelcraft announces the addition of the following exchanges to those already distributing Reelcraft subjects: the Seaboard Film Company with offices at 916 G street, N.W., Washington; and at 210 Calvert street, Baltimore, Md.; the Electric Theatre Supply Company of 1309 Vine place, Philadelphia, and the Supreme Photoplays Company of 1446 Welton street, Denver.

Gilmore Offers Studio Site to Producers

Paul Gilmore, who has recently completed "The Isle of Destiny" at Anna Marie Key, Florida, makes an unusual offer to picture producers through the Motion Picture News. He states that he will give absolutely free, with no strings attached, a location on the island to any reliable picture manufacturer who will build a studio and agree to work in the section for six months of the year. The climate, states Mr. Gilmore, is so perfect that he was able to complete a six reel picture in three weeks.

Bacon's "Blind Love" Going Well, He Says

Herman Rifkin, Eastern Feature Film Company, Boston, writes Nathan Hirsh, Aywon Film Corporation, who is handling the distribution of Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton and George La Guere, that the feature has been booked for a week's run beginning May 31st at the Boston theatre, Boston. "Blind Love" has been booking through the New England States for the past month and Mr. Rifkin reports it is playing to very successful business.

Jack Gardner Returns to Screen Work

Richards and Flynn, Kansas City exhibitors, who hold the First National franchise in their territory, have contracted with Jack Gardner to make a series of twelve five-reel Westerns. Mr. Gardner's vaudeville tour will end in time for the actual production work to start in California on August 14. Distributing plans will be announced later.

Press Book Soon Ready for "Mary's Attic"

According to a report from Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., who are releasing the six reel super-comedy feature, "Up in Mary's Attic," on the state right market, their twenty-eight page campaign book is now nearing completion. This book, it is said, will be a decided novelty from many angles. Every page will contain valuable and useful information.

An Old Struggle Re-enacted

BY VICTOR KREMER

THERE is nothing new under the sun. The exhibitor has nothing to fear. The much talked about producer-exhibitor enterprise is as old as the proverbial hills. From the beginning of time there have always been interests which desired to gobble up everything in sight, and at first flush it appeared that everything went their way. This applies to business as well as to politics, to civil as well as military life. No matter how shrewd in conception, clever in preparation, and efficient in execution, it cannot stand.

It is beyond belief how stupidly blind these interests are who are not satisfied with success and glory more or less justly earned while engaged in enterprise which made them pre-eminent among their fellows. Do those interests, be they autocracies, monarchies, or industries not realize that the grasping encroachment on other domains only serves to ally the ones who might suffer by such encroachment? Do they not realize the futility of any plan which plans to "shove off the earth" anything in the way of their ruthless advance? These producer-exhibitors were they thousandfold stronger than they are, will be blown away as chaff when the whirlwind of indignation will strike them with full force.

I desire to make myself plain on these five points: the producer-exhibitor is buying and building theatres to compete and supersede all contemporaries; the producer-exhibitor has the financial means to do so; the producer-exhibitor with the aid of national advertising has prepared the ground for patronage; the producer-exhibitor has enough productions for its theatre program; the producer - exhibitor, therefore, does not care a rap what independent exhibitors are trying to do to preserve themselves. The producer-exhibitor is united –the independent as yet has no concrete program—and even when they arrange one, it will not stop the producer-exhibitor as he considers himself unconquerable and already dispensing the spoils gained by newly conquered territories. Let's see why the independent exhibitor has nothing, absolutely nothing to fear, yes, rather much to gain.

First of all the independent exhibitor as yet owns and controls 80 per cent of the seating capacity of the moving picture audience. Again he prefers to be his own boss rather than a subsidiary adjunct and although he has been fooled many times he knows how to fight, and knows how to win. In time he is going to present an absolutely united front and will administer the arrogant invader a much needed lesson.

The independent exhibitor has much more resources than the producer exhibitor. These resources are not as yet organized, but they will be in less than three months. The producer-exhibitor laughs at this statement, but remember, others in different vocations have laughed at like statements to their everlasting shame and sorrow.

The independent desires to remain his own master. He must have more product, better product, best product. The summer season gives us all a breathing spell. The independent exhibitor will cancel the producer exhibitor's program, he will take independent product of high grade. Those now big among independent producers will grow bigger, those smaller will become big, and inasmuch as I personally am concerned, permit me to say: "I have set the mark for my high calling in the industry and am straining all efforts to reach said mark, and I have no fear but that I will accomplish what I set out for."

"Tex" Series Is Fully Sold

Arrow Sells Practically Every Corner of World on New Pictures

WITH the announcement this week through the Arrow Film Corporation that William Steiner is now completing the seventh of the series of "Tex" productions, it is announced that the sales rights to this series have been disposed of in practically every corner of the world. An official of the Arrow organization is authority for the statement that very little territory in the world remains unsold on the "Tex" productions.

Territorial buyers and exhibitors who have witnessed a screening of the first of the "Tex" series have commended the splendid work of the casts and the director. No expense has been spared in making this series one of uncommon value. The mystery element in each is played up dramatically in each production and each production has its singular attractiveness.

The first of the series titled "Circumstantial Evidence," "The Wall Street Mystery," and "The Unseen Witness," have been released in several territories and according to the statement from Arrow have proven exceptional box office values. The interest in the series has been aroused to a great extent because of the mystery element in each production. This element gives each of the productions a distinctive drawing power. Exhibitors have declared that the patrons have in a large number of cases made special inquiry into the schedule of the release of the productions and have expressed a desire to see the entire series. Especial emphasis has been made on the fact that so many of the older patrons of the theatres find in the "Tex" productions entertainment similar to a series of mystery novels.

The American demand for just this type of production in series was evidenced in the rapid sale of the American territorial rights by the Arrow organization. The remarkable part of the sales record of this series is the foreign demand.

"The Restless Sex," the Cosmopolitan production from the Robert W. Chamber's novel in which Marion Davies is starred, is a magnificent spectacle as will be proven by the three views from the picture as shown above

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

FIRST NATIONAL

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the Los Angeles First National Exhibitors circuit office that more than $5,000,000 will be expended by this organization for productions in Los Angeles during the coming year. This expenditure is to cover the production cost of subjects made by the twelve producing units occupying nine separate studios in the Los Angeles district. The releases included those of the Mayflower, four by J. Parker Reed, two by Mack Sennett, two with Carter De Haven, in addition to those starring Katherine MacDonald, Anita Stewart, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Charles Ray, Charles Chaplin, Marjorie Daw and Florence Vedor.

The Mack Sennett first contribution to First National "Married Life" was given a try out at Pasadena three days of last week, prior to the subject being taken East by E. M. Asher personal representative of Mr. Sennett. This release which has Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Charles Murray, Ford Sterling, Kalla Pasha, Louise Fazenda, Eddie Gribbin and others was given a very cordial reception in the retired millionaires' town.

The cast for the Marshall Neilan production which is to follow "Don't Ever Marry" has been announced to be composed of Agnes Aires and Pat O'Mally in the leading roles, and the supporting cast include Bull Montana, Noah Berry, J. Barney Sherry, Walter Long, Charles Mailes and Lydia Titus.

King Vidor has engaged Ferdinand Earle to prepare the art titles for his second First National release, "The Jack-knife Man," which is almost ready for final preview.

Vidor has not announced what his next film will be and the selection largely depends on William Parker, scenario chief, and Charles Vidor, manager, who are now in New York to purchase material.

All scenes for the Lewis B. Mayer production "Old Dad," starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, have been completed by Director Lloyd Ingraham. This cast is made up of George Stewart, Irving Cummings, Mystle Stedman, John Sainpolis, Hazel Howell and a number of others.

President Sam Rork of the Katherine MacDonald Productions has a cast selected or the next play, "Curtain," which is to be directed by James Young. Charles Richmond, Lloyd Whitlock and Florence Deshon are principals of this play, which will have a back-stage atmosphere.

The Anita Stewart production of "Harriet and the Piper," from the Kathleen Norris novel, adapted for the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn, is in the final stages of production under the directon of Bertram Bracken. Supporting players are Ward Crane, Vera Steadman, Irving Cummins, Charles Richmond, Byron Munson and others.

Charles Ray organization has "Peaceful Valley" in the final stage of production and this initial First National release will be ready for the screen shortly. In the meantime work is going forward on the preparation of "Forty-five Minues from Broadway," which is to be the second release. Ray has a number of other stories for future productions including an original play by Robert Wagner, fourteen Hoyd stage scenes, two James Whitcomb Riley poems and Booth Tarkington's novel, "Ramsey Milholland."

F. P.-LASKY

THE erection of several elaborate settings at the Famous Players-Lasky studios requiring several weeks time for the technical staff, prevent William R. Taylor from commencing the filming of "The Furnace," by Pan, until about June 7th. One of these is an interior of gambling rooms and adjoining parlors at Monte Carlo, and an elaborate interior and exterior setting of a well known London church is also being built.

Filming of "The Jucklins," by Opie Reed, from screen version by Frank Condon, will be started by George Melford early in June. This story will require a number of elaborate scenic features many of which will be taken near Los Angeles. Monte Blue has been cast for the role of Bill Hawes, Charles Ogle will play Lem Jucklin and Mabel Julienne Scott will appear in the part of Guinia Jucklin.

Another film to be started early in June is that starring Roscoe Arbuckle who this week finished work in "The Life of the Party." Joseph Heneberry is to continue as Arbuckle's director, and Walter Wood has prepared the continuity for the next play.

Director Tom Forman will begin the filming of Roseanne O'Zanne starring Ethel Clayton next week. Mary O'Connor, at the head of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department, prepared the working script for this, and Jack Holt has been selected as leading man.

James Cruze has been selected to direct the filming of the next Wallace Reid play, "The Charm School," screen version of which was written by Tom Geraghty, and Gloria Swanson has been cast to play opposite Bryant Washburn in "Wanted a Blemish," which will be put in production as soon as Washburn completes work in his present subject, "Burglar Proof." Following Miss Swanson's work in this film she will be granted leave of absence from the Famous Players-Lasky studios, and expects to temporarily retire from the screen.

METRO

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week at the Metro studios of plans for the next series of Screen Classics. "Blackmail," a crook melodrama, by Lucia Chamberlain, is to be Viola Dana's next starring vehicle, and script is now being written by A. S. LeVino.

Alice Lake is to play in the name role of, "The Gorgeous Girl," from story by Naldro Bartley, which is to be filmed immediately following the completion of "The Mis-Fit Wife."

Sarah Y. Mason is preparing the screen version of the Irving S. Cobb story, "The Five Dollar Baby"; and the Arthur Stringer story, "The Waffle Iron," will serve as the vehicle for May Allison. The latter is being written for the screen by A. P. Younger.

Finis Fox is writing the screen version for "The Turning of the Worm," which will be a comedy drama of matrimonial difficulties from the story by Hannah Hansdale.

Another script in preparation for an all-star production is that of "Someone in the House," from the speaking stage play which ran several years ago. Louis Zellner is writing the continuity for this play.

G. Allen Gilbert, illustrator and Poster artist, has been engaged by the Metro to prepare a new style, or type, of art titles for Winchell Smith's "The Sap-Head."

Director Rex Ingram and company producing "Hearts Are Trumps," are at Huntington Lake in the high Sierra Mountains to secure snow scenes. Francelia Billington plays the featured role in this subject, and the production will serve to introduce a new leading woman in the person of Alice Terry. The company in the mountains also includes Brindsley Shaw, Frank Brownlee, Norman Kennedy, as players, and John Seitz and Tom Storey as cameramen, and about twenty others.

Director Eddie Cline has begun the filming of the first Buster Keaton comedy drama which deals with the trials and tribulations of a young married couple. The play was written by Jean Havez, and Sybil Sealey has been selected as leading woman.

The gym of the Los Angeles Y. M. C. A. was used for a number of scenes in "The Chorus Girl's Romance," Metro is now making with Viola Dana under the direction of William C. Dowlan. A number of professional gymnasts performed stunts for the camera in scenes taken in the gym.

Jack Livingston has been selected by Metro to play the important role in "The Mis-Fit Wife," which features Alice Lake, following Livingston's completing work in the Winchell Smith production, "The Sap-Head."

TWO Jesse D. Hampton productions were forwarded East this week for release. One of these is "Leona Goes a Hunting," starring Blanche Sweet, with her Directory, Henry King, playing the opposite role.

The second film to be completed is that starring William Desmond which was made under the working title of "The Man From Make-Believe," but which will be released as "A Broadway Cowboy."

Fred Myton has completed writing the screen version of the Fanesty stage play, "The Brass Bottle," and this has been put in production under the direction of Henry King with H. B. Warner as star.

mediate future as M. C. Levee, vice-president and business manager of the Brunton plant, returned from New York this week, following several weeks in the Eastern metropolis where he went to investigate conditions pertaining to the film industry and the advisability of the Brunton Company building a commercial studio near New York City. While in the East, Mr. Levee made contracts with a number of producers who expect to make films on the Coast and during their stay in the West, will use space and offices at the Brunton plant.

The construction work on a number of improvements at the Brunton Studios was commenced this week. The building now going on consists of the erection of a tier of 6 dressing rooms which will be adjoining the recently completed 300 feet dark stage. Adjoining the dressing rooms will also be built two office suites for the use of Robert Brunton and General Manager Levee. A six-inch water main is being laid to the new big stage in order to give ample fire protection and large quarters are being built for the scenario department on the west side of the big plant. The department is in charge of Jack Cunningham. Another improvement now under way is that of a fireproof storage place for powder and other explosives. This building is the first to be erected on the ten-acre tract adjoining the Brunton Studios recently purchased.

Filming of the first Robert Brunton all-star production, "The Devil to Pay," from the Frances Nimmo Greene novel, will be commenced next week by Director Ernest Ward. At this time producer Brunton has under construction a number of well known novels, one of which will be selected as his second all-star subject.

Positive print and negative on the ninth and last, J. Warren Kerrigan for W. W. Hodkinson to be made by Robert Brunton, has been shipped East for print making, and the Brunton made serial for Pathe, as yet unnamed, has been completed as far as the fifth episode. W. S. Van Dyke is directing the making of this unnamed serial and Charles Hutchinson and Josie Sedgwick are featured.

Director Hugh Ryan Conway, now filming the "Money Changers" by Upton Sinclair for B. B. Hampton, has sent his assistant, Virgil Hart, to San Francisco to make scenes, both interior and exterior, in Chinatown for use in the Oriental sequence in this production.

The Allan Dwan Mayflower company has been working nights for the last week filming the original story by Dwan, which is said to be so intensely dramatic that work during the day is impossible because of the noise. The big cast for this subject includes Mary Thurman, Niles Welch, Eugenie Besserer, Joseph Dowling, Frank Campeau, George Hackathorn and Stanton Williams.

The Robert W. Chambers' story, 'Athalie," is in the final editing stages and will be ready for final preview at a Hollywood theatre during the coming week. Sylvia Breamer and Conrad Nagel play the leading roles.

General Manager Harry Rapf of the Selznick organization announces the completion of the Olive Thomas picture, "Jenny," and stated Miss Thomas' next story, written by John Lynch and titled "Nobody," would be ready for filming as soon as the star had wardrobe prepared.

Henry Kolker has also finished the making of "The Palace of Darkened Windows," the last scenes being taken at Balboa Beach where desert scenes were filmed.

UNIVERSAL

THE final work is being done on script for the next Priscella Dean production which is to be titled "Outside the Law," a crook drama of a new type, the original story for which was written by Tod Browning who directed Miss Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul," and he will direct her in the making of this film. Director Browning insists that this crook drama is of a decidedly new type as it does not concern crooked police or dishonest officials. One of the principal roles is that of a Chinese philosopher who preaches the doctrine of Confucius.

Messrs. Lyons and Moran have selected their complete cast for the second five-reel comedy drama, "La La Lucille," from the Broadway stage success by Fred Jackson. Anne Cornwall and Gladys Walton are the leading women for the comedians, and the principal players are Fred Gamble, Henry Meyers, Frank Earle, Charles McHugh, Dora Walbert, Rose Gore and a number of others.

Other Universal productions now in the making are "Fighting Job," starring Harry Carey under the direction of Reeves Eason; "Marama," directed by Norman Dawn and starring Edith Roberts; "Hitchin' Post," being directed by Jack Ford, and Director Lynn Reynolds is doing the final editing of the "Red Lane." Proparations are being completed for the making of "In Folly's Trail," which will be directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

Horace Davies, recently added to the directorial staff of Universal, is filming "Give a Young Man a Chance," a comedy which features Howard Austin and Bartine Burkett and a number of bathing girls. Magda Lane and James B. Warner are featured in "Pranks of Fate," Universal short subject, and Director Mack Wright is filming Bud Kirkland's "Buddy," which features Leo Maloney and May Busch.

HERE AND THERE

THE D. N. Schwab Productions have purchased screen rights on the story, "Girls Don't Gamble Anymore," which is to be the third vehicle starring David Butler. The story is now being prepared for the screen and work on the filming of this is to begin within the next two weeks. In the meantime the company is doing the final work on the second David Butler picture, "Smiling All the Way," which was directed by Fred J. Butler. The new story gives Butler the role of a big hearted, out-of-doors young man which is the same type of characterization he has had in previous stories.

The Monroe Salisbury Players left for northern California this week to make exteriors for their initial production, "The Barbarian," adapted from a late magazine story. Jane Novak plays opposite Salisbury, and other players are Barney Sherry, Harrison Post, Lillian Leighton, Sydney Dean, Larry Steers, and a number of others. Donald Crisp who directed Salisbury in "Ramona" and "Eyes of the World," is serving in this capacity for the new company. The Salisbury Company will have its headquarters at the Brunton Studio where the interior for the subject will be filmed.

GARSON

WITH Mid-Channel's adaptation from Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's play of the English stage, plans are being made at the Garson Studio for the next Clara Kimball Young production which is to be from an original play by Sada Cowan, recently engaged by Harry Garson following her engagement as writer for C. B DeMille. Miss Cowan is the author of the stage play, "The State Forbids," "Playing the Game" and a long list of one-act plays for stage stars.

Edward T. Lowe has also been added to the Garson scenario staff and will give his attention to preparation of continuities.

last summer. This is not unusual, as hundreds of theatre owners tell us how their summer receipts increase anywhere from fifty to one hundred per-cent.

And it's a simple matter, too.

Make your theatre the coolest place in town and you are bound to get the business. People go to the mountains, seashore, and lakes to get the breezes that you can furnish in your theatre with TYPHOONS.

Parkdale Opens in Toronto

WHAT is generally acknowledged to be a new achievement in the shape of a neighborhood theatre is the new Allen's Parkdale theatre, Queen street and Triller avenue, Toronto. This house is rated as a "super suburban theatre" and it possesses all the structural features of a great downtown film palace—with a few more specialties thrown in for good measure. Thanks to the location of the new house in a picturesque and substantial district in the West End of Toronto, more than usual attention has been paid to the exterior details. Between the two entrances on the Queen Street frontage, arrangements have been made for the placing of a grass terrace with a handsome fountain and rustic benches, thus adding a park-like atmosphere to the surroundings. On the Triller avenue side will be found an ornamental garden when the weather becomes appropriate for horticultural work.

Although the Parkdale is a suburban theatre it is comparatively spacious, having seating accommodations on the one floor for 1,800 people. On the opening night, when special ceremonies were conducted by Mayor Church, Controller Gibbons, Alderman McGregor and others, hundreds of people were turned away.

The scheme of decoration in the Adams style with a combination of rose, cream and white colors and cameo mural effects is similar to that of other new Allen theatres in Canada. A special arrangement is the placing of two entrances on the wide front, practically at each corner of the building. There are the usual rest and smoking rooms and the house is heated by oil-burning furnaces, this plan of heating having been adopted for Allen theatres which have been erected during the past six months. Provision has been made for a concert organ and a ten-piece orchestra has been organized, the conductor of which has been Mr. Ernest Johnson, L. R. A. M

Making a "Dream" Out of a "Shell"

BUILDING a new theatre, from the ground up, and making it a thing of beauty is one thing, while taking an old shell of a building and making it into one, is quite another, especially when you are keeping your foot on the "soft pedal" of expense.

Down in Tampa, Florida, is the "Maceo" theatre, operated by Mr. Charles Sappal, for the exclusive amusement of the negro race. That Sappal knows what to dish up for the negro's amusement is demonstrated every day.

Charlie Sappal is a spender too. He just naturally don't care what a feature costs, so long as it looks like a "sure fire" negro attraction, and Charlie calls 'em right about ninety-nine times in the hundred. So, after having about ninety percent of the serials all sewed up in his inside pocket, and how those black boys do love the serials, he decided he'd give his patrons a treat by making his house as attractive as his program.

Now, just imagine a big frame building about 60 feet wide by 120 feet long. Unsealed inside, for Florida's climate does not demand such luxuries, with an inverted V-shaped roof supported by heavy wooden girders from wall to wall, and all in plain view. This was what Charlie had to work on when he decided that he would make the Maceo into a summer garden.

The first thing he did was to paint the roof and girders solid black. Just real old lamp black, glue and water. Now with a stencil, star pattern, he marked out a hundred or more stars on the backs of photos from past attractions. The stars were then cut out and tacked about the roof.

Next a big load of lath were painted white and then nailed upon the girders, giving a lattice work effect. One seated below could look thru the white lattice, see the twinkling stars in the inky heaven above, and murmur, "How nice and cool out here under the open sky. I wonder how they pull the roof off?"

Here and there from the lattice were buckets, all neatly covered, hanging down with vines trailing down over their sides.

Upon the sides of the building he used wall board. This was painted a dark color from the floor up to about six feet and from there on up to the girders it was painted pink.

The lattice effect was carried out on each side of the proscenium arch by painting it all black and then putting up the lath an inch or so away. This gave it depth.

Coolness was there in "looks," and of course looks go a long long way, but, when it's hot, it's hot, and all the cool "effects" in the world won't keep a packed house from sweating, so Charlie set up a battery of oscillating fans, and then topped it off with a big exhaust fan, which he reversed, so the breeze would hit 'em right in the face.

I'll tell the world that, with ocean breezes blowing all over you, the stars a twinkling over your head, and a program of pictures that just naturally keep you right up to the edge of your seat, why; there isn't a chance of keeping those black

American Photoplayer to Move Soon

Saving Ideas from New Theatre Section

A NOTE received from W. B. Crooks, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Benicia, Cal., says:

"I think the section under the head of 'New Theatres' is a great help to exhibitors because everyone likes to see what kind of a theatre the other fellow has, and he can get many new ideas from these pictures and descriptions to make his place more attractive. For the past three years I have been cutting out and saving these pictures and when the time came to build my new theatre I got many new ideas to incorporate in the new house from these."

As plans for new theatres are drawn up, it is gratifying to note the almost universal acceptance of the Major Theatre Switchboard as the highest development in the art of theatre lighting and sound electrical construction. This means intimate knowledge of theatre requirements which makes every Frank Adam-Major installation an individual system, designed to give maximum service in the capacity for which it was built.

The above roster is a fair barometer of this universal endorsement, as it is but a partial list of theatres that have specified and included Major Equipment.

Capitol Opens in Springfield, Mass.

LOCATED on the site of the historic Gilmore theatre at Main and Pynchon streets, the new Capitol theatre, Abraham Goodside of Portland, Me., owner and managing director, claimed to be the latest and best of theatres in this section devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures, was formally opened a few nights ago. The general opening to the public was on Monday, Patriots' day, the schedule calling for programs every day of the week. There were five performances, the theater being opened at 12 o'clock, noon, week days and at 2 p. m. Sundays.

Mr. Goodside will have personal general supervision of the house, dividing his time between it and other of his theatres in the East. James Butler is treasurer of the theatre, and M. J. Kavanagh, until recently general manager of the John Cort attractions, will be local manager. Announced policy will be along the same lines as followed at the Strand and Rialto theatres in New York. A symphony orchestra of 25 under direction of Carlton Kelsey, formerly musical director for John Cort, will play at each performance and there will be selections by a local organist.

The decorative archway to the theatre is of stone, highly ornamental and adapted from Italian Renaissance motifs. An attractive lobby leads to an auditorium seating 1,200. On either side of the lobby an ornamental iron staircase leads directly to the mezzanine floor and balcony. The ceiling of the lobby carries out the same general decorative effect. On the mezzanine floor are located coat, retiring and toilet rooms furnished with every accommodation. The balcony is entered through two vomitories, this being arranged so that the sight line provides that every seat in the house commands a perfect view of the stage.

General design of the auditorium has been arranged according to the latest ideas in acoustics, continuing the same principles of architectural design as that of the exterior. The decoration is in low relief and is reminiscent of the Adam period. Old rose, gold and gray, with mulberry hangings and draperies are liberally used.

Large organ pipes frame the stage on either side, which is set in the form of an open niche, giving an attractive setting for the picture. The whole is framed with an illuminated opalescent glass proscenium arch. The stage is fitted to accommodate both vaudeville and motion pictures. To insure perfect projection of the pictures the picture machine booth is hidden in the front of the balcony. This is intended to eliminate the long, angular throw from the top of the balcony used in many theatres.

Many exits and an automatic sprinkler system are provided as protection against fire. Lighting of the theatre is semi-direct, producing a soft glow all over the house. Heating and ventilating carry out all of the latest ideas in theatre work. Desmond & Long, theatrical designers, were the architects and are now drawing plans for a large theatre to be built by the Goodside interests at Manchester, N. H.

On the Illumination of Theatres

ONE of the most interesting papers delivered at the Montreal Convention of the Society of Motion Pictures Engineers was that on "A New Method of Illuminating Theatres" by L. A. Jones of the Eastman Kodak Co. A synopsis of this paper follows:

This paper contains a discussion of the fundamental principles which must be considered in order to obtain a relatively high level of illumination in a motion picture theatre resulting in a detrimental effect on the quality of the projected picture.

The first few paragraphs contain a discussion of the various visual sensibilities of importance in this problem which include the contrast, brightness, and glare sensibility functions of the average normal human eye. A consideration of the principles involved leads to the conclusion that the illuminating system must be so constructed as to provide adequate illumination on the table plane without the use of visible lighting elements above a certain critical value of brightness in order that the condition of why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

A FEW REASONS

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.

3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-out-able.

glare and lowered adaptation level may be avoided. This can only be accomplished by the use of effective sources of large area and relatively low brightness such as a diffusely illuminated ceiling and walls. Quantitative data of the installation are given. These data apply, of course, only to a room of the particular size and shape considered, but indicate the general character of the system which will be found satisfactory in a motion picture theatre of any kind.

In order to illustrate the general principles of the scheme, a diagram showing a cross sectional elevation of the motion picture theatre is given with the proposed lighting units in position.

From the quantitative measurements it is concluded that illumination on the table plane of from .1 to .2 foot candles may be used without in any way interfering with the quality of the projected picture, and further in order to avoid glare and undue lowering of the adaptation level that the maximum surface brightness that may fall within the field of vision of any observer should not be greater than 2.5 to 3.0 m.l.

Attention is also called the illumination conditions which should exist in the lobbies, vestibules and foyer.

Jack Calicott Makes Distinct Impression at First Performance of Los Angeles Kinema

Overcomes Many Handicaps, But Succeeds in Turning Out a Finished Premiere

WITH the arrival in Los Angeles of Jack Calicott from Seattle to take over the management of the Kinema theatre for the Messrs. Michael Gore, Abe Gore and Sol Lesser, speculation ran rife along film row and the sancto sanctorums of the larger houses were known to have sent some of their aides to witness the first presentation of the new manager.

On Saturday evening, February the 14th, the non-union personnel of the Kinema, under the management of T. L. Tally, left its stations to make room for a thirty-piece orchestra under the direction of Nicola Donatelli, engaged by Mr. Calicott. Two full rehearsals were held before the opening performance until the new aggregation was in perfect unison. New electricians, stage hands, operators, etc., also filled important places, with some of the former employees filling their old stations. C. C. Harden has been made projectionist in charge, with two assistants. Mr. Calicott has already installed a new screen upon which he has perfected projection effects that come nearer stereoscopic effects than anything before attempted. It must be understood that modern and new stage equipment is rapidly being put in place of the obsolete type of material and the owners are putting no limit on the expense of necessary alterations. Jack Calicott stated that Gore and Lesser expect to spend at least $75,000 until a new stage has been built in place of the older one. The entire house is to undergo a remodeling and redecoration, with architects and decorators now in daily session. Turkish and Byzantine effects are to be used entirely, Mr. Calicott's intention to transform the Kinema into a veritable Harun-Al-Rashid's palace, having met with the unanimous approval of the owners. It is estimated that the house will close its doors within a few weeks to allow for final massive building activities, and then Mr. Calicott expects to reopen the New Kinema theatre in a blaze of glory. The front of the house, which heretofore has always been somewhat subdued is to undergo a complete change, with large electrical signs and thousands of lights now being arranged to make the block a sea of blazing light. Buildings are now rapidly going up all around the Kinema and the district promises to become one of intense industrial activity. The plans for the rebuilding of the Kinema are most ambitious and have caused considerable comment in film and exhibition circles since their announcement. Mr. Calicott is working day and night to put the Kinema on the map, and his first presentation bill has met the unstinted praise of the local press. The critics recognized the new spirit which is governing the entire organization and praised the eight-part program fulsomely. Donatelli's overture was Suppe's "Light Cavalry," which was followed by the Kinema Weekly, selected bits from available scenic and educational subjects.

No. 17 Holds six 11x14's and date strip. Has easel and fancy crown.

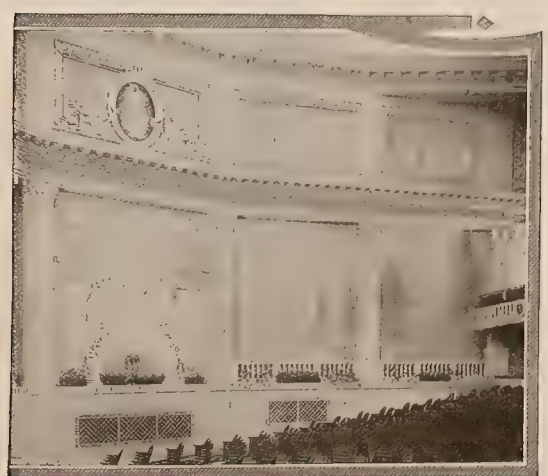
This Fernery $6.50

The proper decorating of a theatre is a profession in itself.

It is a proposition which cannot be handled properly as a department in a separate business. Because theatre decorating is a profession we are viewing it from that standpoint and are in a position not only to decorate your theatre to your complete satisfaction—but to actually save you money on the job. From an artistic, practical and service standpoint we should be your logical choice.



As a typical illustration of our ability in this field we are showing our Beauty Carnation Fernery No. 48 at a price way below today's market. It measures 36 in. long, 18 in. high and 10 in. wide.

The Beauty Carnation Fernery is filled with imported ferns, 18 genuine cloth carnations in pink, white and red, and real Spagnum Moss. It will fit along your walls on either side of the stage, over your proscenium—in fact in a hundred and one places, and prove an important adjunct to the bright cheery atmosphere you want to dispense.

Because the price on this item is cut to the bone we are compelled to ask for your protection, that check accompany order. Price each, packed in patented individual carton, $6.50. Your money refunded unless you are satisfied.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Announcement of the New Westinghouse Automatic Regulator

A Device to Further the Use of Incandescent Lamps for Projection

FOR many months past rumors have been current regarding the early perfection of a new regulator for Mazda projection by the Westinghouse Company. The Equipment Department of Motion Picture News in line with its usual policy is the first to publish a detailed account of the new device.

Since the lamp for use in motion picture projection was standardized at 900 watts, the manufacturers of the lamps have realized the necessity of maintaining the correct current under all conditions if the life of the lamp was to be brought to its maximum. This lamp requires 30 amperes at 30 volts and every ampere over this amount the life of the lamp is greatly shortened. It is not necessary that this over-current be continued for long without having a bad effect on the bulb. One ampere over normal continued for a minute or two will shorten the life of the lamp by a number of hours. Conversely, if the lamp is burned at amperages under 30 the brilliancy of the source is materially decreased and the illumination of the screen reduced. For these reasons, simply stated, the engineers realized the vital need for a constant current regulator that would insure at all times the proper current at the lamp terminals.

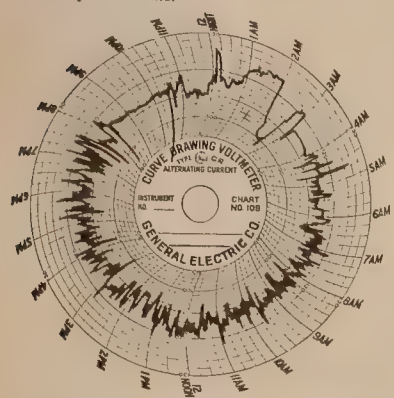

Fig. 1—This regulator has handled the voltage variations shown here

And one more thing, because of the general conditions under which the lamp would be used it was felt that the regulating device should be automatic. Hand controls in numbers have appeared on the market but they, although admirable in their design and scope, permitted the human element to enter in that the current was regulated only when the projectionist noticed from the ammeter that the current was above normal. If his mind and attention happened to be distracted for a minute or two by a troublesome film or a bad acting take-up the lamp might be subjected to an excess current of several amperes for the time being. Accordingly the lamp burned out long before it reached its normal life.

If the voltage of the usual supply line remained constant it would be possible to use an ordinary step down transformer. But in actual practice the supply voltage is far from remaining constant as the curve in Fig. 1 shows. This curve was taken from a recording voltmeter connected to the supply line of a Massachusetts town. By studying it it will be seen that the voltage varied from 90 to 130. Without doubt this is an extreme case as it is improbable that the average voltage variation goes much beyond 10 or 15 volts. But even with this lesser variation, the corresponding current change would be too great for the Mazda projection lamp to withstand and it would obviously be too much to expect a projectionist to catch each variation by adjusting the regulator handle of a hand controlled device. The action must be automatic.

The new Westinghouse Regulator is automatic in its action. It is based upon the old principle of the constant current transformer used in the days of the series street lighting systems. Additional features have been provided to make it specially suitable for motion picture work.

Fig. 2 shows the regulator with its cover removed. The device is mounted at a convenient height above the floor. The tripod consists of three iron legs screwed into a solid cast iron frame which in turn supports the core laminations and also the movable coil. This movable coil is supported on a cast aluminum frame which to allow free movement is supported at its lower end by two sets of ball bearings.

The current comes into the primary coil marked "A" in Fig. 2 and sets up a magnetic current which repels the secondary or coil "B" away from it. But spring "C" exerts a predetermined pull upon "B" which swings upon the pivoted cast iron aluminum frame "D" so the point where the magnetic repulsion is neutralized by the pull of the springs, as shown

Gentlemen:

At the request of your Mr. Cassard, it is a pleasure to recommend the Power's Projection Machines, as I hereby do.

We have in our present plant, six Power's machines which are giving the best of satisfaction, and two of them have been in operation for eighteen hours a day for two years. I most heartily recommend Power's Projectors.

Very truly,

STORAGE BATTERIES

Cells which are reversible in their action i. e. those in which the chemical condition at discharge may be brought back to the original condition, by means of a current flow in the reverse direction, may be termed storage batteries or as sometimes called electric accumulators.

The process of storing electric energy by sending a current through a cell from some external source is called charging. When the cell is producing a current in an external circuit or is supplying energy it is said to be discharging.

When a storage cell is being charged it is necessary to apply a higher voltage than the cell is capable of producing on discharge because of the internal resistance and an action on the plates similar to polarization of a primary cell.

Because of the internal resistance which obstructs the flow of current in the cell an amount of energy equal to that required for charging cannot be obtained on discharge. Thus no storage cell can be constructed to be 100% efficient.

There are two general classes of storage cells those in which lead is used for both positive and negative plates and those in which some other metal is used.

The e. m. f. or open circuit voltage of a cell depends on the material used and the chemical constituents and not in any way on the number of plates or surface area. The voltage varies slightly, however, with the strength of solution and the temperature and upon the state of charge of the plates. During charge the terminal voltage of a cell rises and during discharge it falls due to change in internal resistance and acid concentration effects. The total voltage of a battery is the E. M. F. of each cell multiplied by the number of cells.

For a definite type and thickness of plate the capacity or ampere hours output of a cell is proportionate to the area of the plates. The size of a cell is usually rated in ampere hours output capacity but the normal discharge rate is also given as the capacity falls when a discharge rate above normal is used.

Lead Acid Type,—Storage Cells.

The active material used in the construction of a lead-acid storage cell is the lead oxide, ($Pb O_2$) which makes up the anode or positive plate and the spongy lead Pb) the cathode or negative plate also the dilute sulphuric acid ($H_2 SO_4$) in which the plates are immersed.

When a cell is being discharged both these active materials are converted into lead sulphate ($Pb SO_4$) at the expense of the acid radical of the electrolyte and with the formation of water. On charge the reverse action takes place in that $Pb SO_4$ is broken up.

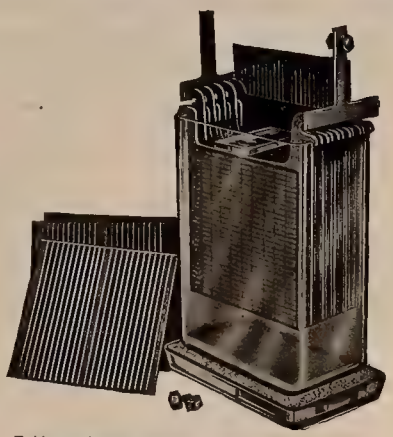
The following equations show the chemical action which takes place in the cells.

Reaction on the positive plate:

$$PbO_2 + H_2SO_4 = PbSO_4 + H_2O + O$$

Reaction on the negative plate:

$$Pb + H_2SO_4 = PbSO_4 + 2H$$



Combining this action we obtain the following:

$$PbO_2 + Pb + 2H_2SO_4 = 2PbSO_4 + 2H_2O$$

There are two processes used in the manufacture of storage battery plates or grids, namely, the Plante plates and the pasted plates.

In the Plante process the plates are in a flat form, and have a highly developed surface

Exide stationary lead-acid cell showing sediment space formed by cutting a blank of heavy sheet lead. The active material of the positive plate is formed by cutting grooves in the surface and subjecting the plates to a lead dissolving acid such as acetic or nitric.

In the pasted form of plates the active material is manufactured separately and introduced as plugs into openings in the lead grids.

Several different methods are used in the manufacture of different makes of cells each one having its own peculiarities.

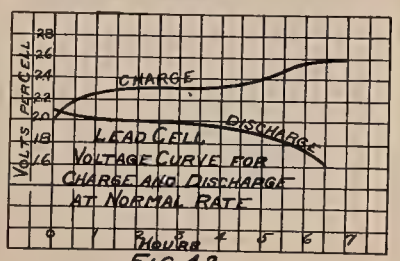

FIG. 42.

There are two processes employed in the manufacture of different makes of cells each one having its own peculiarities. In some cases a pasted plate of one polarity is used with a Planté plate of the other polarity, but plates of different design or age should not be connected to form one polarity of a cell.

The Planté type of plate while being more costly for a given output are heavier and more easily injured by impurities of electrolyte. However, they are able to stand a more rapid charge and discharge without injury and are not so liable to lose their active material.

The pasted plates are cheaper to construct and do not require such a large space for a given capacity and are not easily damaged by impurities of the electrolyte.

As already stated the voltage of a cell increases with charge and decreases with discharge so that the terminal voltage is in a way a measure of the condition of a battery. The relative change of voltage for charge and discharge is shown by the curves of Fig. 42. The unit for the capacity of a battery is the ampere hour and is usually based on an eight hour discharge rate. For example a 2 amp. hr. battery will give 25 amps. for 8 hrs. and theoretically should give 50 amps. for 4 hrs. and 100 amps. for 2 hrs., but in practice, however, it is found that the capacity decreases for an increase in the rate of discharge. This is shown by the curves of Fig. 43 which show the voltage variation for charge and discharge at different current rates. The discharge was stopped when the voltage had dropped to 1.7 volts, and the charge continued until the voltage and specific gravity had become constant.

The ampere-hour output at a high rate of discharge is shown by the curve of 134 amperes for one hour, or 134 ampere-hours. To charge this battery required 32 amperes for five hours, or 160 ampere-hours. The efficiency of the battery is then given by 134/160 or 84 per cent.

As the rate of current taken from the battery is decreased the ampere-hour output is increased. Thus 42 amperes may be taken from the battery for six hours before the voltage drops to 1.7 volts, which gives an output of 252 ampere-hours and to recharge requires 32 amperes for 8½ hours or 272 ampere-hours, which is 92 per cent efficiency.

The above facts and the curves show that although a battery may be discharged at any desired rate, a greater ampere-hour output is obtained when the current is consumed at a low rate, and while it takes longer to charge because the action at slow rate goes deeper into the plates yet a higher rate of ampere-hour efficiency is obtained.

Answers to Study Lessons

Rudolph Koller, Roseburg, Ore., writes:

Following please find answers to Questions in April 17th issue of the NEWS:

14. The proper readucing and steadying resistance to be inserted in the circuit should be of 4.757 ohms.

15. Short circuits may occur in Rheostats in various ways. First take the wire coil kind—if one of this type has been in use for a long time and was subject to heavy use and overload, the coils will sag and might then touch the adjoining one, thus causing a short. Second—Shorts might be caused by grounds to the frame or broken down insulators of resistance wire coil support, etc. The last two defects might be applied to the "grid" type rheostat also. Third—The only real and absolute short circuit would be at the terminals of a rheostat in such a way as to cause a direct flow of current from one terminal to the other without going through any coils at all.

16. The total resistance is 110 ohms.

17. 2 Amp. will be the current flowing through the circuit.

18. The equivalent resistance is 1 ohm and the current flow through the circuit 110 amperes.

19. The current flowing is 3 amperes and the resistance 36.66 ohms.

Reply: The above answers are 100% correct.

New Westinghouse Regulator

by the arrow, is the position at which at a voltage of 115 the regulator will supply the lamp 30 volts and 30 amperes. As coil "B" approaches coil "A" the amperage is raised. If it goes further away, the voltage drops. But if there is a sudden rise in the line voltage and if these coils were fixed rigid the amperage would naturally rise and injure the lamp. But these coils being free to move, the increased voltage causes greater magnetic repulsion and coil "A" is pushed further away from "B" thereby cutting down the amperage. Every time there is a rise or fall in the line voltage an adjustment takes place within the regulator automatically and practically instantaneously.

Fig. 4—Back view of regulator with terminal board on

The front view of the regulator is shown in Fig. 3. The part marked "X" is the lever for use in setting the regulator at any predetermined current rating based on the normal current of the lamp in use. For instance suppose the lamp demanded 30.5 amperes. This lever would be moved until the figure 30.5 was reached. At that point it would be locked with the certainty that the regulator will supply just that amount of current.

Lever "W" is the switch handle for the lamps. When it is moved to the right, lamp No. 1 is burned at full current while No. 2 is made to glow at half current. Then moving the lever to the left brings No. 2 to full current and No. 1 to half current. The purpose of this is to protect the lamp by warming it up gradually instead of submitting it to the initial rush of full current. When the filament is cold its resistance is much lower and the current consumption many times greater then when it has been heated up. By allowing the filament to become heated gradually the strain is removed and the life of the lamp extended. The "glow period" has another advantage in that it is much easier to properly focus the image and mirror under reduced light than when full illumination is being provided by the source.

The rear view of the regulator is shown in Fig. 4. The cast iron terminal box cover houses the switch whose handle is shown extending through. This switch is used for high and low line voltage, that is, when the voltage is below 90 or above 115. When the ammeter reads below 30 throw the switch in position marked "high"; when over 30 to the point marked "low." This is a convenience for the projectionist since it is necessary for him only to throw this switch to get closer regulation.

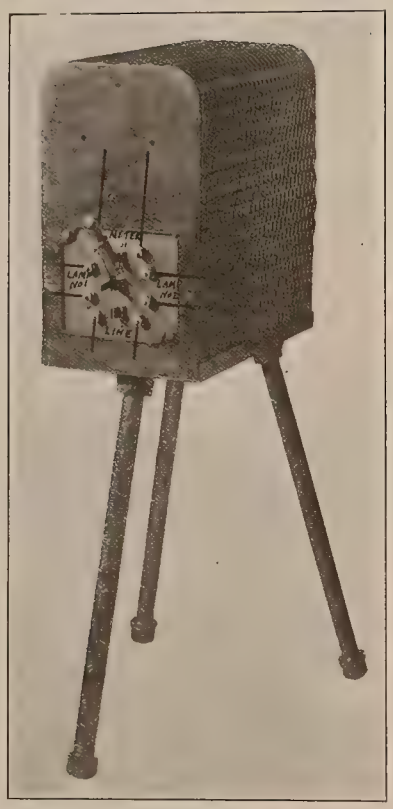

Fig. 5—Back view with terminal board cover removed

Fig. 5 illustrates the terminal board with cover removed. The large binding posts are well spaced to accommodate large lugs. At the bottom are the connections for the line, at the side the pairs for the lamps and at the top the terminals for the ammeter. These terminals are all labeled so that there is no confusion when connecting up.

The Westinghouse Company has given this regulator many months of actual tests under theatre conditions before placing it on the market. Its perfection marks another long step in the progress of incandescent projection.

The Blue Prints are a new feature of the Equipment Section. They will give you many ideas for that new theatre.

Bullet Misses Lucas by Inches

Although the South may be safe for the democrats, it is far from being so for Supply men, whatever their political affiliation. A few nights ago while touring home in his Hakilu sedan, Harry K. Lucas of Atlanta was set upon by a strange bullet of unknown nationality and origin. Only through an error on the part of the culprit in estimating the indexof refraction of Lucas' wind-shield was a real tragedy averted. As it was the flying glass cut Harry's face in a number of places, the flow of blood being the first indication of serious injury. A search of the vicinity failed to reveal the person of the first part.

Recent reports state that Mr. Lucas has recuperated rapidly and is now back to work, but so far as is known the bullet is still at large and still going.

New Theatre Notes

WASHINGTON

Auburn—A modern theatre building is to be constructed on East First street. Walter Craft, manager of the Terminal theatre is having plans prepared for this building which will be 50x110 feet dimensions. The theatre will have a seating capacity of about 700.

Granger—Oscar Peterson will remodel the present Post Office building into a modern theatre. Work will start soon.

Seattle—A new $20,000 theatre building located at Greenwood avenue and 79th street has been announced by E. W. Houghton, architect in charge of construction.

Wapato—Joseph Blaschke of the Wapato theatre is arranging to increase the seating capacity of the building. It is probable that he will remodel and re-equip to a certain extent.

WISCONSIN

Milwaukee—A new motion picture theatre to cost approximately $250,000 is to be erected at the corner of Third and Wells street by the Saxe interests. The building will seat from 1,000 to 1,500 persons.

OHIO

Columbus—The new James theatre to be erected in Columbus at a cost of over $1,000,000 will have a seating capacity of over 3,000.

Cuyahoga Falls—I. S. Meyers it to build a $200,000 theatre on Portage street and Front street. Work will commence at once.

D.C.-D.C. Compensarc

Operating Advantages of Compensarcs

1. Steady strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value
6. Current easily raised and lowered
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit
8. Failure made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

G-E Compensarcs insure good projection

Because the use of the right compensarc on any circuit insures the proper current for the projection lamps, theatres so equipped can give their patrons pictures that are uniformly strong, steady and devoid of flicker or sudden fading of light.

Because, with the G-E outfit, it is so easy for the operator to handle the change-over between reels, there is even at this time no flickering or diminution of light on the screen. The outfit is so arranged that the arc on the second machine can be started and adjusted just before the first machine comes to the end of the reel. Then, by throwing a single switch at the actual time of change-over the shift is effected without the slightest break in the projection.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable. G-E offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service.

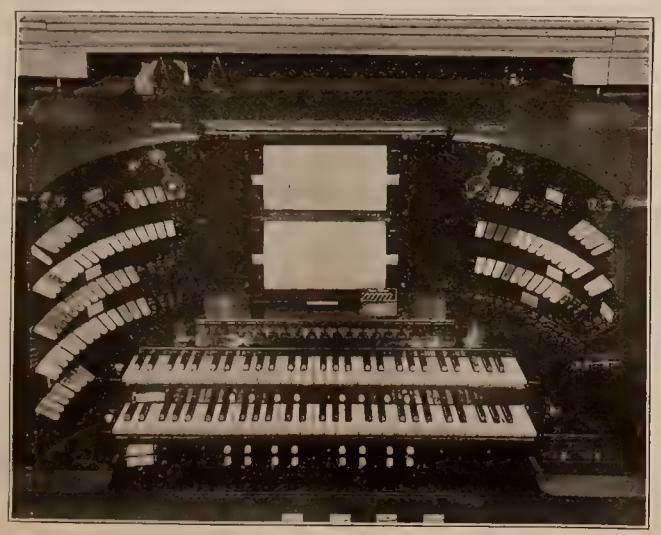
THE American Photo Player Company recently completed a new model instrument which is to be known as the "Photo Orchestra." The instrument is designed to combine certain features of the Foto-player and the Robert-Morton Orchestra and may be played with equal effect by hand or music roll.



The entire instrument may be installed in the pit of a theatre or divided and placed in different positions. When a pit installation is required, it is possible to have it finished in three days. This is due to several new improvements and the general simplicity of the electric system used in its construction. When the instrument is divided it is necessary only to increase the length of the cables and wind conductors. The console may be placed in the pit, the stops on the lower manual and some of the stops on the pedal may take one position, the stops on the upper manual and part of the pedal may take another position, while the piano and percussion instruments may occupy a third position either in the pit or as an echo.

Both manuals and pedal are equipped with double touch. On the first division (pedal) there are one 32-foot resultant stop. Six 16-foot stops, three 8-foot stops, one 4-foot stop, three trap stops, four couplers on first touch, chimes and six trap stops on second touch. The second division (lower manual) contains two 16-foot stops, ten 8-foot stops, three 4-foot stops, one 2 2-3-foot stop, one 2-foot stop, six percussion stops, six trap stops, one tremolo and five couplers on first touch, one 16-foot stop, three 8-foot stops, two percussion stops, seven trap stops, one tremolo and four couplers on second touch. The third division (upper manual) contains a 16-foot stop, eight 8-foot stops, two 4-foot, one 2 2-3-foot, one 2-foot seven percussion, five trap stops, one tremolo and four couplers on first touch and two 16-foot, two 8-foot, two percussion, four traps, one tremolo and three couplers on second touch.

In addition to this there are twenty-four combination pistons—eight for each manual and eight for the pedal; three piston couplers which couple the pedal pistons to the manual pistons, same number to couple all pistons of same number, two union silent couplers and two second touch "on" and "off" couplers.

The pipes and percussion instruments are enclosed in their expression boxes three inches thick, with individual shutter action arranged so that the last shutter must be wide open before the total amount of tone emanates from the boxes.

For the roll operator there is the double-tracker player with two different ways of bringing out solo effects from standard music rolls. This part of the instrument is operated by the usual roll controlling devices, twelve couplers and fourteen percussion finger keys. When the instrument is being played by hand the rolls are covered by the music rack.

The Value of Fire Protection for the Theatre Cannot be Over-estimated

Care Should Be Exercised That the Correct Type is Selected to Give Greatest Protection

A FEW sparks or a little smoke in a theatre can start a panic where hundreds of lives may be lost. In the Iroquois theatre fire at Chicago and the Rhodes theatre fire at Boyertown, Pa., the fire itself caused comparatively little loss of life. It was in the mad rush for the exits that hundreds lost their lives.

When fire starts in a theatre it is imperative to get it out quickly before the audience knows what is happening. With the fire out at the start there is small chance for damage or a panic.

Reliable hand fire extinguishers make this comparatively easy. Nowadays nearly everyone knows what a fire extinguisher is and how it works, and in the theatre adequately protected someone will catch the fire when it is small and put it out.

There are two types of hand fire extinguishers. The one-quart pump type uses a liquid which, when it reaches the fire, is changed into a heavy gas. It cuts off the oxygen supply and puts it out. The soda-acid type generates carbon dioxide gas in sufficient pressure within the extinguisher to expel 2½ gallons of water which the extinguisher contains. Each type has its separate field and is recommended for use on certain kinds of fires.

The one-quart type is effective on electrical fires or fires in highly inflammable materials, like motion picture films, paints, varnishes, gasoline, oils, etc. For this reason they are used in projection booths or where fires may start from a short circuit or in highly inflammable materials like scenery or painted curtains. This type of extinguisher will not freeze. It needs no recharging except after use and is very light and easy to operate.

The soda-acid type extinguisher is used wherever it is necessary to wet down the fire. This type should not be used on an electrical fire as the current may travel back along the stream and reach the operator. It is not efficient on fires of highly inflammable substances like motion picture films, oils, paints and varnishes as water only spreads such fires. Soda-acid extinguishers to be efficient should be recharged after use and at least once every twelve months.

It is difficult to make any general statement as to what fire protection a theatre needs. Many different types of buildings are used for motion picture theatres. It is obvious that the modern theatre building with fire proof construction throughout presents a smaller fire hazard than an old building of wooden construction.

Theatre owners should not hesitate to consult their local fire chief or insurance inspector. Fire departments are always willing to give advice in such matters and they can be depended upon to inform the theatre owner of the fire protection he requires.

Rialto Opens in Aurora

The opening of Aurora's new 1,400-seat house, the Rialto, was a real gala event in that city and attracted many out-of-town visitors.

One hundred thousand dollars had been spent in rebuilding a former skating rink into this magnificent up-to-date theatre by the Aurora Theatres Company, Inc., which can well be proud of the results obtained.

The officers of the Aurora Theatres Company are Frank Thielan, president; Jewels J. Rubens, treasurer, and W. D. Burford, secretary and managing director. Edwin Lewis, resident manager, is in active charge of the new house.

The entire lobby of the theatre was crowded with beautiful floral pieces and the house was full to capacity when the first program started.

Howells Projection Room Well Equipped

The exhibition room of David P. Howells, Inc., on the eleventh floor of the Godfrey building has been equipped as a model demonstration salon for Howells Cine Equipment company by Joe H. Hornstein, general manager of the equipment company.

The projection booth is equipped with three Simplex machines of the latest type and equipped with every available accessory designed for perfect projection. Mr. Hornstein himself is a recognized authority on projection and he has secured an expert projectionist to handle the equipment.

In addition to its uses as a demonstration room for Howells Cine Equipment Company, the room will be used for the exhibition of pictures for foreign buyers by David P. Howells, Inc.

The room is furnished with a Gold Fibre screen. The room's furnishings are wicker. The chairs are of the arm chair type covered with cretonne.

Arrangements have been made whereby the room will be used for testing various new appliances patented for projection purposes and new equipment found satisfactory will be adopted from time to time.

Joe C. Hornstein, general manager of Howells Cine Equipment Company, left last Friday on a week's trip to Cleveland, Chicago and Detroit where he will confer with the manufacturers of equipment which is handled in foreign territory by the Howells organization.

Formerly the motion picture studios gave the effect of flat, almost footlight scenes, but the new effect—an American made device—introduces natural lighting from windows, doorways and lamps, This enables sharp staring shadows to be produced in scenes of terror or soft luminous shadows to stimulate the pleasing evening lighting. Again the new lighting can be so arranged to concentrate on the acting and avoid the effect of camera consciousness which is introduced by the old camera for concentrating the attention on the actors. He says that art in the motion pictures arises chiefly from sequence of pictorial impressions but more especially from lighting atmosphere.

American Society of Cinematographers

A Page Prepared by and for the Society

Screen Credit

By PHILIP E. ROSEN

Mr. Philip E. Rosen was for three years the president of the Cinema Camera Club of New York City, and after coming to Los Angeles, organized the AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CINEMATOGRAPHERS, of which he has been the only president.

He has been a cinematographer for eight years, working with such stars as Leslie Carter, Valeska Surratt, Nance O'Neill, Theda Bara, Lillian Walker, Madge Kennedy, Maxine Elliott, Madam Petrova, and Robert Mantell. His most famous picture was the "Miracle Man," of which we all know. He is now directing at the Universal Film Company.

TO the motion picture fan the cameraman is the unknown factor in the motion picture. The faces of the popular actor and actress we all know; with the names of Griffith and Neilan, Tourneur and Allan Dwan we are all familiar; but when we admire the wonderful photography in a production, how many can say who made it? Do you know that this silent, unseen worker plans for the picture before the actor begins his work, by studying the script, helping to plan the sets and selecting location? When actual production begins he works long hours, often all night, carrying all responsibility for the photography, and often after that is completed, he supervises the cutting of the picture.

If he has reached a high position in his calling, his name appears on the screen together with that of the director and technical workers. This is a public recognition from producer and director. Then—the picture goes to the exhibitor. When it is thrown on the screen usually the name of the cinematographer has been cut out, to shorten the picture five seconds!

We cannot believe that the exhibitor realizes the disheartening effect that this has upon the man who has put weeks and often months of enthusiastic study and labor into a production, only to have the exhibitor ignore his efforts. To a man of sensitive artistic nature this action cuts deep.

We are not working for salary alone, and appreciate recognition and encouragement from the industry and public.

The Work of the Cinematographer

By HUGH C. McCLUNG

Following are a few excerpts from a lecture prepared and delivered by Mr. McClung, a cinematographer of wide experience and unquestioned ability.

For 18 months he was with Douglas Fairbanks. Among his pictures made during that time were "A Modern Musketeer," "Headin' South," and "Say Young Fellow." Recently he made "Overland Red" and "Bullet Proof" with Harry Carey. He is now with David Butler.

PHOTOGRAPHY is the youngest of the arts, but there is hardly a branch of art or science that is not in debt to it. Drawing and painting have been greatly influenced by it, astronomy has been enriched by it, the meteorologist, the physiologist, the pathologist, the scholar, the traveller, not to mention the Army and the Navy, find it indispensable. Every day its importance as a spreader of valuable knowledge is emphasized and as a means of entertainment it has no rival.

In the early days of the motion picture industry, photography was looked upon as an ordinary mechanical process and no thought was given to the artistic side of it. How times have changed! Now hundreds of pictures are sold on the merit of the photography, the action of the play being decidedly weak.

As an example of the ignorance of the laity regarding the requirements of a cameraman, may I be excused for relating a personal incident? Not long ago we were engaged in making a series of scenes in an interior on an open stage and our work was followed with interest by several spectators. When we had finished one sequence and were waiting for a change of costume, one of the spectators stepped over in front of me. The following conversation ensued:

"What do they pay in your line of work?"

"Oh, from $75 to $300 a week."

"You mean per month."

"No, I mean per week."

"Gee, I'd like to get a job here taking pictures. Any chance?"

"What experience have you had?"

"Oh, lots."

"On the camera?"

"N-n-no."

"Have you had any laboratory experience?"

"I can't say I have."

"Have you a kodak and do you do your own work?"

"Not yet. Do you have to know all these things just to stand there and turn that handle?"

What is the first requisite of a good cameraman? Technical ability, for without this he could not accomplish anything. It seems hardly necessary to speak of concentration, for in this business more than in almost any other it is a most important qualification. Are these the only qualities that are needful? No; the cameraman must have speed, judgment, diplomacy, patience, ingenuity, resourcefulness and courage. The greatest necessity for speed is illustrated in the gathering of events of importance for the pictorial news weeklies, fires, accidents, etc., but speed is equally as necessary in dramatic work.

In viewing a picture replete with thrills, you have swayed to one side to avoid an automobile or given an exclamation at the near approach of an express train rushing head on, or you have "ducked" to escape the aeroplane which apparently swept right out into the audience. During all this you were sitting in a comfortable chair—where do you think the cameraman was? True, this is the spice and not the regular diet of a cinematographer's life, but, notwithstanding, there is hardly a day that passes in which there is not more or less risk.

How would you like to put on a life belt and be lowered down the side of a cliff to get a scene? Or with tripod and camera lashed on the hood of an automobile driven at 60 miles an hour by an inexperienced driver? Or with hardly foot room in which to balance yourself climb around a sky scraper for special scenes? Or ride the rods under a box car, photographing the "tramp" on the brake beam with the train doing 40 miles an hour? Or be strapped in an aeroplane with the pilot executing every fancy stunt he knows? These and many other risks are among the things a cameraman may be called upon any day to do.

Granted that your cameraman has all the foregoing characteristics, are these all the qualities he needs? No, and this last requirement of all is one which is beyond mere knowledge and skill. It is the power to give expression in his work to the imagination and emotion that is in him. It is a creative faculty which is the spontaneous outpouring of his inner, spiritual self. This is what it means to be an artist. For centuries multitudes have gathered about the works of painters and sculptors, uplifted and inspired. We of today are modeling with lights and shadows, giving you not only beautiful composition, perspective, atmosphere and settings, but we make each picture a living breathing example of the art of the cinematographer.

Do not infer that I consider photography the most important element that enters into the making of a picture—but there can be no great or successful picture without adequate photography.

We are striving "to make our work mean something more than a fat pocket-book; to express an idea, beautiful or strengthening, or practically helpful; to put something into the world through our work which will have permanent value—this is real success."

What the A. S. C. Is Doing

That is the slogan that is carrying the American Society of Cinematographers into a national campaign of education to prove to the theatre owners that the name of the cameraman is valuable to the screen.

Philip Rosen, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, is communicating with every theatre owner in the country.

"The name of a cinematographer on the screen puts him under obligation to do good work," said Rosen. "If the producer does not use the cameraman's name he is opening the gates for indifferent, slip-shod photography. If the exhibitor cuts off the cameraman's name he is using the soft pedal on one of the best advertising angles that any picture has."

Rosen has been largely responsible for the privilege accorded producers of using the crest of the society upon films photographed by a member.

The American Society of Cinematographers is regarded as the most exclusive organization in the world. It is composed of sixty-one Ace Cameramen who were invited to membership followng several pictures of unusual photographic merit.

Rosen, who was one of the founders, was a cameraman before he was chosen by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, to direct Universal features.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits | Music | Musical Equipment

Music for Your Theatre

By Charles D. Isaacson

IT seems as if we must all become musical impresarios! Men who innocently bought a motion picture theatre, find that there is so much more to the showing of the film than merely putting it on the screen, that they begin to wonder. There's the lighting of the house, the development of novelties and the music.

The last of these is a big enough subject to ponder on for many serious hours. Music and the motion picture have become such firm friends, that you can scarcely think of the one without the other.

You yourself recognize the fact. You are possibly using music yourself in some sort of way.

But you want to know more about music, you want to understand the subtleties of the art which has so powerful an influence on the soul of the audiences. You want to be in touch with the spread of musical interest that is entering the homes of your people. You want, in other words, to know something of the technique of music, something of the human aspects of music, that you may use it with a keener appreciation of its possibilities.

It will be with the intention of making you more intimate with music, that this department will be conducted. Except for the purpose of example, I will not attempt to give programmatic suggestions on random films. The cue sheets are prepared for that purpose. They are generally efficient, although for one, I feel that they are not always as well made as they might be.

I am not writing to the musicians of the theatres, but to the owners and the managers. The musicians will find here set down the arguments they have sought, to win the more cordial support of their executives. But the owners and the managers will read the things they have been wondering about. Why this musical idea? Why all this fuss about musical settings? Why the effect on audiences when music is provided with the film? Why all the strange excitement to offer orchestras, orchestrations, musical novelties, operatic selections? Why concerts with motion pictures? What's it all about?.

You want your theatre to make as much money as it can. I am a musician who loves motion pictures and a motion picture man who understands music. But I am not sufficiently removed from the good old terra firma; I am not so much in the clouds that I am not always able to keep my eye on the box office.

Charles D. Isaacson

will contribute to the Music Department of

Motion Picture News

each week hereafter

Please, therefore, remember, as you read the things we discuss, that no matter how beautiful, idealistic, uplifting, developing, improving the articles may be, there is behind every remark the question, "Will it make money for the exhibitor?" Of course there are some things which seem at a distance from the pocket-book; and for that very reason are ever so much better money-makers.

You must have vision to use music most profitably. You must have imagination enough to be able to think further than each individual performance. You must have a mind that can think of developments and evolutions and possibilities.

It takes genius to recognize the difference between a film with and without music. I have seen pictures, which in the projection room were uninteresting, transformed under the influence of a fine musical setting. The worst picture can be made possible with a fair musical atmosphere. The best picture becomes doubly a classic, given with appropriate music.

The silent screen calls for a voice, and that voice is music.

You feel that if the screen could talk like the stage, there would be nothing further to ask. But it can't, and it is better that it can't. People don't like to have the words put in their minds. They like to use their imaginations and use the words that are natural to them.

Now, music gives voice to a wordless speech. It gives utterance to a universal expression of emotions. If the film is happy, bright, cheerful, music puts the audience in the mood. If the film is sad, then appropriate music immediately gets the sympathy of the audience, and keeps them in the proper spirit. If the audience feels the emotion the actors are supposed to feel, the way is smooth. If the audience feels gay and the episode becomes sad, it is not always easy to change the state of mind. Of course great acting does have its effect on the audience. But great acting—any kind of acting—needs "local" applications to assist it.

In the course of further articles, I will develop this point. I am going to analyze the emotional effects of music, by showing incidents and experiments which I have conducted, thus pointing out to you in a reasonable, logical manner, the way in which you can adapt and adopt the idea. You will be able to understand the scientific reasons behind the musical setting, to judge for yourself if your cue sheet is right, if your musical director is using good material; and you will be able to suggest good ideas that will inevitably come to you.

It isn't necessary for you to be a musician in order that you be a good showman who uses music properly. It is only necessary for you to understand the psychology of music, its effects on the mind, the body, the spirit of men. It is only necessary that you have a general appreciation of the vast literature of music which is at your disposal to use as you will. It is only necessary that you have a little intimacy with the musical instruments so that you can intelligently decide for yourself whether a large or small orchestra will do, whether you ought to augment the daily needs on certain special occasions, or whether you can get along with a piano and violin and a singer, or whether an organ or an orchestration would be just the thing, or whether a phonograph or a player-piano would be a good substitute. It is only necessary that you have a trifling acquaintance with the musical activities of the country, so that you can go ahead and fit your offerings into the groove of necessities and demands.

It is my earnest belief that you can use music as an advertisement for your theatre—making it your definite and fixed aim to capitalize for yourself that amazing in- terest in music, that unprecedented desire among the people to get acquainted with music, that insatiable appetite for a feast of melody and harmony! If the people want to hear music and are willing to go out and pay for it, why should it not be to YOUR hall that they turn? Why should your theatre not be made a greater-theatre, a more genuine entertainment place? If the offering of good music will make for bigger audiences, you will give it greater attention. Most of the theatre people are opportunists. When they see a chance, they take it. They are not held to hard and fast (and often foolish) traditions and rules. The industry is not old enough to be tradition-musty yet!

Let us therefore take a little trip through music-land. Let us examine the exhibits in the case. Let us observe what some of the leaders are doing with music. Let us find the connection between the screen and the muse, so that we can talk of it ourselves. Let us make sure that people want music, and then figure how to offer the best supply for the demand, to the profit of our box-office.

Let us set about making your theatre a veritable community center, where people will want to congregate.

Next week we will get acquainted with music in respect to its being able to create emotions. We will call the next article "Music and a Wild Chase."

. . . . .

(Mr. Isaacson will be glad to hear from exhibitors who have any questions or suggestions to present to him. Tell him what you think of this department. Tell him what you have been doing in music—why you did it, or didn't do it; any problems of a musical character that confront you. You may address Mr. Isaacson in care of Motion Picture News, and he will personally answer your letters, using the interesting problems in this column for other exhibitors who might find themselves in similar situations.)

ASK ISAACSON WHAT TO DO

These articles tell a continuous story of music which can be turned into money in motion picture theatres.

If you are ahead of the story—if you have some specific music problem, if you have a special music query—ask Mr. Isaacson. He will answer you personally.

Information about instruments, kinds of music, musicians, scores, operas, symphonies, orchestras, travelling companies, etc., will be gladly supplied as part of the NEWS Music Service.

"Good Music is Essential to Good Pictures"

—DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

In the biography of Mr. Griffith Issued by the Exhibitor's Trade Review the famous Director says—

"Special music for the photo-play? Very essential. Indeed quite indispensable. The best of pictures would seem tame without musical accompaniment. In my judgment it is necessary for an orchestra to play throughout the entire picture, in order to give the various themes adequate representation."

THE ESTEY THEATRE ORGAN

is used in the largest motion picture houses—such as the Capitol in New York. It is also a boon to smaller houses that cannot maintain a number of musicians, because the Estey plays every type of music with all the effect of a full orchestra—yet one man can operate it.

An Estey is not as expensive as you may have thought. Ask us what it will cost to install one in your theatre—no matter what its seating capacity.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Hiawatha's Melody of Love," by Geo. W. Meyer. A quaint Indian waltz ballad. (J. H. Remick & Co.)

2—"On Miami Shore," a beautiful and harmonious waltz. (Chappell & Co.)

3—"Hold Me," a fox trot, by Art Hickman, writer of "Rose Room Fox Trot." (Sherman Clay & Co.)

4—"Cannibal Carnival," danse barbarique, most appropriate for cannibalistic scenes and yet it is not of the usual oriental style. (Belwin, Inc.)

5—"Bohemia," a one-step, by Ethel Broaker. (The Boston Music Co.)

6—"Adolescence," by F. C. Collinge, a beautiful number of rather a light character, available for love themes, society drama, etc. (Belwin, Inc.)

7—"Everybody's Buddy," a fox trot, going great in New York. (Stark & Cowan, Inc.)

8—"I'm a Dreamer that's Chasing Bubbles," by Little-Magine. (Jack Mills, Inc.)

9—"Please," a ballad fox trot, by Lee S. Roberts, a sequel to "Patches." (G. Schirmer.)

10—"La Veeda," a Castillian fox trot. The only one of its kind. (J. H. Remick.)

That Cat-Step

Belwin, Inc., has just issued a composition entitled "That Cat Step." It is a number of unique musical construction to which the famous ballet master, Mr. Alexis Kosloff, has adapted a ballroom dance bearing the same name, "That Cat Step."

The number is composed by Louis Breau, and Ray Henderson. It is an appropriate number for motion picture musicians when accompanying cabaret and society scenes. In every case where cabaret scenes predominate musicians resort to fox trots, one-steps, etc., and the use of "That Cat Step" music for such occasions will undoubtedly give elaborate cabaret scenes a new and novel coloring which will be most appropriate and interesting for the audience.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

(Two Christie and Three Gayety Comedies—One Reel Each)

THESE comedies hit a higher average than some of the one-reelers reviewed recently. They are short and snappy and are sure to act as a tonic for the mind, especially in the coming hot weather when the lighter form of entertainment is sought for.

The Christie Comedies are, "A Home Made Hero," featuring Eddie Barry, Dorothy Devere and Carl Rodney, showing the popularity of a young "would-be" life saver with the ladies, until it is discovered that he cannot swim, when he becomes decided unpopular and "That Darn Yarn," featuring Bobby Vernon with Vera Stedman. The latter comedy has an amusing story in which a young wife becoming suspicious of her husband, who has a passion for poker parties, determines to find out his haunts. When her loved one leaves home on one of his rampages, she places a ball of yarn in his pocket, the trail from which leads the devoted wife into many difficulties as she proceeds through the streets winding and rewinding.

The Gayety comedies are "Dry and Thursty" featuring Billy Bletcher with Vera Raynolds, the title being explanatory of its story, "Calling His Bluff," featuring George Ovey, showing the way in which a young wife gets even with her husband who is a bit wayward and "Dropped Into Scandal," featuring George Ovey, who gets himself into a lot of difficulties because of his flirtatious ways.

The comedies are not of the rough, slapstick variety but are rather of the farce comedy element, having a pretty little story around which the action evolves.

The comedians are surrounded with the usual quota of pretty girls in many of the comedies, whose beautiful forms and vivacious manners act in splendid contrast to the comedy work done by the principals. Frank Leonard.

"The Man Who Lost Himself"

(Feature Production Starring William Faversham—Produced by Selznick)

IN "The Man Who Lost Himself" William Faversham has found a vehicle which fits his personality to excellent advantage and which will provide entertainment for most audiences despite the fact that the production sags to a considerable degree toward its tag and is rather illogical when it comes to plot.

The idea that an American "drummer" could impersonate an Englishman to such an extent that the latter's immediate relatives including his mother and wife would not discover his identity is hardly possible no matter how much physical resemblance the two might have but it does provide an opportunity of plunging the characters of the story into a lot of interesting incident and carries suspense up to the time when it becomes necessary to make provision for the culmination of the eternal romance. From this point on the picture is mechanical and uninteresting.

However so much that is really first class has transpired previously that the offering may be considered better than an average program feature.

The star is somewhat theatric at times and the camera does not treat him any too kindly but he plays with more screen finesse than in "The Silver King," and displays a skill as a comedian that is entirely commendable.

The cast which has been provided in Mr. Faversham's support is flawless with special credit being due Mrs. De Wolfe Hopper as the wife of the lord whom the American impersonates.

The direction is decidedly old-fashioned, too many long shots of no particular value being made and the photography might be better. These points are, however, probably minor when considered from an audience viewpoint.

The story itself is unusually well-knit, its logic not being considered. An American salesman stranded in London bears a striking resemblance to a dissolute English lord. The two meet. The Englishman gets the American drunk, changes clothes with him and sends the Yankee to his home with a letter telling him to become Lord Rochester and then commits suicide. The salesman displays good business judgment and thereby saves the impoverished Rochester family their possessions, falls in love with the dead lord's wife and at last confesses to the impersonation. In the end he marries the widow.

The picture is an adaptation of the novel by H. de Vere Stacpole with Clarence Badger directing. J. S. Dickerson.

"Father's Close Shave"

(Bringing Up Father Series—Pathe—Two Reels)

THE second of the "Bringing Up Father" series of comedies, entitled "Father's Close Shave," has not come any closer to the bull's eye than the first which went wide of the mark. The weakness appears to be in the material, there being no semblance of a story. The comedy is devoid of humorous incident because there are no situations. The cast, headed by Johnny Ray, puts a great deal of effort in striving for spontaneity but no results are obtained. If they could only get father doing something which is really funny there would be no question of the pieces getting over.

As in the initial offering a prologue and epilogue are introduced which show a group of negro boys reading the funny page, and the intervening action disclosing the George McManus figures humanized. Father is in "dutch" again with his better half and he goes through several circus stunts which are too obviously planted to bring forth laughter. Instead of the piece developing with an idea it seems as if the players are waiting for something to do. The result is it has an uneven appearance. Some girls cutting didoes on the beach are more interesting than the funmakers. Comedy business is lacking throughout.

Johnny Ray is funny when he indulges in his peculiar laugh, but there are times when he gives too much attention to mugging. As the cartoons are familiar to most newspaper readers, they will undoubtedly have a drawing power. But they won't set a house rocking with laughter unless some ideas are incorporated. —Laurence Reid.

The paper shortage is again responsible for the non-appearance of Exhibitors' Box Office Reports in this issue, the Release Pages only appearing.

Let us hope that conditions will aright themselves in the near future so that these pages may appear complete, and the valuable information they contain be a help to those who are always seeking the best in their particular end of the industry.

"The Complete Plan Book"—Reviews and Ad Aids

"THE WONDER MAN"
(Robertson-Cole)

Picture Carries Interest and a Colorful Personality

THE exhibitor who books this feature should look first for its exploitation possibilities. The name of Georges Carpentier means much. The Frenchman makes his screen debut in "The Wonder Man" which is simply a made-to-order picture. In fact its sole purpose is to convey to the public an idea of his fighting quality. And if a story is expressly manufactured for him, which on its surface may be timeworn in theme and treatment, nevertheless the plot will be subordinated to personal interest in the star.

People will want to see what kind of a fellow he is—how capable an actor and fighter. The story may "go hang" under these circumstances. His sponsors, however, have chosen the right material since he is presented in a mystery romance of an international flavor. He plays the part of a French Secret Service agent whose purpose is to hunt down the parties who are profiteering at the expense of his government. It seems as if too much stress is laid upon making him the object of unwarranted suspicion. While the plot is on its vacation, Monsieur Carpentier indulges in some generous samples of his fistic profession. The villain is the amateur heavyweight of the club and he challenges the star for pugilistic honors.

The fight between them is the outstanding feature and certainly will prove entertaining. Grouped around the ring are thousands of gentlemen sports, and Georges is having the worst of it until a note is slipped to him that his sweetheart wants him to win. Then he makes short work of his opponent. His agility in the ring is going to gain him plenty of admirers. And when the plot is re-introduced his real identity is established and the culprits are caught. The continuity is jerky occasionally, but the actor-fighter impresses with his sincerity and ability. Faire Binney as the heroine doesn't have much to do, but her poutful expressions are appealing. "The Wonder Man" comes up to expectations. The fight stuff will carry it, while settings and all other details are on an expensive, lavish scale that will bespeak "class" to your patrons.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Georges Carpentier, heavyweight champion of Europe, makes his first appearance as a moving picture actor in the Robertson-Cole production, "The Wonder Man," which will be presented at the ———— theatre beginning ————. M. Carpentier is known as the idol of France and he enjoys the distinction of having attained world prominence while still a challenger for the world's title. Why he is called "the gentleman of the ring" is demonstrated in convincing fashion in "The Wonder Man."

The star, as the hero, plays the part of a French secret service agent. The plot carries the elements of romance and mystery and the action gives Carpentier opportunity to display his capacity as a boxer and as a sportsman of the first order. Included in the offering is a boxing bout which is remarkably realistic. The incidents are gripping throughout and the note of romance gives it a sentimental flavor. Faire Binney, who plays the feminine lead, gives a charming performance and the remainder of the cast are equally good. John G. Adolfi's direction is entirely praiseworthy. His action is swift and compact and he has provided it with good settings and photography.

PROGRAM READER

The idol of France—the heavyweight champion of Europe—Georges Carpentier, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Wonder Man." This picture marks the first appearance of the French fighter in America, not only as an actor but in the ring. He is truly the Wonder Man and after a survey of his fighting history not only in his fighting togs but in the uniform of his country, such a title does not appear unwarranted. "The Wonder Man" is a mystery photoplay which concerns a French secret service agent. And a pleasing romance gives the story much charming sentiment. John G. Adolfi is the director of this entertaining picture and among the players in the cast are Faire Binney, the sister of Constance Binney, Florence Billings and Robert Barrat.

CATCH LINES

See the idol of France—see the champion heavyweight of Europe—see Georges Carpentier in "The Wonder Man." It carries action and suspense and romance.

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL"
(Garson-Equity)

Colorful Production Carries Little Entertainment Value

EQUITY has gone to some expense in providing Clara Kimball Young with an artistic production and had a story been found that measured up to her emotional talent or one that provided an interesting plot the expenditure toward mechanical perfection might not have been in vain. As it is this tale of old California in the days of Spanish missions is mighty familiar and lacking in any vital quality. There is too much description for one thing. And the plot is burdened with unnecessary detail which makes the frail action long-drawn out. The theme is based upon the redemption of a soul, the heroine, a convent-bred girl, promising her guardian to marry the latter's wayward son and give him spiritual uplift.

But the role doesn't offer Miss Young a chance to appear other than a colorless individual who experiences untold suffering before she is reunited to her American lover at the timely death of her husband. She had saved the American from the Indians through some tribal custom and had nursed him through his injury. Before she is able to find happiness with him in the concluding scene, the action takes her through a series of tedious incidents. The continuity is uneven at times because stress is laid upon presenting some word-picture or emphasizing some point which has nothing to do with the action. The story carries none of that vitality or vividness so characteristic of Spanish life.

With the exception of the scamp, Rafael, played with effective dash and vigor, the characters are lacking in personality. And the frailness of the story, the burdensome detail are not commpensation enough for rich and colorful exteriors and settings. The director certainly hasn't failed with his atmosphere. The reproductions and costumes are faithful. But fine photography and picturesque backgrounds fail in giving entertainment values when the dramatic spirit is missing. Some may wonder at the scene which shows the heroine accepting her husband's hospitality and failing in her marital duties. And another may perplex the spectator which depicts a wild orgy on Rafael's hacienda on the eve of his wedding. Where did the girls come from and where did they disappear to—when the exterior presents a scene in the wilderness miles from nowhere? Good editing would have helped matters a lot.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Clara Kimball Young, who is considered one of the screen's greatest emotional actresses, will appear at the ———— theatre the week of ———— the ———— in the Equity picture, "For the Soul of Rafael." This is an adaptation by Dorothy Yost of Marah Ellis Ryan's novel of California in the days of Spanish missions. It is a stirring romance—one that may be called an ideal vehicle for the expression of the star's personality and talent. Her dark beauty enables her to establish a perfect characterization. There is a spiritual quality in this tale which really furnishes the theme.

The star plays the part of a convent-bred girl who is pledged by her guardian to marry the latter's son, Rafael, and watch over his soul during her lifetime. Marta is deeply religious and when she discovers that Rafael is a wastrel who only lives for worldly things it is a stab at her heart, especially when she realizes that she is in love with an American adventurer, Keith Bryton. She nurses the latter when he is wounded by the Indians and a ring is given to him which has a special significance in matters of love. Marta is unhappy with her husband and this feeling is particularly acute when Bryton comes back into her life. She is released from her pledge when Rafael is killed and so she is able to find love and happiness with the American. The picture is rich in scenic backgrounds and appropriate settings. And it is interpreted by a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

One of the most artistic productions of the year will appear at the ———— very shortly under the title of "For the Soul of Rafael." This is an Equity picture starring one of the screen's most popular stars, Clara Kimball Young, and it permits her opportunities to display her colorful personality and rare emotional talent. The story is laid against a background of California mission life—at a time in the history of the state when the Spaniards were settlers. The star plays the part of a convent-bred girl who goes out into the world under a pledge to save the soul of the man she has promised to marry. The events take her through a series of dramatic situations and climaxes with the dominant factor being the element of romance. Beautiful exteriors punctuate the action with every scene. There is considerable appeal in the atmosphere. Watch for further announcements concerning this treat of the season.

"DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN"
(Vitagraph)

Character Development Emphasized in Interesting Picture

THIS picture may be found to have the unique fault of being too good for the average audience. For it is a production in which carefully and logically developed characterization is emphasized to the exclusion of vigorous physical action. It is, however, a splendid picture of its type. Alice Joyce is one hundred per cent satisfying, Robert Gordon has given his difficult role the exact shading required, and Crawford Kent is just as good. To Lucien Hubbard should be given the credit for the psychologically-perfect development of the story. The good sequence and the character—revealing sub-titles help a lot to make it a feature of the most artistic class.

The story is by Albert Payson Terhune and the locale is New York City—first picturing its society life, and later shifting to the East Side, where the young couple, reduced in circumstances, fight against poverty. Alice Joyce is the self-sacrificing wife, and Gordon the husband, selfish and self-centered without knowing it. He leaves his wife, at her own insistence, poverty-stricken and alone, to sell his invention in the West, and returns wealthy to find himself a father. But his wife, haunted by the fear of further poverty refuses to leave her tenement home. A former suitor of the wife's, who has played the kind Samaritan, unknown to her, steps into the story and the star is forced to choose between the two in the climax. The mutual love of their infant son forces husband and wife to forget their quarrels. You may therefore have a vague feeling that the picture did not end right. For the lonely bachelor is made more sympathetic than the selfish husband.

The direction is as high class as the cast, and with such a good basic story, and the well-presented series of incidents, it should go big with the higher class of picture patrons. The atmosphere is well created, as the picture was made in New York.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Scenario by Lucien Hubbard.
Directed by George Terwilliger.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Beginning ———— "Dollars and the Woman," an Alice Joyce picture, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre. Following close upon "The Sporting Duchess," a picturization of a Drury Lane melodrama, in which Miss Joyce starred, this latest picture shows the versatility of the star. For she is not an English noblewoman, but an everyday American wife, who is trying to help her inventor-husband on the road to success. In the cast are Robert Gordon and Crawford Kent as well as Jessie Stevens.

The story is by Albert Payson Terhune, whose works, both in the daily press of the country and in the national magazines, are well known to thousands of readers. In this picture he tells the story of an American family who have become suddenly reduced in circumstances. For a year young Mrs. Hillyer, played by the star, is forced to economize. Once the leader of society's younger set, she now lives in a tenement in New York's East Side. And when riches do come to the Hillyer family once more, she is afraid to enjoy them, for she has been branded with the dread of poverty and prefers to save lest she should be forced to go through her purgatory once more.

This remarkable story of the gradual change of character in both husband and wife, constitutes the greater part of this picture. But there is a heart interest little love story running through it. And there is no lack of comedy—as when the young father brings his six months' old boy a baseball bat and glove. "Dollars and the Woman" is going to please even those who thought Miss Joyce could never equal her performance in "The Sporting Duchess."

PROGRAM READER

You can't analyze some things, and you can't explain why "Dollars and the Woman," which will be seen at this theatre on ———— is going to be such a success. One of the reasons is Alice Joyce, the star, and if you do not already believe this beautiful actress to be the screen's most attractive personality, you will after you see this picture. Another reason is the story, by Albert Payson Terhune. It is a timely and absorbing story of American life—timely, because it treats of the reckless spending of thousands and the hopeless saving of millions; and absorbing because it is a masterful romantic drama from a master pen. With an elaborate supporting cast, including Robert Gordon, and directed by George Terwilliger, it makes a picture that will be hard to equal.

SUGGESTIONS

Devote a great deal of your advertising to the Alice Joyce following. Show a lobby photograph of her if possible, and use some of the stills of the star in your program. For a teaser campaign you could dwell upon the economy angle. If there are grocery or butcher stores with which you could tie up, this card would look well in the window: "Economize," says Alice Joyce, star of "Dollars and the Woman. "Ditto," say we also. "Come in, etc." Emphasize also the economy angle in your catch lines.

CATCH LINES

What do you fear most? Alice Joyce, star of "Dollars and the Woman," feared poverty until it made her a miser.

Alice Joyce in "Dollars and the Woman," is a story that hits the question uppermost in your minds squarely on the head. The question? Oh, the H. C. of L.

"THOU ART THE MAN"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Warwick Starred in Average Romantic Drama

ABOUT half of this picture is most praiseworthy due to the fact that the atmosphere of the South African diamond mines where the story is laid has been faithfully reproduced, but the remainder is commonplace romantic stuff with an attempt at times at comedy which fails to get over.

For entertainment, the production depends largely on that which is shown, probably authentic too, of the ways of the people who mine diamonds rather than on the basic plot which is the w.k. variety in which the hero falsely accused of being implicated in a robbery, goes to prison to protect the brother of the girl he loves with the truth becoming known when the brother makes a death bed confession.

Robert Warwick is cast in the leading role as a soldier of fortune, but is not given much opportunity to display his talents. The story evolves about him rather than allowing him to participate in the action. Lois Wilson is an attractive leading woman, but she too is not given anything to do.

The direction is by Thomas Heffron from a story adapted by Margaret Turnbull of which F. E. Mills is the author.

From the standpoint of production the picture ranks high. Beautiful tropical scenes with painstaking attention to detail is coupled with the best of photography and does much to make the offering attractive. We assume that the picture was made in Florida, but nothing more realistic in backgrounds could have been secured if the company had journeyed to Cape Town. An ostrich farm, probably the one at Jacksonville is used in shooting some scenes.

All in all the production will slide by as an average one, suitable for any class of theatre. The title seems to us to be misleading and not suitable for the sort of picture it is, a romantic drama with a semi-educational background.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Robert Warwick, the Paramount-Artcraft star, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in his latest photoplay entitled "Thou Art the Man." This is an adaptation by Margaret Turnbull of F. E. Mills Young's story of the same name and furnishes Mr. Warwick with the most versatile role of his career. In fact he is called upon to interpret every form of dramatic expression and through them he capitalizes the title. As Myles Colthorpe he appears as a young English soldier of fortune who drifts to the diamond fields of South Africa. He finds employment with a pair of diamond smugglers who masquerade as leather merchants.

It develops that he suspects their real business with the result that he is discharged. He goes to Cape Town and meets Joan Farrant and the acquaintance soon ripens into love. Through her and he is employed by her brother who is also a smuggler. And when he is caught carrying on an illicit enterprise, the nature of which he is entirely ignorant, the authorities arrest him and he goes to prison for three years. Eventually the real criminals are apprehended and Calthorpe finds romantic expression again with the girl of his heart. The picture carries a wealth of adventure which is told in swift moving action, and the romance sends out a decided appeal. Mr. Warwick's company includes Lois Wilson. Thomas Heffron directed.

PROGRAM READER

Robert Warwick, one of the most popular and talented actors on the screen, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in what is considered his greatest role, that of a young English adventurer, in a picture entitled "Thou Art the Man." This offering provides the star with enough action to furnish a dozen photoplays. He is called upon to express all the customary dramatic emotions. How he goes to South Africa and finds employment in the diamond fields—how he is arrested as a smuggler—how he proves his innocence after a prison term and regains his self-respect and the love of the ONLY GIRL is told in five reels of interesting scenes and situations. Mr. Warwick is supported by an excellent cast that includes the charming Lois Wilson. Remember next ————

SUGGESTIONS

Feature this photoplay as one rich in adventure. Bill it as a romantic drama which contains a wealth of action, a fine note of pathos, a fragrant breath of romance and the element of conflict. Bring out the star's name and tell that he was attached to General Pershing's staff during the war. Make use of the title and emphasize the fact that it offers the star the greatest role of his film career. Tell that it is the rugged type of story which should appeal to every movie fan who revels in swift-moving action. There is no special incident in the story which you can link up with any particular plan of exploitation. So the best way is to feature the star and tell something of his history during the war, and mention also his previous pictures. Run stills of Lois Wilson. She once took part in a beauty contest.

CATCH LINES

He was engaged in an illicit enterprise the nature of which he was ignorant. Did he permit a prison term to break his spirit? See "Thou Art the Man."

"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE"
(Vitagraph)

Curwood's Story Makes Vivid and Vital Picture

COMES a Western (call it a Northwestern) to the screen which for its picturesque quality hasn't been excelled in many a day. The scenic grandeur, the vast reaches of snow and mountains, the rugged character of the landscapes prove a rich background for one of James Oliver Curwood's stories of the Northwest. While there is no marked originality of theme or treatment in "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," the director, David Smith, has so embellished it with sure-fire touches and scenic effects that its familiarity never becomes noticeable. It is a simple story—this one of Curwood's. Carrying for its theme the pluck and courage of a lonely girl who is oppressed by primitive brutes, the plot accumulates in interest, sending out during its progression a fine flavor of dramatic conflict, a spiritual note, an element of pathos and some redblooded action.

All the ingredients which compose a story laid up in No-Man's Land of the North are there. You see good men—bad men—men, mean and cowardly—men, brave and bold, and Baree, the wolf-dog and two fighting grizzlys. It is a story of primitive passion, yet its spiritual quality is always dominant. A vicious trapper takes advantage of a friend's absence by abducting his wife and child. When the woman's reason returns she rushes back to her cabin. It is too late, however, for O'Doone, overcome with grief, takes up the long white trail. There is no murder in his heart. In fact he becomes a missionary whose sole object is to help the sorrowful—the depressed find themselves. The trapper in his haste to avoid the other man's vengeance journeys to the vast regions where there is no sign of human habitation.

The girl grows up and is disposed of to an assortment of brutes. Searching for her is a young Easterner who had gone North to forget his broken romance. He had found her picture and a note detailing her whereabouts. The girl's only protector is a grizzly. After a series of primitive conflicts between the good and cowardly—between the grizzlys—the girl is reunited to her parents. The vivid action, the vital elements of pathos and self-sacrifice make one forget time and place. The cast is excellent. Those who contribute lifelike performances are Pauline Starke, Niles Welch, Jack Curtis, and George Stanley.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the greatest of James Oliver Curwood's famous stories of the Northwest will be shown at the ———— theatre beginning ————. This Vitagraph production is different from anything previously produced even though it deals with primitive emotions as they are found in the great open spaces. It is entitled "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" and is presented by a cast of prominent players headed by Pauline Starke and Niles Welch. The atmosphere of the Northwest is finely suggested, the backgrounds of primeval nature blending perfectly with the primitive passions of the characters.

The story concerns a man who braves the dangers of snow and ice to rescue a courageous girl who is holding her enemies at bay with the aid of a trained bear. The figures of this gripping drama are composed of primitive men, beautiful women, and the action discloses men fighting against the elements, man against man, bear fights, and the long lonely trails that break the hearts of those who haven't the strength to survive. Accompanying the elemental details is a redblooded romance. David Smith, the director, has brought out all the spirit of the tale—the villainy and valor, the mystery and surprise.

PROGRAM READER

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone," which will be shown at the ———— next ————, is a vigorous two-fisted story of primitive men and women, fierce huskies and malemutes, redblooded adventure and romance, surprise and suspense, mystery and thrills staged in the vast open spaces of the frozen North. It is an adaptation of a story by one of the most vivid writers of the day, an author who is thoroughly familiar with the Northwest—James Oliver Curwood. And translated on the screen it takes on a vitality which will impress every picturegoer. The action travels swiftly and breathlessly along, punctuated with gripping incident that keeps the spectator on edge. Don't miss it.

CATCH LINES

Do you enjoy a rugged tale of the frozen North written by James Oliver Curwood? Do you enjoy primitive action enacted against backgrounds of primeval nature? Then see "The Courage of Marge O'Doone."

See "The Courage of Marge O'Doone"—a picture of the frozen North—where only the most fitting survive. A picture with redblooded action.

"HUSBANDS AND WIVES"
(Gaumont)

Slight Story Carries Few Interesting Moments

IN bringing Vivian Martin back to the screen, after a long absence, Gaumont hasn't provided her with anything startling in picture material, and though the producers deserve credit for taking her out of "glad" roles with which she was smothered in the past, the story is too slight to permit her to score with any marked success in a different characterization. The only appealing quality about the offering is found in the charming personality of the star. She certainly gives it tone even though she fails to arouse sympathy toward her representation of the girl whose sole purpose in life is to satisfy her vanity.

The plot is based upon the conflict of the sexes and attempts to show that a wife has every right to live upon a plane of equality with her husband. The idea is a good one which goes astray here because so much attention is given to expressing it in terms of platitudes. The subtitles are full of bromides and the husband cuts a sorry figure because he may be called a "walking bromide." One minute he verges toward cave-man ethics and at other times he indulges in sob sister advice given out in a most gentlemanly manner. The backgrounds of the story are laid in the South. The heroine is a Northern girl, quite sophisticated, extremely selfish, independent as she is vain, and rich in worldly possessions. She meets and elopes with a small-town artistocrat who conducts a general store.

The drama is found in his effort to tame her. And this is where the picture falters. The husband is a perpetual scold and considerable of the action is given up to his tiresome platitudes. An attempt is made to balance it with points of humor but these fail to score. Introducing a group of nondescript gossips whose object is to pick the young bride to pieces does not give it the necessary comedy relief. The climax depicts the newly-weds reunited after a brief separation, both resolved to look for the virtues and forgive the faults. It strikes us that the bride has a deal of patience to put up with such a husband. There are too many subtitles—one following nearly every scene. And most of them are talky. Had the picture been developed along comedy lines it would have, undeniably, furnished better entertainment. There isn't enough substance to make it effective as a straight romantic drama.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

By Corra Harris.
Directed by Joseph Levering.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Vivian Martin, the dainty star, who has been absent from the screen for a long time, has returned in a story, the character of which is ideal for her fragrant personality. The picture is an adaptation of Corra Harris' "The Making of a Wife," and presents Miss Martin in the role of an irrepressible young girl who jumps into matrimony with the same careless indifference that she employs in driving a motor car. The theme of this story is based upon the conflict of the sexes, and shows how a husband attempts to tame his wife with the latter a peculiarly obstinate bit of femininity. Olive Thurston is a Northern girl who, while visiting in Atlanta, meets and elopes with John Arms, who resides in a neighboring town and who belongs to an old aristocratic, but somewhat impoverished family.

The environment of the village palls upon her and she cannot live in harmony with her husband, who is always attempting to assert his commands. Finally she rebels and runs away to Atlanta, but after a time the social whirl is as tiresome as her former quiet life in the country. So she realizes that her place is with her husband. The author shows that the husband and wife must live on a plane of equality if there is to be a spirit of harmony in their lives. Miss Martin is appealing in her role and she is assisted by Hugh Thompson, one of the best known leading men on the screen. The picture carries a wealth of atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

Olive Thurston belonged to the butterfly type of girlhood and aside from living only to spend money and have a good time she was considerably independent. One day she met a man who fascinated her and eloped with him. But when she came to his house she was disillusioned to find that he was in the throes of poverty. Besides, the narrowness of the small town environment palled upon her. And if this wasn't enough her husband persisted in making her live up to his ideals. How she rebelled—how she made him realize that the wife is capable of sharing the same equal plane—how she learned to become a sensible, trusting helpmate is told in five reels of delicious comedy-drama. The picture is "Husbands and Wives" and stars dainty Vivian Martin. At this theatre ————

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a catchy title that can mean a lot to your patrons if you exploit it for its full possibilities. Tell that the story is based upon the conflict of the sexes as it is concerned in the home. Bring out that the husband in the case believed in the old-fashioned standards that a wife should obey, while his better-half was equally determined to assert her independence. Treat the copy in a serio-comic fashion. Tell that the picture is a comedy-drama of the conflict of two entirely different temperaments. Play up Vivian Martin, telling that she has been absent from the screen for a long time and has returned with all her fragrant personality and her refreshing talent. Bring out that she wears a number of exquisite gowns. Play up the atmosphere of the story, relating that the picture is laid in the South

"WITS vs. WITS"
(Hallmark)

Too Much Mystery in Confusing Crook Picture

THEY have filled this production with so much mystery that it is almost impossible for an audience to really enjoy it. Confusing to the highest degree is putting it pretty mildly, and making the whole thing a novel written by the heroine doesn't help matters a bit. It makes an extremely unsatisfying ending, especially as there was no hint that the girl was an authoress. One sub-title explains that we have been sitting through five reels of "fake" stuff. It all might not have been so incomprehensible if the various character had been properly introduced in the beginning. But they are not and it's practically a gamble who is who and why.

It opens with the star obtaining a position as stenographer with a gang of crooks. Then comes the dictaphones, hidden wires, and suchlike contraptions. For some reason a bank teller allows the chief crook to make an overdraft, and then commits suicide. The gang starts to make a get-away when the police are summoned by the girl detective and they are all caught.

It takes a long flash-back to explain the why and wherefore of things and give you an idea of what it is all about. Apparently the girl decided to turn detective after her father had been murdered by one of the thieves. Better continuity might have made the story more explicit, as would more human sub-titles. Some of these read like a scholastic essay. Again one flash-back is so crude that the idea will be lost to some.

A great lack is the absence of a love story. The romance that isn't there is going to be truly missed. Marguerite Marsh is the star, but is not given much opportunity and Charles Middleton, as the chief crook, plays it in such a way that it does not convince. On the whole it is a rather crude detective story with so many complications that it can hardly keep up the interest.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Wits vs. Wits," the latest production starring Marguerite Marsh, will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. This is an unusual story with a unique plot. It deals with a gang of criminals and their final arrest and conviction by a clever girl detective.

Helen Marsley, played by Marguerite Marsh, whose father has been murdered by one of the gang, decides to avenge his death. To do this she realizes that she must work on the inside. So she arranges to meet one of the thieves and through him obtains a position as stenographer in their headquarters. Once in the midst of them she sets out to discover their plans and by means of a dictaphone and hidden wires, is able to communicate the information to police headquarters. She learns that a young bank teller is under obligations to the master criminal, and that through him, a large overdraft on the bank is planned. Helen allows the robbery and then, as the gang is about to flee, she summons the police and all the crooks are brought to justice.

It is an entertaining story of the battle of one sharp mind against another, and reveals the astounding fact that even a pretty little stenographer may sometimes be able to out-guess the cleverest criminal. Besides the star, who is a siser of Mae Marsh, and who has already won an enviable reputation in filmdom, there is a capable cast and excellent photography.

PROGRAM READER

If you are tired of society dramas and wild westerns and emotional melodramas, we have a treat for you on ————. "Wits vs. Wits," a thrilling detective story starring Marguerite Marsh, will be shown at that date. This is a story that will keep you guessing and interested until the final fade-out. For it tells the tale of a brave little girl detective, who, to avenge her father's death, obtains a position as stenographer in the home of a gang of crooks. As you can guess from the title, it is then a case of one quick mind against another, and although the leader of the criminals is one of the most feared and powerful in all America, the youthful detective finally manages to bring him and his crew to justice.

SUGGESTIONS

You can't do much with such a detective story, except to get over the idea that there is a mystifying action throughout, and a plot that will keep them all guessing. If you have not run a crook play in a long time, bring over this element more than ever. Stills showing the star will be attractive, but it is doubtful if she has at present a large following. You might mention that she is a sister of Mae Marsh and has appeared in the Craig Kennedy stories and "The Phantom Honeymoon."

CATCH LINES

They were the cleverest gang of crooks in America, but Helen did not fear to live among them. It was a fight between a young girl detective and a master criminal, and the girl won. How she did it makes "Wits vs. Wits" one of the most entertaining pictures of the year.

Marguerite Marsh, charming and pretty, in a thrilling detective story.

The story of a young girl who set out to avenge her father's death and how she did it.

"THE LITTLE CAFE"
(Pathe)

A Pleasing Comedy With An Amusing Story

A PLEASING feature with many interesting moments which should amuse and hold its own on any program provided too much is not expected of it.

The locale is laid in Paris, Monte Carlo and sections of rural France which lends atmosphere as well as instructional value to the picture.

The story is of the French comedy type, which combines a rather clever story and good comedy situations.

Interest is aroused in many places, especially when the villains get together and scheme to get control of hero's money, but there are many scenes which were prolonged and caused dragginess in the action.

Max Linder is the star and does some good comedy stuff in many of the situations, but a certain sameness to his acting is noticeable which, when repeated many times is apt to become a bit tiresome. Still the old Essanay star injects a lot of pep and ginger into the part and has an attractive personality which is bound to get over.

He is seen in the role of a waiter who falls heir to two million francs, but is unable to give up his job, without paying a forfeit. This he refuses to do and is seen as the lowly waiter all day and part of the night. When his duties are done at the cafe we see him enjoying life among the elite in some of Paris' notable cabarets, the combination of waiter and millionaire leading him into many difficulties.

Our hero soon discovers, however, that he is in love with the daughter of his employer who is a bar maid and for this beautiful young maid he forsakes the demi-mondes and high life, tears up the contract he has made with her father and agrees to a more joyful one.

The cast is a good one and the direction is up to standard, especially in the comedy situations.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Max Linder, well known as an Essanay comedian some years back, is with us again as the star in "The Little Cafe," a Pathe release, and will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

The story is taken from the musical comedy of the same name which made such a pronounced hit in New York a few seasons ago and which was headed by Hazel Dawn.

Its aim is amusement in the lighter vein and in this it has succeeded, being a combination of pep and amusing comedy situations which are bound to leave its effects in laugh provoking enjoyment.

Of course you all know Max Linder and must remember some of the delightfully funny comedies he turned out for Essanay when he was a star in that organization.

Well, here he is back again in another delightful role. This time he is seen as a waiter who falls heir to two million francs but is unable to give up his job without paying the forfeit. And so he has to remain in his old job as a waiter by day and in the night enjoying the life of a millionaire in the Paris cafes.

The combination leads him into many difficulties and he soon tires of the bright lights and the demi-mondes. Why? Because he discovers that he is in love with his employer's daughter for whom he sacrifices everything, even the forfeit.

The locale is laid in Paris, Monte Carlo and sections of rural France which lends atmosphere as well as instructional value to the picture.

The cast is a strong one and is equaled by the direction which is especially good in the comedy situations.

PROGRAM READER

Max Linder, well known for his comedy work in Essanay pictures a few years back is with us again and will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, in a delightful comedy, "The Little Cafe," released through Pathe.

Mr. Linder's latest vehicle is full of pep and ginger and is taken from the musical comedy of the same name which played a long season in New York a few years ago and which was headed by Hazel Dawn.

In his new role Linder is seen as a waiter who falls heir to two million francs but is unable to give up his job without paying a forfeit. This he refused to do and as a consequence has to stick to his old job by day and in the night enjoying the life of a millionaire.

His new ways lead him into many difficulties and he soon tires of the bright lights and the demi-mondes. And all because he is in love with his employer's daughter for whom he sacrifices everything.

The cast is a strong one including Wanda Lyon who plays the leading feminine role.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this feature your one best bet is Max Linder, who was so well known a few years ago for his work in Essanay pictures.

Play him up as strong as you like and tell your patrons that he is of the French school of acting, which especially devotes itself to comedy action.

In advertising the feature tell them that it was a decided hit in New York, where it made a pronounced hit a few years ago, after being played in Paris and London. And do not forget to mention that Hazel Dawn was its star in New York.

As far as the story goes, it is of the average variety but in view of the fact that its aim is to amuse you might play it up along these lines.

There are some good shots of Paris and Monte Carlo which might be used to good advantage in your advertising.

CATCH LINES

Why did the young man who had become suddenly wealthy, give up the bright lights and demi-mondes for a bar maid? See "The Little Cafe." it will tell you.

Why did the young man who had become suddenly wealthy have to stick at his old job as a waiter in a cheap cafe? Let Max Linder tell you in "The Little Cafe."

Did his sweetheart love him for his money or was it just for himself? See "The Little Cafe."

What was it that made him love her? See "The Little Cafe."

"THE IRON HEART"
(Fox)

Conventional Steel Mill Story Does Not Convince

IF you can believe that big steel trusts are trying to absorb the smaller plants and maltreat the factory employees, you may get good entertainment out of this picture, for it is upon this assumption that the story is built. But if you figure that in these days the laboring man is pretty well able to protect himself, even against the biggest interests, you will find a rather weak foundation for this "big business" story.

"The Iron Heart" is an industrial drama that bases its appeal on the atmosphere it creates. Madlaine Traverse is the heroine who takes her dead father's place as head of the factory. A trust is trying to buy it from her, but she feels that to sell would be "to betray her people." So the trust, with Melbourne McDowell at its head, decides to use "dirty work" to get control. They bribe employees, start a little I. W. W.-ism and prejudice the heroine against her general manager. Whereupon the heroine shows spunk and, leading her army of factory men, takes the law into her own hands and sees that her shipment of freight gets to its destination.

This picture is not as heavy as others that Madlaine Traverse has done and she is not called upon to be very emotional. The cast is given little opportunity to show their ability. The love element is not emphasized and the romance runs along with practically no obstacles, the end foreseen from the beginning. There are some good scenes of the interior of an iron mill, and a unique thrill is injected when a man's foot is caught in a railroad switch with a train approaching. A battle for a locomotive between mill workers and yardmen provides good action as well as a pretty scene. We fear it is too typically a movie of the early days—with the heroine too heroic and the heavy too heavy to go big, but the factory setting gives it a push on the road to success.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Esther Regan.....Madlaine Traverse
Darwin McAllister.....George McDaniel
John Regan.....Edwin Booth Tilton
Cyrus K. Moulton.....Melbourne McDowell
Dan Cullen.....Ben Deely

Story, scenario and direction by Denison Clift.
Photography by Walter Williams.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Iron Heart," the latest Fox release starring Madlaine Traverse, will be the attraction at the _____ theatre on _____. The star will be well remembered by all the fans who have seen her previous work, for she has appeared in many emotional dramas and has earned for herself the title of "the empress of stormy emotion."

"The Iron Heart" is a thrilling story of the big steel mills into which is instilled a delicate love story. John Regan dies and leaves the mill to his daughter, played by the star, to keep up his work, urging her not to sell to the larger interests, but to remain true to the workmen, who have come to look upon the Regan plant as part of their own, on account of the kindliness and generosity of its owner. Esther Regan promises to fulfill the trust, but when the big steel interests start questionable methods against her and her mill, she realizes it is a man's job and takes a former employe of the trust, Darwin McAllister, into her confidence. The trust endeavors to hold up a shipment of freight which will mean the ruination of their smaller competitor, and how the freight is finally gotten out of the yards on the way to its destination provides one of the most thrilling scenes that have been picturized in many a day.

Dennison Clift is the author and director of this thrilling industrial story which accurately depicts life in a big mill town and also shows some excellent scenes of the interior of a big iron plant. In the supporting cast are George McDaniel, E. B. Tilton, and Melbourne McDowell.

PROGRAM READER

"The Iron Heart," to be seen at this theatre on _____, is an industrial story that is laid in one of the most interesting locations in America—a big iron mill in a factory city. Madlaine Traverse is the star, and you know what to expect from this clever, emotional actress. The picture is teeming with drama and romance, and to add to its attractiveness there is a thrilling battle between more than three hundred men all endeavoring to obtain possession of a locomotive in the freight yards. This has been made into one of the most realistic and gripping bits of action that have reached the screen in many a moon. Besides being thoroughly entertained, you will see scenes taken inside of a big iron works that will be a revelation to you.

SUGGESTIONS

You will probably know from your location just how to boost this picture. If you are in a factory district, or in a mill city, this production should have an especial appeal. Boost the industrial angle of the picture above anything else in such a case. If you have a neighborhood house, combine the star with the setting in your copy. "The Tattlers" was her last picture. Tell that she is one of the leading emotional actresses of the day and is one of the favorites of the screen. Get over the industrial element especially in your catch lines.

CATCH LINES

A thrilling story of a factory town and big business.

Madlaine Traverse, the emotional star, in a gripping drama laid in a mill town.

A thrilling story of factory life and employees who are as loyal to their employer as she is to them.

"THE TRIAL OF THE CIGARETTE"
(Steiner-Arrow)

Mystery Story Well Produced and Thoroughly Interesting

HERE is a high class mystery story that ought to keep an audience guessing throughout, and contains in addition a goodly amount of love interest and a few thrills in the way of action. It is the fifth of the "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries" series and Glenn White is featured. It is particularly effective in surrounding the murder of a girl with mystery, and, of course, it has a punch at the end, for a character who will be unsuspected in the minds of the audience is revealed as the murderer.

Some masked ball scenes help a great deal to work up the mystery. Two men, both of whom have motives for the crime, are dressed alike as dromios and covered with a black domino. They are rivals for a girl's hand and each accuses the other of the crime. The only evidence found at the scene of the murder was the end of an engraved cigarette and when everything points to the hero as the criminal, Tex, the detective, rounds up the true murderer in an unexpected manner. A flash back shows how the crime was committed, and, what is unusual in a surprise mystery story, there is no incongruity in it. The audience has been fooled merely by being allowed to assume too much, and not by any illogical construction of the story or by an illegitimate picturization or sequence. And they will like being fooled in such a way.

Ethel Russell, Vera Grosse, Eugene Acker and David Wall make up a supporting cast that does fine work, and the first named especially should please. There are some fairly elaborate sets during the masked ball scenes, which are noticeably well directed. It would seem, however, that they have neglected some opportunities to get over pleasing art titles. The cigarette incident should allow some good exploitation stunts. There are some good New York street scenes to round the production off.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The fifth of the "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries" series, entitled "The Trail of the Cigarette," will be the attraction at the _____ on _____. This is a mystery drama of the highest type, and one that will keep you guessing up to the very end just who the guilty party is. And it is a ten to one chance that you will guess correctly for the ending will prove a surprise to you and to everyone else in the audience.

Jessica Dale, a young girl, is murdered at a masked ball. At the scene of the crime is found the end of an engraved cigarette and beyond this there is no evidence. Edward Clive and Lane Bates, both rivals for the hand of the beautiful young hostess, are accused of the crime and each denies it vehemently. Clive is thrown into jail, for the end of the cigarette is similar to those found in his pocket. Hortense, loving Clive, begs Tex, the famous criminologist, to clear him, and Tex sets about, with his own unique methods, to solve the mystery. And when the mystery is finally solved you will receive one of the greatest thrills of your motion picture career.

This picture was directed by Tom Collins and the interesting story was written by Richard Goodall.

PROGRAM READER

Edward Clive smoked engraved cigarettes. Of course, like the good fellow he was, he passed them out among his acquaintances. And then when the body of a dead girl was found at a masquerade ball, Clive was accused of murder. For beside her body was found one of Clive's cigarettes. But then Bates also smoked Clive's cigarettes, and Bates had a good reason to kill the girl. Can you solve the mystery? Tex, the famous criminologist, did, and the picture makes one of the most interesting and gripping mystery stories you have ever seen on the screen. "The Trail of the Cigarette" is the name, and it is the fifth of the famous "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries" series. If you can pick out the real criminal at the end of the fourth reel, you will prove yourself a remarkable reader of character—and you will probably be the only one in the audience to do so.

SUGGESTIONS

With the cigarette angle of this picture you can get plenty of fine catch lines. A teaser campaign is also possible. A large tube in the form of a cigarette, with a red electric light at one end, would make a good lobby display. Arouse the interest in the picture by saying that they will not be able to guess the true murderer and solve the mystery before the fifth reel. You might stop the film at this point, turn on the lights and institute a voting contest of some sort. Offers of several passes for the one who guesses would arouse talk outside your theatre. Recall all the more famous detective stories in your copy and tell them that the "Tex" series is as good as all of them and better than most. Dwell also on the fact that they are original and hence, all the more mystifying.

CATCH LINES

Don't throw away your cigarette butts too carelessly. They may start a fire, and again they may cause you to be suspected of murder! If you don't believe the latter see "The Trail of the Cigarette."

"THE RETURN OF TARZAN"
(Numa-Goldwyn)

Fantastic Picture Fails to Meet Expectations

EVER since the good impression was made with the novel and fantastic "Tarzan of the Apes," the sponsors have tried to duplicate it by presenting a sequel called "The Return of Tarzan." Whether the fault rests with Edgar Rice Burroughs in subordinating his fantastic touch for unreal melodrama we cannot say. But this we do know—that if the spirit of the original was continued in its successor on the printed page, it is wholly lacking on the screen. Which proves that descriptive matter cannot be effectively translated. Tarzan looked better in the jungle when he was a boy and the effort to make him cultured in maturity somehow fails to be convincing. An exaggerated note of hectic melodrama is introduced in taking the hero out of the jungle and giving him a taste of civilization.

The spirit of the story is not conveyed until three or four reels have passed, when the onlooker is thankful that Tarzan is back with the birds and beasts. And even then Gene Pollar's impersonation fails in its psychology. He appears to be as contented away from the jungle as in it. The picture sort of bewilders the spectator at the start, due to the introduction of so many characters, with a few bearing no relation to one another. It seems to be the motive of the majority of them to compromise Tarzan in some way. And during an ocean voyage he is shoved overboard. This scene will be descredited by the close observer, since the ship is apparently in the middle of the ocean. Yet Tarzan with the aid of a plank is seen floating to his jungle beach with the very next shot.

Here is some reproduction of "Tarzan of the Apes." Dressed in a tiger skin, he jumps from tree-top to tree-top, becomes friendly with the apes, fights a couple of lions and sustains himself on the native fruits and plants. The encounters with the king of beasts are truly thrilling, for close-ups show him wrestling all over the ground before he is victorious. The action is always arbitrary and a sample of its coincidence is found when his sweetheart is washed up on the very beach, where he comes to her rescue and saves her from another man-eater. Two ambitious villains get their just deserts. And to all appearances Tarzan and the girl settle down to a life of happiness in the jungle. Harry Revier's atmosphere is adequate particularly in the later scenes. This picture will appeal to those who haven't seen "Tarzan of the Apes." Picturegoers who remember the latter will probably reflect that the novelty is lost in the latest release.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Tarzan	Gene Pollar
Count Di Coude	George Romain
Clayton	Walter Miller
Rokoff	Ormond Cortez
Polawitch	Lewis Sterne
Jane Porter	Karla Schramm
Countess Di Coude	Estelle Taylor

By Edgar Rice Burroughs.
Directed by Harry Revier.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Return of Tarzan" is the title of the picture which will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. This is an adaptation of Edgar Rice Burroughs' story of the same name and the author's colorful chapters of the hero, Tarzan, who was brought up by apes in the jungle, are truly given life, so vivid is the action—so vital is the characterization. Mr. Burroughs continues the adventures of Tarzan here after he has reached maturity. He places Tarzan in the realm of civilization far away from the jungle and conducts him through a series of melodramatic adventures.

But he is forced to return to the land of his nativity through scheming machinations of the villains. There he enters on his old familiar plane with the jungle beasts. And his resourcefulness and strength gained by a life in the open come to his rescue when he is forced to fight a group of lions. The scenes are punctuated with a varied assortment of thrills—some of which are of the breath-taking kind. There is an adequate touch of romance which accompanies the dramatic portions of the story. Gene Pollar is a splendid type for the leading role. His physique and manliness fit right into the popular conception of the hero. The photography, the wild animals, the natural settings embellish the picture with atmosphere and realism.

PROGRAM READER

Who hasn't read "Tarzan of the Apes"? Edgar Rice Burroughs, the author of the Tarzan adventures, has written a sequel which is called "The Return of Tarzan," and it takes up the exploits of the jungle boy after he has reached maturity. The screen version of this story will be seen at the ———— theatre next ————, and to say that it is an exciting, adventurous picture is putting it mildly. Tarzan leaves his jungle-land for civilization but events occur which place him back with his beloved apes and the wild beasts again. And there he is supremely happy, particularly so when his sweetheart is forced to take up her abode in the jungle. The spectator will thrill to the various fights which Tarzan engages in with man and beast.

SUGGESTIONS

You can get hold of some lithographs of Tarzan fighting with the lions which will make the attraction resemble a circus. Make much of the adventures and thrills which are found in the action and bring out that it features a rich vein of melodramatic scenes as well as some picturesque photography. Make use of the author's name and tell that the offering is a sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes." Exploit the picture as a fantastic melodrama which carries a deal of romance. Use catch lines which link up with the hardships which the hero is forced to undergo in protecting himself. The offering calls for atmosphere and this can be provided for in a lobby display suggestive of the jungle and a prologue, too. Tiger skins, shrubbery, palms, and all the customary effects will do much to attract patronage. If there is a circus playing your town try and link up with it in some manner.

"UNDER CRIMSON SKIES"
(Universal-Jewel)

Action and Incident Make Colorful Melodrama

IF one can overlook the premise that sends a self-sacrificing hero to jail for five years—if one can forget some comic opera gun-play between the revolutionary forces and the government of a South American or Central American republic—if one can forgive the action which shows the natives firing on the American flag and storming the American consulate, and look only for the good points such as a realistic melodrama offered on a ship guided by a masterful skipper and manned by a mutinous crew—one will find a satisfactory entertainment. For three reels the action presents as colorful and graphic action as one would want to see. The forceful captain who rules his men by brute force—the storm at night—the picturesque shots of rigging and sails and desks being swept by wind and rain—these are incidents which leave a good impression.

It is hardly logical that a man would take his wife and child on such a boat and the conflict comes when the skipper discovers that his consignment is contraband. When the vessel reaches port he is arrested for assault with intent to kill. He prefers to remain silent for the sake of the wife. Which makes him unusually heroic and unreal. However, he breaks jail and becomes the king of the beach combers across the bay—a position he wins by sheer strength from the fallen idol. This fight is one of the most graphic which has ever been staged on the screen. And Elmo Lincoln as the erstwhile skipper and Noble Johnston as his opponent make it something which will not be forgotten in a hurry.

The first mentioned is thoroughly in character and his conception of the captain is a picturesque study. Subsequently, the revolution breaks out which violates logic through the assault on the American consulate. Things are going badly for the republicans until they are reinforced by the beach combers. When the vicious husband expires from his wound the goodly wife finds solace with the skipper who is back at the helm. The scenes visualizing the shelter of the beach-combers are quite fantastic. The picture carries action a-plenty and a full measure of thrills which are sent out with quickness and dispatch. This may be a far-fetched story, but there is no denying its moving moments. The mutinous crew composes some genuine types. Frank Brownlee, as the leader, does much to make the action vivid.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Island Girl	Beatrice Dominguez

By J. G. Hawks.
Directed by Rex Ingram.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most colorful melodramas of the year is coming to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week featuring Elmo Lincoln. J. G. Hawks, one of the most experienced scenarists of the day, has fashioned a story which for plentiful action, suspense, picturesqueness and thrills has not been excelled in some time. The backgrounds visualize a schooner manned by a forceful skipper, Yank Barstow, and a mutinous crew, and a country in Latin America, where revolutionary propaganda is being spread by a group of natives. The boat is carrying contraband for these forces unbeknown to the skipper. When port is reached Yank is arrested for assault.

Making his freedom he becomes a beach comber where he rules over a band of derelicts through sheer strength and force of character. When the revolution is going against the republicans, Yank leads his beach combers in battle and the revolutionists are defeated. The picture builds in cumulative interest from the start and besides its colorful action it carries a picturesque appeal. The crew is composed of primitive men with the skipper the most primitive of them all. Mr. Lincoln makes a rich study of the leading role and his support, which consists of Frank Brownlee, Noble Johnston and Mabel Ballin, is thoroughly adequate. Rex Ingram directed this picture.

PROGRAM READER

He was the skipper of the most primitive crew of men that ever sailed the briny deep. He ruled them by brute force. There was a lady on board who could not understand his law that they only respected strength. When the boat reached port he was arrested for assault. How he made his escape from prison—how he thrashed the "king" of the beach combers and elected himself their ruler—how he came to the rescue of the lady again—how he found romance after eventful days lived on the ocean and in the turbulent environment of a Latin American republic is told in five reels of bang-up action. "Under Crimson Skies" is redblooded to the core and a thrill accompanies every scene. See the storm at sea. See the battle between two giants. At this theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You should exploit this picture as a colorful melodrama of the sea. Tell that J. G. Hawks has equalled Jack London in fashioning a graphic melodrama. Bring out that the action is vital and vivid with picturesque incident and that suspense accompanies every scene. What of Elmo Lincoln? Surely the steady picturegoer is familiar with his name. Tell that he is one of the biggest and strongest men in pictures and that this offering is ideal for him. If you can get hold of some stills which depict bits of the action, run them. Use atmosphere if you think the picture warrants it. The lobby can be fitted up with a ship's paraphernalia. Tell that it is a redblooded picture which will appeal to anyone in search of adventure.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

Organized for Your Success

Successful photoplays cannot be built on promises and publicity.

The motion picture has reached a state that demands organization, the big, intricate, highly specialized organization, which alone is capable of producing the type of photoplays that please the public and are successful at the box office.

The makers of Paramount pictures have this organization.

The men at the head of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation long ago had the vision to see that the day was coming when the public would demand that the producers produce photoplays and not merely manufacture movies.

The production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation did not spring into being overnight.

It is the fruition of years of patient toil, eternal vigilance, alertness to the constant growth of the motion picture art.

It is the fruition of the combined efforts of a corps of men and women who have blended the best talent and genius of the new art with a fine loyalty to an ideal.

Only such an organization, backed by resources which place every possible facility and aid in the hands of directors, authors and stars, is capable of producing the newer and finer type of pictures which the season now closing has conclusively shown to be what the public wants.

Only such an organization can be depended on, rain or shine, hot or cold, day in and day out, week in and week out constantly to make money for exhibitors.

One Group Will Sell You Out As Quickly As The Other

Let's talk some English without chewing the words. What are any of the various producer and distributor crowds giving you when they sell you a franchise?

In addition to paying for hollow, valueless franchises you also pay for the pictures they cover—many of them pictures you wouldn't buy unless the franchise forced you to do so.

Associated Producers, Inc., isn't franchising or sub-franchising anything or anyone.

Seven powerful producers—and there will be others—have burned all the bridges that linked them to other organizations and banded irrevocably together for a long term of years. Their productions will enable any exhibitor who wishes to be free and independent to hold his theatre and escape any organization's franchise yoke.

With our first release September 12th we guarantee a minimum of thirty of the most powerful productions the industry has ever known.

You do not have to be owned, controlled or throttled by us to get our productions. We have always believed and still believe that powerful pictures, independently and cleanly sold, guarantee the success and independence of any theatre.

The chief value of a franchise is that it makes you "human collateral" for the organization that sells you the franchise and that once securely franchised you can be—have been—and will be sold out by selfish individuals who measure you only from your dollar values to themselves.

The most striking feature of the entertainment, however, was the revelation of Carpentier as an actor. As a cultured, polished gentleman he has many opportunities for distinctive action, opportunities of which he takes full advantage.—New York Tribune.

ROBERTSON-COLE
SUPER-SPECIAL

Of the Patronage of Men You Are Assured---

And the Fair Sex-Read These:

New York Evening Telegram
By Jane Dixon

Last evening in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor Georges Carpentier appeared for the cinema championship of the world. Beyond preadventure of doubt his is no one-track talent.

The Carpentier picture was one of the biggest surprises Broadway has had in many a season.

We are wise to the ways of capitalizing celebrities—hundred-thousand dollar name— ten-twenty-and thirty scenario acting, scenery and support. It always makes us feel that someone has sold us a toy balloon and then stuck a pin in it.

Robertson-Cole has not so imposed on a hero-worshipping public. They have made it possible for us to see one of the most popular athletes of the day in action. This much we expected, but what we did not expect was to find in Carpentier a real actor, an artist with the finish of a French gentleman and the finesse of an habitual stage star.

M. Carpentier not only lived up to the title—"The Wonder Man"—he did more. He topped it. The Carpentier smile is bound to make the hearts of several million matinee maids skip a beat every time it lights up his frankly winning face.

The Newark (N. J.) Ledger
By Mrs. Theo. R. Marsters

Listen, girls.

Here's the chance for a perfect lady to see a world-beater of the prize ring in a real prize fight, without appearing at the ringside.

It is a chance in a million therefore that is offered to the ladies of Newark at the Strand Theatre to see not only the great French champion of the fistic art, Georges Carpentier, in a society play, but also to see a real prize fight, with that redoubtable gentleman fighting.

Mr. Carpentier looks much more like the leading man in a Broadway musical comedy than like a brutal prizefighter.

It seems incredible that the slim blonde youth who wears immaculately tailored clothes with so pliant and facile a grace, could really be the great Carpentier. And by the time you've seen him in the soup and fish you begin to wonder if there hasn't been some mistake. But there hasn't. Mr. Carpentier is the most amiable and winsome of prize fighters.

He has a smile so heart-warming, and he makes love equal to the best. When you see the French wiz in action, you realize what he actually is—a wonder-man.

New York Morning Telegraph
By Louella O. Parsons

Georges Carpentier in "The Wonder Man," was ushered into the Astor Hotel Saturday night for its week's occupancy of the Grand Ball Room.

One does not have to be up in all the fine points of pugilism to enjoy Carpentier on the screen. Neither does one have to be an advocate of this particular form of sport to appreciate the young man's technique as an actor. He has all the adaptability for which the French are noted and seems to grasp the requirements of the camera with amazing aptness.

There is interesting melodrama surrounding him in a story not unlike "Under Cover," although the action has been lightened with flashes of comedy.

The boxing scenes, the piece de resistance of any Carpentier appearance, though possibly only incidental, nevertheless is the real center of interest. No play embellished with a boxing match featuring the French champion could be dull.

Carpentier looks very little like a pugilist. He might be an idealist or a reformer, but no one would ever catalog him mentally as a reformer.

This Is "The Truth!"

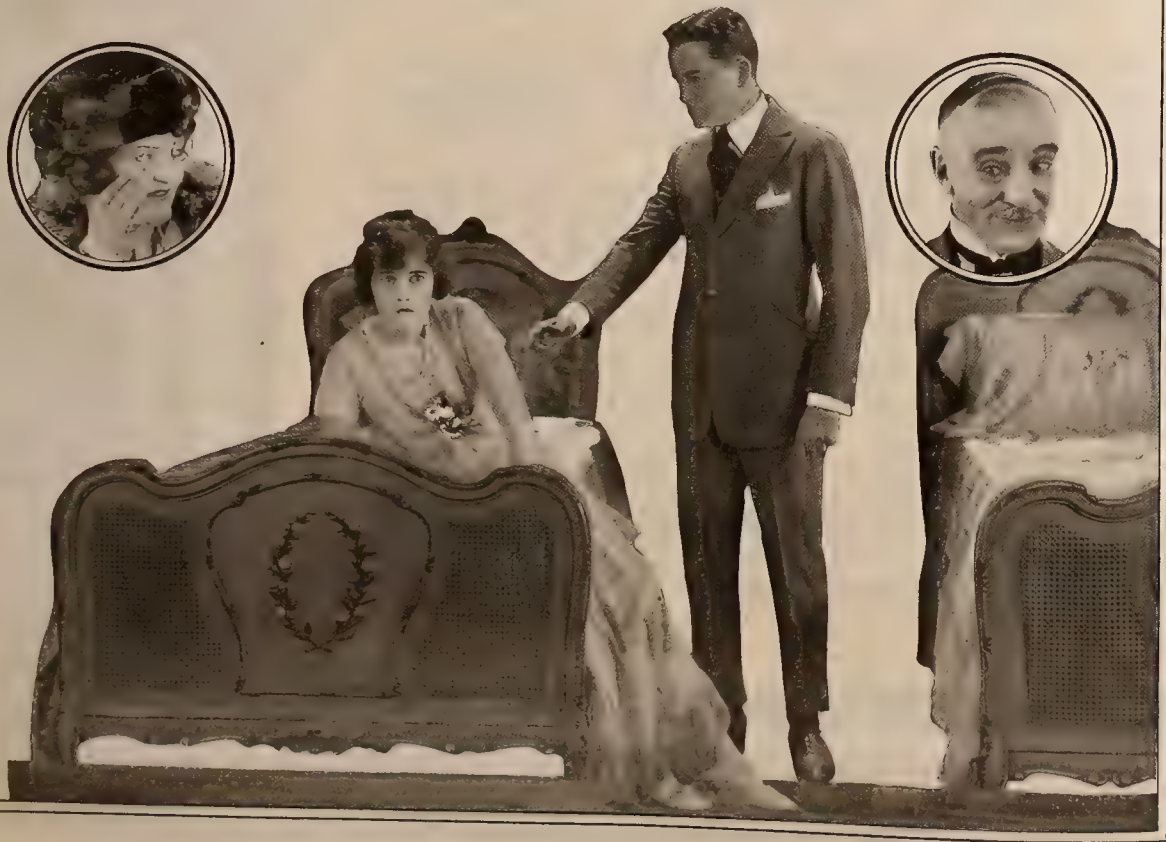
STAR: Madge Kennedy, whose delightful comedy mannerisms and winsome personality have endeared her to a vast public.

AUTHOR: "The Truth" is generally regarded as the best play from the pen of America's great dramatist, Clyde Fitch.

CAST: Zelda Sears, Tom Carrigan, Frank Doane, Helen Greene, Kenneth Hill, Horace Haine.

DIRECTOR: Lawrence C. Windom.

STORY: Becky Warder was an artful dodger of the truth. She told her husband flocks of little fibs. She practised on her friends and made "white" lying a fine and fascinating art.



Then one day all the half-truths, white lies and plain, downright whoppers she had told her patient hubby exploded and threatened to wreck their happiness forever.

Her best girl friend accused her of stealing her husband. A detective agency camped on her trail. Her own husband turned cold and repulsed her. There was nothing left to do but to go to her Dad in his boarding house in Baltimore.

And here takes place a final scene that will bring tears and chuckles from the stoniest audience in Christendom. The end is a surprise—a heart-warming climax to a remarkably entertaining picture.

Wisdom and Foolishness

IF habits were founded on wisdom most men would be much better off. This applies especially to exhibitors who have the habit of booking photo-plays without ascertaining the kind of posters that are going to accompany them. The one reason for booking the film lies in the profits to be derived from it. Yet the amount of those profits will result from several factors—of which the play itself is only one. Another factor, and a most important one, is the poster factor. Hence to demand RITCHEY posters when booking a film is to form a habit that is based upon great wisdom. Without RITCHEY posters the profits are problematical and questionable — with RITCHEY posters they are positive and real!

For the exhibitor the poster factor is essentially simple, for all he has to know is that the posters to be supplied are RITCHEY posters. That knowledge gives him assurance that the posters in question are the perfected product of the greatest poster advertising experts in the world. Which means that they are bound to have the maximum of advertising value! They are made from just one point of view—the viewpoint afforded by the ticket window!

But the time to demand them is before the film is booked—not afterward!

Topics of the Moment

Sincere Production

"HUMORESQUE" is another picture which will advance the photoplay in the public mind because it is sincerely done. It has some beautiful and exceptional touches which also lift it decidedly above the ordinary; but it is best characterized, we believe, as an outstanding evidence of sincerity in production.

Sincerity, it seems to us, is the one word which expresses good production; and there is still, today, too little of this mainspring of creative work in most pictures.

Sincerity means smooth continuity, sustained interest, true characterization and color, and a devotion to the little things as well as the big. It makes fine pictures without great stars, great names, and the lavishment of money in general. It is the true sign of strength and ability in production.

Money as the Yardstick

WE were somewhat astounded, recently, to hear a producer talk of pictures in terms only of money cost. We thought this era in production had about gone by. Is it possible that the considerable amount of new money which has entered the business recently has revived this mistaken idea?

The sheer weight of money cannot and does not make good pictures. Anyone, with any experience in production, ought to know that by this time. Nor can pictures be classified—as to their box-office capacities—by the amount of money spent upon them. Just a resume of the pictures of this year, or last year will explode this idea.

With money as the yardstick quality production will not advance any; it will decline. Money, spent recklessly in production, is a sure sign of production inability.

May we also point out this fact—it is a fact—that the producer who enters this business with the sole or main idea of taking much money out of it will never make good pictures. He may sell them well—for himself; but he won't make them well.

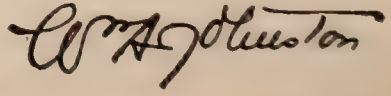
Let the man who talks millions promote corporations—if big corporations are necessary; the production of good pictures will rest forever with the man who has ideals and production ability and who makes money incidentally.

As for hiring such men—to make the pictures—no man can do that successfully unless he also has ideals and production ability.

Governor Coolidge

GOVERNOR COOLIDGE'S veto of the Massachusetts censorship will prove, we believe, of greatest importance to the cause of the freedom of the motion picture in this country. This highly respected state executive has a way of hitting true on every fundamental question brought before him; and his action in this instance will carry heavy weight with the executives and legislatures of other states. It goes without saying that he has and deserves the unending gratitude of this industry.

New Audiences



A DIRECTOR who has made a good name for himself was criticised recently for using archaic methods of production; and quite evidently the criticism is not only just in this one instance but applies too generally.

It hardly seems necessary to call attention to the fact that entertainment cannot get into a rut. Even motion picture audiences will not tolerate that. And, furthermore, the producer and the exhibitor today need not only the past but the future motion picture audience.

The picture must introduce new elements of artistic appeal and reach new heights of dramatic strength this year. This is no time to fall back upon pigeonhole methods.

Everywhere, today, the picture theatre is the theatre beautiful. Thousands of new and high-class seats have been added. New and more discriminating audiences must be satisfied.

It is time to look forward not backward; and that means a look—a long look—beyond some present studio walls.

Greatest Exhibitor Gathering in History at Cleveland

Upwards of a Thousand Exhibitors in Attendance at Notable Convention

WITH an exhibitor attendance increasing by leaps and bounds, from 600 on Tuesday, the opening day, to close to 1000 on Thursday, June 10, the Cleveland convention early gave proof of being the most enthusiastic and ambitious gathering of motion picture men ever assembled.

Dissension which lifted its head on but one or two occasions, and was as quickly smothered, but emphasized the fact that exhibitors had at last gathered for general betterment as a harmonious body, and that that spirit bid fair to reign throughout the convention.

From the opening session, and installation of permanent officers for the convention, through the report of the findings of the Committee of 17, and on through the following sessions at which a platform was adopted, the gathering went at the work in hand in earnest, businesslike fashion.

At the opening meeting, Tuesday afternoon, June 8, at the Winton Hotel, Sydney Cohen of New York was in the chair.

Permanent Officers

Henry H. Lustig, of Cleveland, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Northern Ohio, was nominated upon motion of C. C. Griffin, of California, seconded by A. M. Kramer, of Omaha, Nebraska, and recommended by Kules Michaelon, Buffalo, who spoke for the delegations of Buffalo and Rochester, Joseph Hopp, of Chicago, and H. Q. Alexander, in behalf of the Miami Valley Exhibitor's League. He was unanimously elected. Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta, Ga., was named permanent recording secretary and S. I. Berman, of New York, permanent secretary of the body.

A report from the Committee of 17 was called for, and made by Frank Rembusch of Indiana, chairman of the committee. The findings of the committee as to the attitude of producers in regard to producer ownership of theatres, follows:

VITAGRAPH—We have always believed that producers should produce and exhibitors should exhibit, and the two branches should not be mixed up. We own and operate no theatres. Vitagraph maintains that they are very strictly independent producers and distributors because they are in no way allied with theatres in the operation of any franchise system, cooperative or collective bargaining. We are heartily in favor of the movement and hope the exhibitors will organize 100 per cent. for the purpose of forcing all producers to get out of the theatre business. They offer financial and moral support to the movement.

PATHE—Heartily in favor of Patterson movement (the producers must get out of the theatre business) and stand ready in every way to further it. Pathe is distributor for the American Associated Exhibitors and Hodkinson Pictures, all of whom believe that producers should stay on one side of the road, and exhibitors on the other. The greater part of Pathe pictures are distributed entirely independent of theatre alliance, and the Associated Exhibitors is a cooperative plan of exhibitors with whom they have a contract to distribute. They own no theatres and have no desire to go into the theatre business.

UNIVERSAL — Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane both heartily endorse the Patterson movement. Universal has about six theatres in places where it was impossible to get firts run in a city. They agree to sell these theatres and retire absolutely from the exhibition of pictures providing exhibitors will organize and force all other producers to get out of the theatre business. They also view with alarm the various co-operative plans of marketing pictures instituted by exhibitors and feel that in time they will find it hard to market pictures on theopen market. Universal is willing to give any support exhibitors may desire to further this issue and ask only for the same opportunity to market pictures as any other producer in a fair and open market. They offer financial and moral support.

UNITED ARTISTS — Mr. Abrams stated that his company were heart and soul with the movement to cause producers to retire from the theatre business. Mr. Abrams believes that where exhibitors give long and non-cancellation contracts to any producer or distributor, that the exhibitor creates an unfair market. Mr. Abrams believes that each picture should be purchased on its own value separately and desires to sell his pictures on the open market one at a time. Mr. Abrams offers his moral and financial support but believes that exhibitors will never get together because they never did.

SELECT—Mr. Selznick is most enthusiastic in supporting the movement that producers and distributors get out of the theatre business. He would like to see the exhibitor dominate the industry because fair methods of trade would result. He does not want to go into the theatre business. He expressed his appreciation of the rewards that producing has brought him in profits and offers part of his business to the benefit of the exhibitors. All of the unfairness in the industry has come about because the exhibitor does not stand up for his rights. If one producer can take a piece out of the exhibitor, then other producers, as a means of self-protection, must do likewise. In establishing national co-operative plan, he did so because exhibitors seemed to want that plan of marketing pictures. He offered every financial aid. He will turn over his entire business on a 50-50 basis if the exhibitors so desire. A great organization of motion picture exhibitors would be the same as an insurance policy to every fair producer.

ROBERTSON-COLE — Stated that they were heart and soul in favor of the movement to compel producers to get out of the theatre business and would give every help to further this issue. They believe that the industry is founded on better pictures and whoever makes good pictures will and should merit the support of exhibitors. They believe that if producers go out of the theatre business, that exhibitors should go out of the producing business. They asked that we keep the screens open to allow any good picture to come to it. They believe that if a producer secures a large string of theatres

Cohen Probable President, Rembusch Fighting

LATE developments at the Convention, beginning with the withdrawal of Alfred S. Black's organization, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, following the credential dispute told of elsewhere, indicated that the Dove of Peace, was attempting to unshackle itself.

Thursday's sessions opening with a feeling of uncertainty on the part of the convention, of where the day's proceedings would have it standing.

Frank Rembusch, who had been working in seeming harmony with Sydney Cohen, came out in the open against him in the fight for President.

At the time of going to press, the betting favored Cohen as Presidential choice, with Sam Bullock for Recording Secretary.

Rembusch, however, will be active in fighting for a man outside of the industry—and there was a feeling he might bolt the convention his way.

Really accomplished, however, is completion of plans for the merging of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association. A $100,000 working fund will be raised by the exhibitors.

Alfred Black's open lecture Wednesday night opening up sore spots by attacking Sydney Cohen, Joe Brandt and Fred Herrington on "screen advertising" widened the breach between factions and prepared for "big doings" on Thursday.

Business Tactics, Harmonic Spirit Cements Showman Body

Feeling Rife That Producer-Ownership of theatres Has Been "Strafed"

each planted in strategic points in first-run houses, he is able to undermine the independent producer, and smaller producer and distributor. They do not own any theatres and only desire to produce pictures in a fair and open market. They hope the exhibitors will organize and force this issue. They will assist exhibitors in the movement.

FIRST NATIONAL—Mr. Williams has been most enthusiastically in favor of this movement since its inception. He states that First National exhibitors are organized to protect their theatre interests. They are willing to sign an agreement that their members will not go into the theatre business and compete with their customers. They believe there should be a great exhibitor organization stronger than any producer or any co-operative plan, so that we can force the industry to play fair at all times with each other.

METRO—Committee interviewed Mr. Marcus Loew, who immediately expressed his hope that we would form ourselves into a powerful national organization, that would command the respect of every producer and distributor. Mr. Loew explains his entry into the producing business by saying that he was conscious of various alignments surrounding his theatres and decided he must, for his own protection, take over a producing company, so as to insure product for his theatres. He stated he had put millions into Metro, and doubts whether it will make him any money, but he will be sure of pictures for his house. Mr. Loew is first an exhibitor, then a producer. He calls attention to the fact that exhibitors are in the habit of only supporting the large producers and distributors, and that his salvation and the salvation of every exhibitor is to keep the small producer producing pictures. We told Mr. Loew that exhibitors in cities where he had theatres objected to the name of Loew on Metro pictures because it was an advertisement of the Loew theatre. Mr. Loew graciously agreed that exhibitors were right, and said that they would discontinue the name Loew on Metro pictures immediately.

GOLDWYN—Goldwyn agreed not to go into or enlarge their holdings in theatres, or compete with the exhibitors and are in favor of the Patterson movement, with the exception that they reserve the right where they find it impossible to place their product, to operate in the exhibition end. We communicated with them, asking for a more definite answer, but they felt the statement they made in Wid's was correct announcement of their position.

Sydney Cohen, favored for President of Exhibitor body

FOX—The Committee, on two trips to New York, failed to get into communication with Mr. Fox, receiving no replies to letter and wires. Committee is unable to judge what Mr. Fox is going to do and feels that he should be given fair chance to state his position.

PARAMOUNT, FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY—The Committee found Mr. Zukor out of town, on both visits to New York. Communications by letter and wire, asking for a direct reply whether they would agree to retire from the theatre business, failed to elicit a reply. We called Mr. Lichtman by 'phone on May 3 and outlined what the exhibitors of America had decided and asked him to see Mr. Zukor and get a statement from him whether Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky will get out of the theatre business. I told Mr. Lichtman that we considered their invasion of the exhibiting field a menace; that it was unfair to sell the customer and then compete with him. On the first visit to New York Mr. Lichtman promised to have a statement for the larger committee, which met last week. When the larger committee asked for the statement and that Mr. Zukor appear before the committee, we could get no satisfaction. We again spoke to Mr. Lichtman, and he told us Paramount knew nothing about the proposition and wasn't interested. Mr. Lichtman stated he would not do business with an organization of exhibitors, that they do business with individual exhibitors only.

This report was uproariously received.

Committee's Recommendations

The meeting closed with the following set of recommendations made by the Committee of 17:

1. That the office of President of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America be some representative executive, typifying true Americanism, who stands for clean and honest competition, and who is in no way connected with the film industry. (Committee suggests Wm. H. Taft.)

2. That the voting shall be on an individual basis. Every independent exhibitor who comes to Cleveland, irrespective of the number of theatres he owns or controls, should be entitled to one vote.

3. That the conventional shall run along lines where the rule of the majority shall prevail, and that all exhibitors attending the convention shall be bound by and abide by the rule of the majority.

4. That a budget committee be formed to take up matters of finances. Committee suggests that the independent producer shall add 1 per cent to all film rentals which shall, in turn, be paid over to the National Organization for purpose of carrying on its activities.

5. That Independent Exhibitors do business only with independent producers.

6. That a convention shall not be held two successive years in any one state.

7. That election of all officers be first order of business on Thursday afternoon, June 10th.

8. That a nominating committee of five be elected by convention, Wednesday.

9. The committee further recommends that the three national organizations shall disband, or, shall merge into one large national organization.

10. The basis of representation of the national organization shall be: one exhibitor from each congressional district, who shall also be the delegate to the future national conventions. Further, that there be one director from each state, elected by the membership of that state, and that the executive committee shall be composed of the directors from each State. There shall be no other executive committee.

On the opening of the Wednesday sessions, there were more than 800 exhibitors present with 32 states represented.

Humorous and Human Lights on the Conventioners

By Robert E. Welsh

STARTING from scratch. Time, Pennsylvania Railroad, 6.50; Daylight Saving, 7.50. Sounds like a bargain sale. Bet it's the only thing approaching a bargain that shows up on the trip.

We are standing at the foot of the stairway like a film salesman waiting to waylay a newcomer in the business. If we see them all now we may be able to save the trip. Which wouldn't be a bad idea. This conventioning is getting to be a habit but we've still to devise a means of catching up on lost sleep and making the expense account balance up without a loss.

Alright, if you want it that way we'll admit that last phrase was put in for the benefit of the boss.

Well, well, well! And here comes BILL KALEM VITAGRAPH WRIGHT! It seems like old times to see BILL flirting with Mr. Pullman.

We're beginning to worry about this job. At last accounts there were only fifty-seven varieties of conventions scheduled for the week. Each at a hotel nine miles from any other hotel, and all the hotels ninety-nine miles from anywhere.

We've got it fixed. There are at least a dozen of these speeches that we know by heart. So whenever one of these is started at SYDNEY COHEN'S Hotel Winton gathering we'll hop a taxi and rush over to FRANK REMBUSCH'S Hotel Cleveland party. As soon as we find out who's talking there we can run over to the Statler and look in on the National Association's annual convention. If they haven't got a quorum yet we'll have time to drop in on Associated Exhibitors in the same building. If FRED QUIMBY doesn't hold us up with an interesting invitation we'll have time to learn the brand at the meeting of First National's Ohio franchise holders.

All set. We can turn our eyes to the train again. Here comes HARRY REICHENBACH. He left the lion home. Good thing. The train will be enough like a jungle tonight, with its forests of waving pasteboards and hordes of stampeding cubes.

Hope the savages don't pick our bones too closely.

FELIX FEIST approaches. And there is ARTHUR FRIEND. What chance would a poor exhibitor have on this train if a dotted line was waved before his eyes.

Gosh, here's a brave exhibitor willing to take the chance. BE'ER HILL, of Greensboro, S. C., escorted by EARL HUDSON. And there's WILLARD PATTERSON, the boy who threw the piece of dynamite that started the whole mess.

JOE LEE wears the look of a hardy traveller. Stepped off one train from Boston and then on to this one. JOE says "I hope the exhibitors organize into one big national body; then we'll have one convention a year instead of three a month."

CHARLIE PETTIJOHN is hereby proclaimed a life saver. He has added at least three years to our mortal days. Subtle stuff.

Don't see EARL GULICK around. The boy tenor must be travelling with the big boys, ZUKOR, SELZNICK, et al, on the Central. EARL does big game. (The last word goes singular or plural, as you will.)

As I live! JIMMY QUIRK! JIMMY has started Photoplay after the fake stock sellers—the cooties he calls them. That reminds us. Wonder if JIMMY has any liquid cootie chaser with him?

Got to take a quick jump in this paragraph to cover a night of deep mental stress. Hard work tickling the pasteboards. A walk through the car gives a man a chance to pick any game he wants—from the battling black and white squares to flirty fifty-twos. And all varieties from rummy to Omaha.

As we enter the town Ringling's circus is unloading "on the lot." WILLARD PATTERSON is sniffing the saw-dust. Oh, baby! Hear that calliope!

NEW JERSEY FABIAN, PAUL MOONEY, "EFE" ASHER and MAURIE MEYERS have borrowed our dancing dominoes to settle the fate of our extra fare rebate checks. They're worth a dollar now. Ought to be ten dollars if they paid a nickel for every hurdle the engineer missed during the night. Twas hard on the passengers who tried to go to sleep—both of them.

Almost two hours late getting into town and that gosh blamed circus parade took fiendish delight in crossing and double crossing on our path so that it took an hour to get to the hotel. Had us afraid we might miss ADOLPH ZUKOR'S meeting with FRANK REMBUSCH.

Early Review of Mary Pickford in "Suds"

THE art of Mary Pickford, a painstaking attempt to provide incident, artistic lightings that in many sequences have never been excelled, faultless support aided by splendid titles that do much to lift a slender and commonplace story which provides only opportunity for characterization, "Suds" is a vehicle to display Miss Pickford's versatility. The characterization, moreover, is of a sort which does not show the star in a role which a great many of her admirers prefer to see the sweet, pretty ingenue.

The role in less talked of hands would be a total failure. As it stands the picture draws badly at times, resorts to plain slap stick, which does not fit in the story, and ends without climax or apparent completion. All this will possibly be overlooked in Miss Pickford's personal triumphs as an actress but it is not in a class with "Pollyanna," nor is it what the exhibitors have a right to expect from America's highest priced and most distinguished artist. J. S. Dickerson, Cleveland, O.

Pre-Review of Sennett's "Married Life"

BY WIRE TO THE NEWS: "Married Life" as a five-reeler would make two two-reelers average merit and could be so split as practically two stories, one about a football game and another a burlesque on an amateur theatrical performance are told. The latter sequences are mirth provoking to a reasonable extent, even if the business is not altogether new. Ben Turpin, the featured player, is aided by a good cast and some very good trick photography in connection with aeroplanes; and a baby walking out over a cliff is responsible for some real thrills.

As a multiple reel feature this will not set the world afire, but it will be found amusing by the lovers of slap stick and holds interest from the fact that action predominates throughout.—J. S. Dickerson, Cleveland.

Pithy Snapshots of the Big Doings Behind the Scenes

Dodging in and out between the elephants gave us a chance to see all the posters that Paramount has plastered the town with. They greet you wherever you turn. Such statements as: "Remain an independent exhibitor—book Paramount pictures." "An Independent Exhibitor is the one who shows the best pictures. Paramount pictures, of course."

Gosh, FRED BEECROFT will be sore at us. We should have charged advertising rates on those last three or four lines.

Speaking of FRED reminds us that our genial Roaring Bull has supplied the conversation of the convention—no one will believe that the debonair HAROLD BEECROFT is his son.

He even got us jealous. We have just introduced JACK MAHONEY of the Pathe selling force as our son. If we get away with that we'll add that we have a very charming daughter-in-law.

We accept the blushes, MRS. M.

Before we get any further we had better mention the fact that you wouldn't be burdened with this page of piffle if it were not for the kind offices of CHARLIE MOYER in supplying us with a Corona.

That's worth a free ad. Here goes: United we stand; divided we fall.

Blame any eccentricities on the typewriter. These toys need a Ouija touch—not free hand swing that was gained on William street, corner of Duane.

The accessory people are up in arms over the way the alleged exposition dropped out of sight. MONSOON DALY has a perfectly good exhibit and no place to put it. DAN BARTON would need an exposition floor to hold all the contracts he is signing for organs.

WILL SMITH still holds a grudge against the engineer on that train. We'll bet our sleeves that engineer started life on a bowling alley.

JESSE GOLBERG is appointed to the staff of life-savers. Even offered to trust us with his key.

ARTHUR LUCAS has just stepped down the lobby with FELIX FEIST. Besides being Goldwyn's distribution chief in his section of the South we hear this boy also owns a newspaper. We have a battle cry for another exhibitor organization: "Keep producers out of the newspaper business."

Pre-Review of "The Mollycoddle"

BY WIRE TO THE NEWS: The picture has everything: A highly original story, thrills, that has ever equalled, action, romance, scenic, stuff, great incident, romance, logic and comedy. It may be compared with both "The Americano" and "When the Clouds Roll By," but has even these two great successes eclipsed on great camera work, especially in shooting the slide scenes which surpass anything of the kind ever attempted.

The picture is straight comedy-drama before Fairbanks figures with his athletic stuff, but the finish is a whirlwind. Wallace Beary ranks among the supporting players.—J. S. Dickerson, Cleveland.

Black Withdraws; Rembusch vs. Cohen

Henry Lustic called the meeting to order, and appointed Henry Cole and W. J. Slimm as Sergeants-at-Arms, and immediately thereafter named the personnel of the various committees to which each resolution was to be referred.

This announcement brought forth the first spirit of discord so far manifested by the convention members. H. Webster Smith of Baltimore objected to the right of the president to name these committees without the vote of the body. A small riot ensued in which President Lustig relinquished the chair to Ben Sawyer of Cleveland until the body as a whole sustained the chair on the exercise of its rights. After that, things sailed along peacefully, until Charles O'Reilly of New York moved that Marcus Loew, who was in town, be admitted to the afternoon session of the body, without voice and without vote. William Brandt of New York seconded the motion and later it was amended by E. C. Vincent of Wilmer and Vincent to read that Mr. Loew be admitted with full rights of voice and vote.

Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh delivered a fiery address requesting that the motion to admit Mr. Loew with full powers to vote be reconsidered. This motion for reconsideration failed to receive a two-thirds vote of the members present, and was lost. The motion to admit Mr. Loew with full powers of membership to the convention was enthusiastically received and carried by short roll call.

Franklin K. Lane, former secretary, in the afternoon addressed the convention on "Americanization," and was followed by Senator Walker of New York.

Then Marcus Loew requested and was given the floor.

"I thought this was an appropriate time to tell you what I thought," Mr. Loew said. "I am first and last an exhibitor. I am a producer only in a secondary measure, and as protection to my exhibiting business. I have always favored the independent producer. Independent producers are necessary, especially to these exhibitors who change their programs daily.

"I have always encouraged the independent producers mostly for selfish reasons. I want pictures, and I want producers. The more producers the merrier. I don't want just a few producers.

"Speaking of Wall Street and the so-called Wall Street menace, I don't believe the exhibitor has anything to fear from Wall Street. This industry is composed of brains, and no single individual and no single corporation can ever control it.

"I think it a serious mistake to ignore the independent producer. But he needs money to produce pictures. I have loaned large sums of money to independent producers, and have done all I could to get them alive. I would not have gone into the producing end of the business if the independent producer had been stronger. But I had to go into the producing end to get pictures for my theatres. The producers frightened me into it. They said it looked as if pictures were going to be booked on a percentage basis only. Percentage is too uncertain. It means so much this year and more the next and so on, until finally I'd be a janitor in my own house.

The Exhibitor—and Reviews

Further Extracts from a Few of Many Letters Show the Way in Which the Wind Blows

"If you let your advertising columns dictate your reviews your paper is no better than the 'heralds' and press sheets that the producing companies send out."

Margaretville Opera House.

"We do want reviews—we have found your service to be fair and we consider you competent to review pictures. These reviews are very necessary to enable us to select pictures and they help us in advertising our show, but we do not use them to hammer down prices, break contracts or make complaints."

Geo. W. Cuff, Pres.,
Mutual Theatre Company,
Orange, N. J.

"We exhibitors will stick with you—that's the sort of reviews we want."

J. C. Berkey,
Elite Theatre,
Niagara Falls, N. Y.

"I believe your service to be fair in every respect and also believe that you are competent to review pictures.

"Wishing your wonderful paper all the success possible, I am,"

James J. Christie, Mgr.,
Third Avenue Theatre,
Watervliet, N. Y.

"We are subscribing to the NEWS in order to get reviews on pictures we are to use and if this review is written to comply with the wishes of the producer we can't see how your magazine is a help to us. We believe you will win out in the long run."

Princess Theatre Co.,
per S. S. Stevenson,
Henderson, N. C.

"I have found that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS' reviews are honest and unbiased by any seeming influence and are therefore reliable. I believe all exhibitors feel the same way about this and that they will back you up in your determination to continue."

E. H. Hullinger,
Adv. Agent Clifford Theatre,
Urbana, Ohio.

"I have found your service fair and I bank on your reviews as I feel that you are fair and competent."

A. J. Rice,
Temple Theatre,
Willard, Ohio.

"Without fair, competent non-subsidized reviews as previously given, the NEWS would drop back to level of an entertaining reading magazine. These reviews have been worth real money to me on more than one occasion in the selection of pictures."

R. H. Gray,
Majestic Theatre,
Cleveland, Ohio.

"It pleases me very much to know one advertising medium has taken the stand you have."

Geo. A. Pollard,
Pollard Theatre,
Guthrie, Okla.

"Your service has certainly seemed fair. I am wondering where they could find a fairer one."

E. C. McQuay,
New Holland Theatre,
New Holland, Ohio.

"Please be advised that we review 50 per cent of our plays from your columns. They have appeared fair to us always and we would not be without the NEWS.

"This is the only trade paper we subscribe to and it usually covers our wants."

Smith & Mouen,
by G. W. Mouen,
Strand Theatre,
Maumee, Ohio.

"Your reviews are the first thing I read when opening the NEWS and I use them in making up my ads. I believe your service is fair."

The Spragg Amusement Co.,
by Ben D. Morris,
Bellaire, Ohio.

"If you fail to review pictures your magazine loses 50 per cent of its worth. Producers cover enough good points to exploit it. We must know if it will stand the trouble, expense, etc., to get by with the public.

"All old time theatre managers know that the traveling road show was killed by the producer cheating. He advertised what he did not have, lost confidence of public and killed the road show."

Frank C. Buckley,
Theatre Princess,
Superior, Wis.

"We take great pleasure in congratulating you upon the independent stand that you are taking in the matter."

Rialto Amusement Company,
J. Fineman, Pres.,
Racine, Wis.

"The exhibitor wants reviews. Fearless reviews. So far as the writer is concerned, reviews are not used to hammer down prices, or to break contracts. They are used for proper exploiting of pictures. If it is the consensus of opinion among reviewers that a picture is o. k. the exhibitor will not hesitate to go the limit in boosting it. If some reviews are favorable while others are unfavorable, the exhibitor will consider everything and be governed accordingly. Where the reliable reviewers apologize (between the lines) for the picture, the exhibitor, if he is wise, will gum-shoe the picture in question. It is a pleasure to be able to say that the reviews as published in the NEWS are fair and reliable and are carefully indexed for use when the time comes."

F. J. McWilliams,
Grand Theatre,
Madison, Wis.

"I am thoroughly in sympathy with your action and wish honest complete news and unless I thought it was such I would not patronize your paper."

"I am also unwilling to buy films of people who are unwilling to have their productions reviewed by anybody. You are at liberty to publish this letter if you see fit."

S. Carl Carpenter, Mgr.,
Colonial Theatre,
Richford, Vt.

"If the NEWS is not competent to review pictures no one in this good old United States of ours is, is our honest and candid opinion."

The Low Moor Iron Company of Virginia,
J. A. Hibbert, Mgr. Theatre.

"Before the Battle" Statements Issued by Producers

Robertson-Cole, Universal and Hodkinson Organizations State Policy

WITH exhibitors from all parts of the nation assembled at Cleveland during the past week formulating a campaign of defense against the alleged invasion of the exhibitor's field on the part of certain producer-distributor forces, executives of various powerful producing organizations issued statements during the week, which were designed to set forth definitely the exact stand to be taken by their respective organizations on the different problems confronting the exhibitors' caucus. Three statements, emanating from the home-offices of the Robertson-Cole, Universal and W. W. Hodkinson organizations, are given below.

Robertson-Cole's Policy

THE following statement has been issued, over the signature of A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager of the Robertson-Cole Company, under the caption of "A Declaration of Policy":

"Robertson-Cole will not build, purchase nor otherwise acquire motion picture theatres in any city in the United States, nor will we engage in the exhibition of motion pictures for profit, unless you, the exhibitor, force us to do so.

"Robertson-Cole demands the right to open and fair competition on the basis of merit and will only feel 'forced' to acquire theatres where and when allied interests, exercising a monopoly, have eliminated competition.

"Robertson-Cole are merchants engaged in the distribution of motion picture productions on a commercial brokerage basis, and we intend to adhere strictly to our field without digression or trespass.

"Robertson-Cole stands free of all entangling alliances and affiliations, and we fully appreciate the ideal position in which our independence places us. Robertson-Cole does not intend to jeopardize that position.

"Robertson-Cole has but one objective and is concentrating every ounce of energy upon it. We have no conflicting interests within our organization, and no connections outside our organization that would divert our attention and influence the conduct of our business or distribution.

"Robertson-Cole believes in competition. Without competition there is no incentive to progress; and there should be progress in every branch of the motion picture industry.

"Robertson-Cole believes that the exhibitor should be encouraged to progress in building, improving and fortifying the prestige of the motion picture theatre, and we are firmly convinced that to discourage the progressive spirit of exhibitors by an invasion of their field is dangerous to the long life of the industry.

"Robertson-Cole looks upon motion picture film as so much merchandise, and are in the market to purchase the best class of this merchandise and to resell it to the trade.

"Robertson-Cole looks upon the exhibition of motion pictures as a theatrical and amusement enterprise—a class of business that legitimately belongs to the showman, and does not intend to invade that field.

"Robertson-Cole believes that dignity, commercial integrity and business honor should characterize every transaction between producers, distributors and exhibitors.

"Mr. Robertson and Mr. Cole decided that the distribution of motion pictures was a class of business that they, as a successful commercial company aside from their film interests, with connections in every civilized country in the world, could handle to the mutual advantage of producer and exhibitor. They organized the Robertson-Cole Distribution Corporation to handle this business on a fair and equitable margin of profit, and it is on this basis and in the capacity of merchants that they will continue to be connected with the motion-picture business.

"Robertson-Cole does not use deposit money received from exhibitors in the furtherance of its business enterprises. We have unlimited financial resources and do not need exhibitors' money to carry on our business.

"Robertson-Cole places all deposit money in separate trust accounts; and a clause which we have written in our contracts absolutely prevents our using these funds until we have delivered the film that they guarantee.

"Robertson-Cole intends to invest whatever may be necessary to maintain a foremost position in the industry, and to safeguard this investment we propose to do everything possible to secure the confidence of our customers."

Carl Laemmle's Stand

IN a lengthy statement issued from the Universal headquarters, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, upholds his organization as one that has practiced "fair play" with the exhibitor in the past and intends to continue the same policy in the future. Says Mr. Laemmle:

"Universal is not ashamed to say what it has done for the exhibitor in the past. Neither am I afraid of putting myself on record as to what Universal means to do for the exhibitor in the future. I have said it before, and I will repeat it. Universal, among other things, stands ready to give financial support to the independent exhibitor in his fight to tear from his throat the fingers of monopoly that seek to throttle him. Every exhibitor knows that Universal was organized solely to fight against monopoly in the film business, and to free the independents from the strangle-hold of the Patents Company octopus.

"The independent exhibitor today faces a struggle just as threatening as that which menaced him ten years ago. If the film business is not to become eventually a regulated, subsidized industry, bending its knee at the beck and call of 'big interests,' the independent exhibitor must organize for a long and desperate fight.

"And the exhibitor needs assistance. He needs allies. He must know exactly where he stands with respect to producing and distributing organizations, and nothing short of exact and definite offers of moral and material support will do him any good.

"That is why Universal is taking its present stand—on both feet—beside the exhibitor. When I place myself in the ranks of the independents, I mean for it to be understood clearly that Universal will go to any extent to lend confidence and material aid to the exhibitor.

"Every exhibitor knows that he can get plenty of good Universal pictures with which to fill his program if he takes the first step in the fight against monopoly and bars monopoly-made pictures from his screen. He is confident that when he 'outlaws' this product of the theatre-owning producers, he still will draw his patrons by first-classs pictures.

W. W. Hodkinson

"Only by the exercise of real authority and ability can the exhibitors today protect their independence, and yet their independence is absolutely necessary to the healthy development of the great art of motion-pictures. The convention in Cleveland shows that the men who own theatres are at last aroused to the situation that threatens the individual operation of their theatres.

"The greatly improved quality of independent productions is the first sign that things are turning in favor of the exhibitor. Every year he is assured a greater variety and a finer grade of photoplay features. His greatest problem is to keep in touch with this market the independent producers provide and be able to select the pictures he requires.

"I believe that the exhibitor should not be required to take the risks of the producer, as he often does today. The producer should pay for his own mistakes. The producer in turn will make better profits from more careful methods of production.

"Inflation and over-capitalization are a menace to the stability and prosperity of the motion picture industry. I know as a fact where production units are turning out a volume of business with one-fourth of the money that is represented on the books of certain other concerns, whose interests extend not only over production, but also the distribution and the exhibition of pictures. Part of this high cost of production is due of course to the long debauches of bidding against each other for star, directors, books"

Educational Will Open Exchange System June 20

Operations Will Start in Twenty-Four Cities, Handling Short Subjects Only

A COMPLETE announcement of policy for the year, starting with the week of June 20th, covering all of its various activities, was authorized yesterday by Educational Films Corporation. The past six months has seen probably more radical developments with Educational than with any other motion picture company, and its officials promise that the next few months will be marked by equally notable achievements.

Educational Films Corporation began operations a little more than five years ago with the idea of confining its attention to short subjects. From this purpose it has never departed and the whole of its expansion continues in the one and two reel field. Although the industry as a whole regarded the company as a bold experiment, Educational points out that of all the companies producing and distributing pictures at the time it began business, only six remain in the field today.

With the week of June 20th, Educational starts business through its own exchanges in the principal distributing centers of the country, with its product more than tripled and the claim that its product represents the very cream of the short subject field. The next few weeks will see in operation Educational exchanges in twenty-four cities, New York, Buffalo, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Louisville, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Indianapolis, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. In each of these exchanges local interests are represented financially, but Educational maintains the majority stock of every branch, believing that this represents an ideal plan in insuring the ultimate in cooperation in sales and exploitation effort, and at the same time maintains competitive exhibitor purchase opportunity.

Opening of this exchange system marks Educational's first venture into the comedy field. It begins activities with five two-reelers available each month with the indication of several others being added soon. Christie Comedies will supply a two-reeler every two weeks, while there will be a monthly two reel release of the Chester, Mermaid and Torchy series; Judge Brown Stories, with a monthly, or possibly semi-monthly release, and it is expected that another two reel series will be announced in a short time. But with these extensive additions, Educational has not cut down on the scenic, travel, animal, scientific and educational pictures that have been so intimately associated with its growth. Chester-Outing Scenics have been taken over, forming with the Bruce Scenics a complete "cover" of this field. Chester Screenics will be a bi-weekly release, while a number of series of travel and scenics have been acquired.

"When Educational Films was formed five years ago," says the statement, "its founders had many plans in view, but they did not attempt to put them in operation until they believed that the time was ripe. We believe that this day is here.

"For five years we devoted the greater portion of our time to developing the quality of our product and to proving the necessity of these short subjects to the theatre. The Bruce Scenics, the Ditmars Living Book of Nature, George D. Wright's Mexico Today, the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement and various series of similar character have been shown in thousands of theatres and there has been created such a demand as to cause us to greatly increase the volume of product. During this period we were compelled to distribute our product through the best medium available, though from the start we have felt that the only perfect distribution, for our interests and those of the exhibitor, would be our own exchange system.

"Robert C. Bruce is now in Europe making a new series of his Scenics Beautiful. We have taken over the Chester-Outings, and also the Screenics from the same producer. We control all of the pictures made by the American Red Cross, for theatrical release. We have camera men with the two expeditions of the Interchurch World Movement and these pictures will soon be available for early release. We are about to release the first picture made by an expedition of the National Geographic Society. We will also distribute all of the pictures of the New York State Conservation Commission."

Broadway Welcomes Back S. L. Rothapfel

Capitol Theatre, Re-opened Under His Auspices, Filled With Distinguished Audience

ROTHAPFEL has come back to Broadway.

Friday evening, June 4th, marked the first of his presentations at the Capitol theatre, and probably the largest audience that ever witnessed a motion picture offering in a theatre greeted his return. Every seat in the world's greatest theatre was filled and the promenade space was so crowded that an inquisitive fire marshal might have found ample grounds for activity.

There was a riot of applause for each number from an audience that included many of the best known men and women of the stage and screen. There was no speech-making. S. L. Rothapfel was not evident in person, but he did not need to be, for the entire presentation was typical of the man who first surprised New York with his offerings at the Regent, then opened the Strand, and from his ideas built the Rialto and Rivoli.

During the few days that the Capitol was closed Mr. Rothapfel made two changes in the physical character of the house that worked wonders. A chief fault had been that the house seemed too immense for even orchestras and bands of eighty pieces. Mr. Rothapfel therefore built a new stage for the orchestra, with an inner stage for the performers, with a result that every newspaper in New York commented on the amazing improvement in its music. The second change was the addition of a lighting system such as he originated in the Rialto and the Rivoli, taking away the coldness and formality and adding the third element, blended with music and pictures.

The initial presentation at the Capitol, except for a larger orchestra and a larger body of singers, is not so far more elaborate than many that he had staged at the Rialto and Tivoli.

Victor Herbert's "American Fantasie" was used as the overture, modified for the occasion and with renditions of "Hail Columbia," "Swanee River," "The Girl I Left Behind Me" and "Over There." Before another highly fanciful setting by John Wenger the Albertieri dancers presented von Blum's "Danse Interpretive," and this was followed by "Hagopian, the Rug Maker." "Indian Love Lyrics" followed, and "Less than the Dust" brought still another Wenger set, the chorus by the ensemble and a pantomime by Jessie Roggi. "Kashmiri Song" presented William Robyn as the soloist and the final number, "Till I Awake," was rendered by the chorus accompanied by pantomime by Elizabeth Coyle and Harry Hamfield.

Realart Celebrates First Anniversary

Young Company Enjoys Birthday; J. S. Woody Reviews the Year; Another Star Coming

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION celebrated this week the first anniversary of the founding of the concern. Congratulatory wires and messages were received from exhibitors in all parts of the country on the year's success.

Actual business was started on June 11th last year when offices were opened at 112 West Forty-second street, New York. Within a few months' time exchanges had been opened in twenty-one important centers and in December, 1919, the first picture was available. Thirteen pictures have been released by the company to date and four more are practically finished and will be put on the market during July and August. They will be included in this year's business and round out the concern's activities for its first year.

Important among the achievements of the new concern during the year are the signing of two new stars in addition to the original trio, the acquisition of the old Morosco studios in Hollywood as a producing plant; and the establishment of a Broadway record which shows every prodution to have played a week at one of the big Rialto houses and with a return engagement on the Loew circuit.

In a brief resume of the year's activities John S. Woody, general manager of Realart, said: "From a very small beginning last June, Realart has grown in a year's time with incredible swiftness to a dominant position as a producing organization. Success has been ours in a measure far beyond our highest hopes at the start and for this we must thank our exhibitor partners who have made it possible."

"We opened with a small suite of offices at 112 West Forty-second street. Arthur S. Kane, our first president; Ben F. Simpson, then field manager; John P. Fritts, director of publicity and advertising, and myself, were the original quartette who gathered at that place to make of Realart a thing of substance out of our hope and ambitions.

John S. Woody

"Early in the summer, Mr. Simpson and myself went into the field to establish our branch offices. Mr. Simpson took the Eastern and Southern districts, while I hiked across lots to the West. Within a few short weeks we had engaged managers, opened quarters and had things humming in twenty-one recognized exchange centers. I don't believe a more efficient sales force was ever got together—and at a speed which established a record.

"In December Mr. Kane resigned to head his own concern, and Morris Kohn, who had been Realart's treasurer, became president. Later in the year J. C. Ragland resigned as general sales manager and Mr. Jay A. Gove was promoted from the post of associate director of publicity to that of assistant general manager. Those were the only changes in personnel of importance during the year.

"In March, Mr. Kohn negotiated the purchase of the old Morosco studios in Hollywood and they were renamed the Realart studios, the former efficient studio staff headed by Frank Garubtt, remaining under the new management. The studios are large and equipped with the most modern facilities. The large dark and open stages are each capable of accommodation of three productions at one time.

"A short time ago we held our first convention and get-together at the Hotel Astor. It was one of the most inspiring and successful gatherings of its kind I have ever attended. The members of this field force met one another for the first time and exchanged ideas. Together we formulated our policy for the coming year.

"But the biggest thing in our record for the year, to my mind, is the demonstration we have given of honest co-operation between producer and exhibitors. That is the principle upon which Realart was established. We have avoided making glowing announcements of our intentions, and have been content to spend our time and efforts in carrying them into practice."

Reports current in trade circles for some time that Realart had signed a sixth star were confirmed this week. Morris Kohn, president of the company, admitted that the sixth star had been selected. He would not say, however, that the contract had been actually signed.

No Film Censorship for Massachusetts

Governor Coolidge Vetoes Bill, Claiming Unconstitutionality; Action Praised

MASSACHUSETTS is free of censorship. Governor Coolidge vetoed the bill as presented to him by the State Senate on the last day of the regular legislative session of the year. His veto was based on the ground that Attorney General J. Weston Allen ruled an important part of the bill was unconstitutional. Expressions of gratification at the action of the Governor in vetoing the measure were heard on all sides. Several women lawyers were profuse of their praise of the Governor for the stand he had taken.

Directly following the action of Massachusetts' Chief Executive, the House of Representatives upheld his action by a vote of 202 to 14. Seldom, if ever, has a Governor's repudiation of a matter of such wide interest been approved with such a unanimity of feeling in either branch of the Legislature. As is evident from the figures, both Republican and Democratic members of the House supported the Governor's attitude.

In his message to the members of the House vetoing the measure, Governor Coolidge said: "A bill entitled 'An act relative to the approval and public exhibition of motion picture films' being House Bill No. 1540, is herewith returned without approval. Hereto attached is the opinion of the attorney-general that the second section, which is the important section of the bill, is unconstitutional, and that section 4, which undertakes to provide for a court review, is not in a form which expressly preserves the constitutional rights of trial by jury, although it is possible that it might be interpreted to give that right. The entire purpose of the bill would fail with the failure of section 2, and the entire bill would fail if the court should determine the right of trial by jury is not provided for according to the constitution. There is no need to point out that unconstitutional legislation would be entirely useless, would bring about expense to the commonwealth which would be without avail and would cause the appointment of persons and the installing of machinery, all of which would be a total loss to the commonwealth."

We Want Reviews

"Certainly, the exhibitor wants reviews of current releases because an honest review genuinely helps him in the booking and advertising of a show. When you took my perfectly good three dollars you entered into a contract to give me the news and your honest opinion—not the highly garnished sales talk of a press agent.

"Personally, I have always regarded the M. P. N. as fearless and independent—two prime factors in placing it where it is today.

"That a producer has withdrawn all advertising from the NEWS because of an unfavorable review in your columns, provided it was justified, is the highest modicum of praise you could acquire."

Geo. E. Carpenter,
Paramount Empress Theatre,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

"We appreciate the NEWS and value your reviews; they are of great help to us. We are glad to know that the size of ad or no ad does not influence your reviews.

"We are with you."

Joe C. Clemmons, Pres.,
Jefferson Amusement Co.,
Beaumont, Texas.

"We do not know who the producer referred to can be, nor do we care, and as for keeping this letter confidential, you are at liberty to shout it from the housetops if you so desire. This theatre is for a square deal first, last, and always. Yes, we want reviews and we want them fair and unbiased."

The Lamb Theatre,
by H. S. Cole,
Ranger, Texas.

"We are strongly of the opinion that, if a publication is to serve the exhibitor fairly with the producer, the giving of honest reviews of pictures is the only course for a publication to follow."

G. H. Foster,
Ruth Theatre,
Ruth, Nevada.

"I have found that your reviews have proven a big asset to my business in helping me to select my programs and especially so of late as we now spot book our entire program."

C. C. Lindsey, Mgr.,

Legal Battle Follows Sale of Theatres

A CONTROVERSY over ownership and control of ten moving picture theatres in St. Louis between the Famous Players Company of Missouri and the Harry Koplar interests led to the filing of a suit yesterday by the former company to enjoin Koplar and others from interfering with its management of one of them, the Arco Theatre, 4011 Manchester avenue. Judge Davis issued a temporary restraining order and set the case for hearing on next Thursday.

The petition alleges that the Koplar interests sold the Arco, along with nine other motion picture houses, to the Famous Players Company last March and that the latter concern took possession March 17.

On Friday night, it is said, representatives of the Koplar interests went to the Arco and attempted to get control of the theatre. In the disturbance which followed policemen ejected representatives of the Famous Players Company, it is alleged.

Harry Ward, of London, Arrives in America

Harry Ward, managing director of Hayward Productions of London, England, and one of the most formidable film renters in the United Kingdom, arrived this week in New York for an indefinite stay in America. He was accompanied on his journey by Henry Cundy of the Cinema Sales Corporation of Great Britain.

This is Mr. Ward's second visit to this country within a period of six months. His present trip is primarily in the interests of his recently perfected distributing organization, the Cinema Sales Corporation, of which company he is managing director.

Mr. Ward announces that he is prepared to negotiate for the distribution of big American productions in the United Kingdom.

British Film Company Increases Capital

The Ideal Film Renting Company, Ltd., of London, announces that it is making arrangements for a considerable increase in its capital. A new company will be formed under the name of the Ideal Films, Ltd., with fully issued capital of £115,000. The whole of the staff, properties, liabilities and management of the old company are being taken over by the Ideal Films, Ltd., and the managing directors will continue in their present capacity.

Saunders Is Comptroller of Famous Players

Richard W. Saunders has been appointed comptroller of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. As comptroller he will have full charge of all the accounting and auditing, in all departments of the Famous Players and its subsidiary companies.

Censorship Dead

The Governor's message ended one of the most bitter fights ever waged over a measure on Beacon Hill. Thousands of people all over the State and country, newspapers throughout the State and nearly all of the Boston publications declared against the bill, and joined in the fight to kill the proposed legislation.

Governor General Allen in his opinion of the bill says in part: "It is my opinion that a section of this bill is so broad that it would apply to a sale, lease or loan in this commonwealth of a motion picture film made in this state and on its way to another state, and would also apply to a film in the original package in which it might be shipped into this state from another state or from a foreign country. If so, it is to that extent in conflict with the clause of section 8, article I of the Constitution of the United States, which confers on Congress power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations among the several states and with the Indian Tribes.' I am, therefore, of opinion that said section 2 is an attempt directly to regulate interstate commerce and is, accordingly, unconstitutional."

The movie censorship bill would have placed the power of censorship in the State department of public safety and would have required films intended for commercial use to be submitted for review and censorship.

When the bill was first proposed, a storm of indignation arose from the public. Women's clubs, professional and business men's associations, leading educationalists and churchmen at once expressed their opposition to State censorship in the Bay State. Mayor Andrew J. Peters, on top of this, expressed his disapproval of the measure and John M. Casey, Censor of the City of Boston, asserted that State censorship for motion pictures was unwarranted, would be a waste of money and would accomplish nothing. A series of public hearings brought forth large audiences at both the House and Senate chambers.

Among those who expressed approval of the Governor's action were Mrs. Walter Hartstone, a well known clubwoman and leading lawyer of Boston. "Governor Coolidge," said Mrs. Hartstone, "knows that there is sufficient legislation already to make censorship in the hands of a few unnecessary. Massachusetts is to be congratulated upon having such a man."

Miss Sybil Holmes, representing the Women Lawyers' Association, said: "Massachusetts is to be congratulated upon having as its Chief Executive a sane, sound, clear-thinking man. We, the women lawyers, were confirmed in the belief that the Governor would not allow a State Board censorship to be placed upon a legitimate industry and that he would not sanction the passage of additional laws, when the laws we already had upon our statute books had not been tried out sufficiently."

Allens, of Canada, Will Build Two London Theatres

Purchase Sites at Cost of $2,000,000; to Raze Famous Buildings

CULMINATING plans which were originally formulated shortly after the return of J. J. Allen, of the firm of Jule and Jay J. Allen, from London, England, last fall, comes an announcement from the Toronto office of the organization that this concern has consummated a deal which includes the purchase of one of the most costly parcels of business property in London and the erection, on this site, of two super-motion picture theatres, which will rival any in the world. The transaction, according to the Allens, involves a total expenditure exceeding four millions of dollars, half of which amount is property cost, and calls for the razing of two of the most historic buildings in the British metropolis—the far-famed Empire theatre and Queen's Hotel in Leicester Square. The full significance and import of this announcement will be realized and felt throughout the theatrical world as a forerunner to what may be expected from the Allen Theatre Enterprises, now an international institution, in the near future.

C. Howard Crane, in charge of the Architectural Department of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, is leaving for London immediately, where he will consult with the builders and submit sketches for approval, after which plans will be started at once. It was originally intended to construct one huge theatre on the London site, but on account of the tendency of the picture business toward super-attractions and long runs, it was deemed advisable to meet this condition and erect two houses on the property just purchased. The smaller of the two theatres will be very similar to the Allen Winnipeg theatre, which is conceded to be a model of its kind. Present plans call for a house to seat 4,000, and the second one to have a capacity of about 2,000. The smaller theatre will be given over to super-film productions, which will enjoy long runs from one to six months, while the larger house will feature high class program, which will be changed weekly. Fifty-piece orchestras and elaborate stage settings will be employed in the two theatres. Both houses will be constructed along the most modern lines and will contain the most recent innovations in the way of equipment. It is estimated that over two millions of dollars will be expended in constructing and furnishing both theatres, this on top of the property cost of the same figure, making a total initial investment exceeding four million dollars.

The fronts of both theatres will be constructed of glazed cotta and will be very ornate. There will be a double ornamental marquee extending to the curb running the entire length of the houses. The floors and walls of the lobbies will be of white and green marble and a large foyer will also assure ample protection for crowds waiting to purchase tickets, against inclement weather.

An unusual feature of the present plans for the two houses are the plans calling for an immense tea and soda grille. The tea room will be located in the basement with entrances from the theatre foyers and will be readily accessible from within the houses or from the street. The soda grille will be situated on the main floor near the theatre entrances and will accommodate 1,500 patrons. Flanking the entrances to both theatres will be smart individual shops, while the front of the building will be given over to exclusive offices.

When one enters either theatre, they will be confronted with a scene of luxury and quiet splendor. Scattered through the lobbies, foyers and promenades will be luxuriously upholstered divans and settees and the walls will be adorned with the paintings of masters. There will be nothing of a flagrant or gaudy nature in the scheme of decoration and it is anticipated that the finished theatres will reflect only quiet elegance and refined taste.

Concealed lighting systems will be employed in both houses and electrical engineers are now at work planning a new illumination project, which will make it possible for a patron to read the program in the theatre while the picture is being projected. This will do away with the inconvenience of groping for seats and the attending difficulties of a poorly lighted theatre. When the system is installed the auditoriums of the London houses will be completely filled with a softly subdued light that is restful to the eye. At the same time it will be impossible for the patrons to detect its source. Although subdued, the illumination will be of sufficient nature to insure reading, without eye strain, of the finest printed matter.

Other innovations in the contemplated cinema palaces include the most modern ventilating and heating system, plate glass inclosed projection rooms equipped with a battery of six machines each and retiring or rest apartments that will surpass many fashionable drawing rooms. Then there will be lengthy promenades where patrons may stroll between rows of palms and hothouse plants, during intermissions.

The London theatres will feature British-made pictures. It will undoubtedly appear unique to many British pioneers to witness the passing of the old Empire theatre, with its rare traditions, and the coming of the more modern form of entertainment—motion pictures. In the past twenty years but few Canadians who visited London, failed to pay their respects to the landmark of early theatricals in England. But inasmuch as the new theatres, which will replace the old Empire and the likewise aged Queen's Hotel, will be owned and managed by British subjects, Londoners will be assured a continuation of the time-honored conventionalities.

At the offices of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, it was stated that tremendous difficulties as well as strong competitive bidding had to be overcome before the deal was finally consummated. It was originally anticipated that there would be opposition in purchasing the property involved, but when it came time to sign the final papers giving possession to the Allens, bidders from all over the world appeared on the scene and as a result, the total cost of the property was augmented by $150,000.

Pre-Review of "Yes or No"—Talmadge

BY WIRE TO THE NEWS: Norma Talmadge's latest vehicle is a very peculiar offering. It is two stories in one, both sequences showing the Philanders at work, using methods of the approved movie sort.

Miss Talmadge appears in a dual role as the object of said Philander's desire, apparently without reason unless it is to hold forth the suggestion that from this fact some unexpected twist will be forthcoming at the end of the picture, but nothing like this happens.

As the wife of the mechanic she repulses the villain and lives happy with hubby after he invests in a washing machine which brings wealth. As the better half of the business man she listens to the tempter with the result that she is finally driven to suicide when the object of her affections casts her off.

Both stories are carried along by cutting from one to the other, neither of them having incident enough of more than ordinary quality and only Miss Talmadge's personality and splendid acting on her part and by a fine supporting cast lift the production to a plane above the average program offering, unless the spectator may find entertainment in the somewhat novel idea of the two parallel stories and in making comparisons.

The titles for the most part over-reach while trying to point the moral we have referred to.

Sister Nathalia is given a part which is almost dragged in, since it has little bearing on the unfolding of either story. She does not screen any too well, nor does she show any great amount of the talents which have made her sisters famous.—J. S. Dickerson, Cleveland.

Exhibitor Convention

"And this is the problem that confronts other exhibitors, too. The only solution to the problem is organization and the support of the exhibitor to the independent producer. Co-operate with the independent producer by doing business with him on the deposit system plan. He needs your money to make pictures for you."

Mr. Loew concluded with the remark that he meant no offense to the exhibitors of the land when he used the name Loew in connection with Metro pictures. He thought the name would be an asset. However, he would have two titles to all his pictures made, he said, so that no exhibitor would be compelled to run his name in connection with a Metro picture, contrary to his better judgment.

The credentials of everyone who attended the sessions were subjected to rigid examination by the Credentials Committee.

Alfred Black of Boston, took exception to the fact that his right to enter the Convention Hall was challenged, failing to receive the final report of the Credentials Committee that he had been reseated as a qualified member of the Convention, issued a statement declaring his organization, withdrew from the convention because it was being railroaded. He also took exception to the acceptance of the slide advertising plan.

An interesting feature of Wednesday's session was the meeting between Frank Rembusch and Adolph Zukor.

Zukor is reported to have said Paramount would not buy theatres could it be assured exhibition of its product. His remarks were later reported to the convention.

The social end of the convention was not neglected, the visiting exhibitors and their relatives being in receipt of every hospitality. A moonlight ride on Lake Erie on Tuesday night, visits to points of interest; and special shows of big coming pictures pleasurably passing leisure hours.

Sunday Shows Contested in City of Detroit

Detroit exhibitors may face a determined movement to close all places of amusement in the city on Sunday. The campaign would include the public dance halls and parks as well as the theatres. W. A. Atkinson, superintendent of the Recreation Commission, has been asked by the Social Service committee of the Detroit Council of Churches to take this step. There is a state law against Sunday amusements, but it has not been enforced in years, except in a few small towns in the state. All the downtown theatres have been limited in their advertising in the Detroit News to two inches on Sunday and an inch or less daily because of the attitude taken by this paper in criticizing the theatres.

News Reel Criticism Arouses Protest

THE recent appearance in the New York Call of a criticism of the news reel, claiming that it is partisan, and its reproduction in the New York Times, has elicited a protest from the editor of the International News Reel in the form of a letter to the New York Times.

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, is quoted as saying that the "screen news reel is obviously partisan." The International News Reel, in answer to this, challenges the exhibitor to produce one single instance in the International News Reel in which reprehensible bias has been demonstrated by the editor.

"In answer to the statement in The Call," continues the letter to the New York Times, "that news reels 'do not present pictures of strikers being clubbed down, for instance,' we will say that if we are furnished with good negative of strikers being clubbed down, or any other similar 'capitalistic' activities, we will gladly run them and pay a good price for the negative.

"If Dr. Riesenfeld has any facts to support his alleged assertions," concludes the letter, "he should produce them for the good of the industry and the public at large."

Picture Folk Perform in West for Legion Post

Prominent members of the West Coast Motion Picture colony took part in a benefit presentation of the Augustus Thomas drama "Arizona," at Clunes Auditorium, Los Angeles, on the evenings of June 3-4, as an aid to the Hollywood Post of the American Legion. In most instances this was the first work done on the stage since the principals went into pictures with the exception of vaudeville acts. The cast included Clara Kimball Young in the leading feminine role with Hobart Bosworth playing opposite. Dustin Farnum was seen in the part of Lieut. Danton, which he played on the stage for several seasons. Gloria Swanson took the part of the school teacher and Theo. Roberts the role of the sheriff. Wm. Desmond was "Tony." Sessue Hayakawa took the part of a Chinese servant. Bessie Barriscale, Milton Sills and Chas. Murray were other members of the cast. Clark Irbine was in charge of publicity and advertising.

Hiram Abrams Elected United Artist Head

At a meeting held June 9 Hiram Abrams was elected president of the United Artists Corp.

It was a foregone conclusion on the resignation of Oscar Price that Mr. Abrams would succeed to the office.

Dennis O'Brien, the attorney, was continued as vice-president, and Albert H. T. Banzhaf, attorney for D. W. Griffith, as secretary.

All of the Big Four, except Chaplin, were present at the meeting.

Methodist Church Commends the Screen

The recognition of motion pictures as a means of church education and the commendation of the Methodist Episcopal Church by the general conference of the work already accomplished by the Centenary Conservation Committee in its department of motion pictures and stereopticons was one of the most progressive and important actions taken by the Methodists in their quadrennial meeting just closed at Des Moines, Iowa.

The committee discussed the matter from every point of view, including the attitude the Methodist Church should take to motion pictures, and was unanimous in its recommendation to the general conference. That conservative body of churchmen in endorsing the committee's action makes it the official act of Methodism.

Exhibitors File Protest Against City's Action

On petitions filed last week with the Massachusetts supreme court asking for a writ of mandamus against the selectmen of Adams, Mass., Thomas F. and Margaret A. Russell ask the court to compel the selectmen to grant them a license for daily moving picture shows in Ad-Taylor theatre on Park street, in that city.

In their petition, the Russells claim that for years they operated a moving picture theatre at Adams and were required to secure licenses only for Sunday programs.

Accessory Show Called Off by Opposition

THE plans for the motion picture accessory shows, scheduled for Cleveland during convention days, was called off, with the following letter, issued on June 5, giving the reasons:

"We regret to advise you that owing to serious opposition raised through letters signed by Sid Cohen and Sam Bullock attacking the show as well as other adverse conditions we feel that it is advisable to cancel all reservations for the motion picture accessory show to have been held in Gray's Armory, June 8 to 11, inclusive.

"We anticipated no opposition to the show inasmuch as it was our intention to divide any profits with the national exhibitors' association. However, since the opposition has arisen we have decided to abandon the idea and pocket our financial losses.

"While there were a number of manufacturers and film producers supporting the movement we feel that out of consideration for the loyalty of these firms and individuals it would be unwise to continue the show with a limited number of exhibitors which would not assure the great success anticipated for the exhibition.

"We thank you for your interest in the show and greatly appreciate your loyal support while regretting deeply any inconvenience you may experience.

"NATIONAL INDEPENDENT MOTION PICTURE MACHINE & ACCESSORY SHOW."

National Association in Annual Meeting in Cleveland

Variety of Topics Discussed and Directors for Ensuing Year Elected

"KEEP politics off the screen," declared William A. Brady, retiring president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at the annual meeting of that Association held Tuesday at the headquarters of the Old Colony Club in the Hotel Cleveland. "There are many persons who realize the power of the screen, who will be trying to use it for political purposes," he continued, "but it should be made emphatic that the screen of this country is not in politics. Neither should a man be asked to pay his money to go to the theatre and then be forced to sit through the presentation of a lot of advertising pictures."

Matters of importance not alone to the motion picture industry, but also to the motion picture patrons were discussed at the meeting, which was attended by many of the most prominent film men of the country. One resolution pledged the Association to the program of the production, distribution and exhibition of selected pictures for young people.

The amendment of every state constitution so as to guarantee the motion picture screen the same freedom now guaranteed the press and spoken word by those same constitutions was a recommendation made by the Censorship Committee in its annual report.

"While no state in 1920 has written upon its statute books a censorship law," the Censorship Committee reported, "and while no censorship law has been enacted since our National Association has been organized, censorship continues to be the overshadowing menace to our industry. Well intentioned men and women, firm in their belief that they are doing a public service, are advocating censorship, virtually asking that civilization take a backward step, and that the motion picture, a medium for thought expression, be censored prior to exhibition to enforce their varied opinions of moral standards.

"The intolerance of these men and women and the danger of their propaganda is illustrated in the attack recently made by a religious denomination in convention assembled. The same delegates who advocated a censorship of the motion picture attacked the Associated Press, that great international, unbiased medium for the collection and dissemination of news, urging a censorship of the press as well as of the motion picture. Such bigotry would prevent that free expression of thought which is necessary if any people are to retain their freedom.

The report of Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott showed that three times during last year the vigilance and activity of the National Association had prevented the closing of the motion picture theatres of the country. He also recommended an affiliation of the National Association with similar film organizations of European countries, and a committee was appointed by President Brady to see if such an affiliation could be brought about.

Reports were received from the Sunday Opening, the Transportation and the Film Theft Committees on their activities during the last year. It was stated by the Sunday Opening Committee that more theatres are open now on Sunday than ever before. The Film Theft Committee reported that many dealers in stolen films had been driven out of business by the activities of that Committee.

President Brady appointed as a committee to confer with a similar committee of the exhibitors, if the occasion should arise, the following: Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldwyn, W. R. Rothacker, Fred J. Beecroft, Martin J. Quigley, Charles C. Pettijohn and Harry M. Berman.

Directors of the National Association for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

Producers' Division—Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; J. Stuart Blackton, J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc.; Wm. A. Brady, Wm. A. Brady Picture Plays, Inc.; Paul Brunet, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Wm. Fox, Fox Film Corporation; Samuel Goldwyn, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; D. W. Griffith, D. W. Griffith Enterprises; Carl Laemmle, Universal Film Mfg. Co.; Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corporation; Joseph M. Schenck, Norma Talmadge Pictures Corporation; Myron Selznick, Select Pictures Corporation; Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph Co. of America.

Distributors' Division—Percy L. Waters, Triangle Distributing Corporation; W. E. Atkinson, Metro Pictures Corp.; B. N. Busch, Republic Distributing Corporation; R. H. Cochrane, Universal Film Mfg. Co.; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Gabriel L. Hess, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Lewis Innerarity, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Walter W. Irwin; Charles C. Pettijohn, Select Pictures Corporation; Wm. Wright, Vitagraph, Inc.; W. R. Sheehan, Fox Film Corporation; J. D. Williams, First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Supply and Equipment Division—J. E. Brulator, Eastman Films; Harry H. Allen, Wyanoak Publishing Co.; Willard B. Cook, Pathescope Co. of America; Joseph F. Coufal, Standard Slide Co.; Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Lithographing Co.; B. F. Porter; E. M. Porter, Precision Machine Co.; Will C. Smith, Nicholas Power Co.; L. P. Weber, Acme Lithographing Co.

General Division — John C. Flinn, George Blaisdell, Fred J. Beecroft, Paul H. Cromelin, Paul Gulick, Lesly Mason, James R. Quirk, Fred Rothenberg, Thomas G. Wiley.

The directors will hold a meeting in New York in September for the election of officers, and in the interim the old officers will hold over.

Robertson-Cole to Build Studio in Hollywood

As a link in the chain of mutual profit, by which it is binding together producer, distributor and exhibitor, Robertson-Cole has acquired, in Los Angeles, an extensive property upon which it is erecting a large studio. For carrying out this undertaking, Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., was incorporated.

The huge studio building will house the various producing units of Robertson-Cole. The project calls for an initial investment of $500,000. No further expense will be spared in giving the different companies making Robertson-Cole pictures every possible support. While Robertson-Cole has no intention of making pictures itself, it believes that by lifting studio detail from the minds of the various directors it will enable them to better concentrate on artistic and dramatic values.

The new studio building, located between Melrose and Gower Street, Los Angeles, will be finished in the fall.

Neilan, on Way East, Refutes Rumor

THE New York office of Marshall Neilan Productions officially refuted the report which had gained considerable prominence around the trade during the past week, that Mr. Neilan had severed connections with the Associated Producers, by stating that he had just been made vice-president of that organization.

The announcement also states that Mr. Neilan has just left California for his first visit to New York since last Summer and that on his arrival here early next week, several important announcements may be expected.

Mr. Neilan, it is stated, is now enroute to New York from California for a consultation with the First National Exhibitors Circuit in connection with new productions to be released through that organization in accordance with his existing arrangement. The director-producer has in mind several big plans effecting his future First National releases involving the production of a number of internationally famous stories, necessitating personal consultations with the officials of the releasing company here.

Details concerning Mr. Neilan's plans in connection with his trip abroad are also expected on his arrival in New York. Advance arrangements for his tour through Europe are now well underway.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

George Oldfield has arrived from Los Angeles to take up the duties of assistant manager at Realart's Chicago Office. Mr. Oldfield, although young in years, has had wide experience as an exchange man. He recently has been connected with the sales department of Vitagraph at Los Angeles and St. Louis and previous to that was manager of George Kleine's Pittsburgh Office for a number of years, leaving the Kleine organization to serve with the colors overseas.

Carl Laemmle was in Chicago last week, having Centuried over from New York in order to say good-bye and have a little visit with Windy City friends previous to his departure for Europe on July 8th. While here he was quartered at the Sisson Hotel.

Men who were in the service during the war are invited to join the Chicago Theatrical Post of the American Legion. Get in touch at once with anyone of the following well known men in the picture industry: Edwin Trinz of the West End Theatre, Martin Saxe of the Pantheon Theatre, Max Balaban of the Riviera Theatre or Nat Wolf of First National.

The pre-view of "The Wonder Man," featuring Georges Carpentier, the great French fighter, brought a crowd of exhibitors, society women and reviewers to the Playhouse last week. It was Chicago's first opportunity to see Carpentier on the screen and it was the unanimous verdict that he, indeed, is a wonder man. The sustained interest of the picture with its element of mystery also received very favorable comment and the opinion of those who witnessed the pre-view was that Robertson-Cole have one of the best box-office attractions of the year in "The Wonder Man."

M. A. Dodge stopped over in Chicago for a day on his return from New York for a conference with President Woody and General Manager Milligan of the Capital Film Company, which is handling his latest picture, "The Witch's Lure." From Chicago Mr. Dodge went to Milwaukee and expects to be in Los Angeles within a few days to push production on his next picture.

Watterson R. Rothacker lost his oldest employee June third—oldest in point of service. Ten years ago Miss Marguerite Morrison became Mr. Rothacker's stenographer when the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company consisted of a small rented desk in a small office. While Mr. Rothacker was a loser, John G. Hahn, Secretary of the Rothacker Company, was a big winner as Mr. Rothacker lost his secretary but Mr. Hahn won a bride. With the former Miss Morrison's departure, Mr. Hahn, by the way, becomes the oldest Rothacker worker, having been the second worker to join the pioneer in the Industrial-Educational pictures field.

Julius Stern, president of the Century Rainbow Comedy Company passed through Chicago last week en route to New York from the West Coast where he will confer with Carl Laemmle, who, by the way, is his brother-in-law, on Universal's future policy in the production of serials. Mr. Stern expressed himself as much interested in the Chicago Examiner-Elks' Beauty Contest, to the winner of which Carl Laemmle will give a year's contract at a ten thousand dollar salary to appear in pictures, and said that he may give several of the contestants a chance to appear in his productions.

Clarence Kolster brought the negative of Mack Sennett's "Married Life" to the Chicago Rothacker laboratory last week. "Slim" will remain at the laboratory ten days.

George West, of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, just landed back in Chicago after a most successful five weeks' selling trip. Rapid Fire George closed contracts with the Magnet Film Company for Iowa and Nebraska on the Melbourn Moranti and Billy Franey comedies; United Film Company for southern Illinois and eastern Missouri for Moranti and Franey comedies; First National for western Missouri and Kansas on Moranti and Franey; Supreme Photo Company, for Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming for Moranti, Franey, Howell, Guinan and West; Supreme Photo Company for Oregon, Montana, Washington and Idaho, for Moranti, Franey and Guinan; Consolidated for California, Nevada, Arizona, Hawaiian Islands for Moranti, Franey and Guinan; and the Pearce Film Company for Mississippi and Louisiana on Billy West, Alice Howell, Gale Henry, Melbourn Moranti, Texas Guinan, Billy Franey, and Napoleon and Sally Monkey Comedies.

Through Mr. West, "The Water Plug," featuring Billy Franey, was run at Grauman's Los Angeles California picture palace for a week and proved as big a success as it did at Barbee's Loop Theatre in Chicago.

Harry Spanuth, who has been in New York for sometime in the interest of his Billy Whisker series of comedies, is back at his desk in the Consumers Building and reports that while in the east, he practically closed arrangements for the distribution of these pictures and that an announcement of the details will be forthcoming within a few days.

Watterson R. Rothacker, who was in Cleveland this week for the Exhibitor's Conventions is planning to spend several days at his St. Louis industrial division branch office next week. He will then return to Chicago for a short time and sail on the Olympic July 8th for London where he will build a film laboratory.

Frank G. Conklin's appointment as Assistant Manager of the Eastern Industrial Division is announced by Douglas D. Rothacker, Industrial Division Manager. Mr. Conklin was formerly manager and sales promotion specialist for the Travelers Insurance Company in New York City.

J. W. Carnick, salesman for Pathe in charge of the central Illinois territory, has joined the Rothacker Industrial sales force.

Manager Aschmann recently has made several changes in the Chicago Pathe sales organization which now is lined up as follows: Feature Sales Department, Branch Feature Sales Manager S. B. Waite and L. Y. Crump, P. C. Havill, A. G. Spencer, D. R. Davis, A. F. Hickox, salesman; Short Subject Sales Department, R. Salkin, P. De Outo, Frank Harris, C. Keppler, J. S. Gillick, H. W. Ricker, N. Whitmoyer and T. G. Meyers, salesman; and F. P. Ishmeal, Circuit Sales Manager.

Joseph L. Friedman, President of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, returned from New York bringing with him an unusual supply of attractive short subjects for Chicago territory. Among the films that he purchased for Chicago Exhibitors are the following: Twelve two-reel Muriel Ostriche Comedies, Eighteen two-reel Monty Banks Comedies, Twenty-six two-reel Polly Moran Comedies, Twenty-six Smiling Bill Jones Comedies, Fifty-two Urban Movie Chats, "Twenty-six Snap Shots of the Photoplay Artists at Work." These in addition to Christie Comedies, Hank Mann Comedies and the Gumps give Mr. Friedman a great supply of fun makers.

Lee Herz, president of the Silee Film Exchange, Chicago, has just returned from New York where he purchased the territorial rights for Illinois for "Blind Love," which will be released between July 1st and September 1st. "Blind Love" is a six-reel feature produced by Gerald F. Bacon, the story being by Max Marcin, author of "The Eyes of Youth," "Cheating Cheaters" and "The House of Glass." In the cast appearing in "Blind Love" is George Le Guere, at present playing in Oliver Morosco's play entitled "Mamma's Affair," now running at the Cort theatre, Chicago.

Among the purchases that Mr. Herz made in New York also is a series of three five-reel features starring Rex Ray.

Martin and Savage, of Keokuk, Iowa, took over the Colonial Theatre of that city on May 15th, according to Mr. Savage, who was a Chicago visitor last week.

S. J. Gregory, of the Illinois Theatre, Chicago Heights, is planning a motor trip to the East early in July and expects to visit in Boston for some time. He will be accompanied by Sam Jaffee, secretary and treasurer of the S. J. Gregory Theatrical Company, owners of houses in Chicago Heights, Hammond, Indiana, and other nearby cities.

G. E. Pomeroy, recently connected with Vitagraph, has joined the Superior Screen Service' sales force, and according to Manager Harry Weiss, will cover the Indiana territory for that company.

Harry Gramp, owner of a string of theatres, including houses in Rock Island, Galesburg, and Beloit, Wisconsin, has added the Amuseu Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa, to his string.

R. T. Smith, assistant manager of Superior Screen Service, Incorporated, has just purchased a handsome bungalow situated at 7636 East End Avenue, for a reported consideration of $25,000. Manager Harry Weiss, it is rumored, has bought the adjoining property, and will erect a bungalow thereon.

Plans for the five-story hotel, store and theatre building to be erected at the corner of Sheridan Road and Lawrence Avenue, near the Riviera Theatre, by the Amalgamated Theatre Corporation, of which Barney Balaban is president, have been completed by Architects C. W. and George L. Rapp, and it is understood work will be started shortly on the structure which, it is estimated, will cost $750,000. The building is to be of fireproof, re-enforced concrete construction, with pressed brick and terra cotta.

The G. O. P. Convention, which met in Chicago this week, was the first event of the kind to be filmed for the movies. Special lights were installed in the huge Coliseum and the work of nominating the Republican candidate for President was recorded by the International Film Service camera men under the supervision of E. B. Hatrick, general news manager for the International, who came to Chicago especially to direct the taking of these pictures.

Ready to Use Props to Be Furnished for "Idol Dancer"

Michigan Cities May Obtain Complete Lobby Display from Exchange

CO-OPERATION among exhibitors to increase public response to exploitation for the purpose of reducing the cost of this branch of showing motion pictures has provided Michigan cities and towns with rare treats in the past six weeks. Results from the box office standpoint have been so satisfactory it is more than likely that the demand from exhibitors will force the preparation of special "props" and the other paraphernalia for special presentation in connection with future big feature releases in the territory.

Harry Scott, manager of the First National Exchange in Detroit, may be regarded as the pioneer in providing exhibitors in his territory with ready-for-use presentations. "The Idol Dancer" was the picture which developed the idea. Mr. Scott felt that this romance of the South Seas would do extraordinary business for any exhibitor if it was properly presented and Hawaiian music, in his opinion, was one of the essentials. He found that if solid bookings could be promised, Hawaiian orchestras and dancers could be procured at a relatively small daily cost. In his preliminary announcements of the release of the picture he sent a query to exhibitors asking how much they felt they could pay for such an attraction to be used as part of the presentation for "The Idol Dancer."

The replies were such that he immediately booked the Royal Hawaiian Trio and Princess Kawaa, billed as the "Champion Hula Dancer of Honolulu," for three months solid time. Suggestions were sent out to the exhibitors booking the picture as to special stage settings, and lobby displays that could be prepared at small cost.

A typical result of the co-operation between the exchange and the exhibitors is shown in the way "The Idol Dancer" was put on at the Majestic Gardens theatre in Kalamazoo, a city of 50,000 population, by W. Griffith Mitchell, the manager. Incidentally it was the first special presentation ever given in Kalamazoo, and Mr. Mitchell reaped the benefits of the extreme novelty.

Beaver board and paint in the hands of a scenic artist prepared a plentiful supply of imitation thatched roofing, which in itself is as tropical a looking "prop" as could have been used. Enough of this material was taken to fit across the front of the marquee of the theatre. Deep blue electric bulbs were used in back of this sign and in the entire lighting of the marquee and the lobby, adding to the tropical effect and also enhancing the realism of the imitation thatching. The lobby was lined with the prepared beaver board, as were the entrances to the auditorium. The stage was prepared so that the screen appeared to have been fastened to the outside wall of a thatched hut. The settings were all of beaver board and canvas. The blue lighting effect was continued on the stage.

Kalamazoo is the home of the Gibson mandolin company, and the fact that "The Idol Dancer" lent itself especially to string music led Mr. Mitchell to make a proposition to the mandolin company of a special Gibson orchestra for the showing of the picture. The company was glad of the advertising and in addition to providing all the necessary instructions stood half of the salaries of the players. An orchestra was formed, using first and second mandolins, mandolas, mando-cellos, mandos-bass, harp, guitar and a piano.

The troupe of Hawaiians put on their act just before the run of the picture with the idea of creating a different atmosphere from that following the finish of a two-reel comedy. With the ending piece of the act, which was an instrumental number of a popular Hawaiian air, the lights were lowered and the run of the feature commenced, the string orchestra joining in with the Hawaiian players, so that the beautiful south sea moonlight scene with which Mr. Griffith opens the picture was ushered in to the plaintive croon of the Hawaiian guitars and the soft singing tinkle of the mandolins.

The run of the picture established a profits as well as a receipts and attendance record for the theatre. The appreciation which the Kalamazoo public gave to the efforts of Mr. Mitchell, and the reception given to the special presentation of the Griffith picture in every part of Michigan where the Hawaiians and special efforts were used, has caused any number of requests from exhibitors who did not believe the extra attractions would pay, to give them another chance to co-operate. Mr. Scott is planning to offer special presentation on all FN pictures as soon as he can make the necessary arrangements.

Theophilis Had a Regular Hunch

GOING to the Lorain, Ohio, Opera House during the week of May 9th, was just like taking a trip to the orient, only it was much cheaper. However, all of the inconveniences of travel were eliminated, while all of the pleasures of foreign atmosphere were supplied in good measure.

"The Flame of the Desert" was the inspiration of Manager Peter Theophilis. He had a hunch that the picture would stand a lot of atmospheric trimming, and according to his report of business for the week, his hunch was right.

To begin with, Manager Theophilis started out to spread "atmosphere" all over Lorain. He did this with the aid of two snow-white more-or-less Arabian steeds, mounted by two equally more-or-less genuine Arabians. Anyhow, they looked like Arabians, and they rode up and down the main streets of Lorain for four days, heralding the fact that "The Flame of the Desert" was the current attraction at the Opera House.

Bringing the "atmosphere" a little nearer home, Manager Theophilis had two other Arabians standing at the entrance of the theatre. They flanked the doorway, standing, with arms folded, as still as statues.

But the big punch came when you were seated within, and the show commenced. Just before the feature started, the heavy velvet curtains parted on a scene of oriental splendor. A specially painted background, flanked by dozens and dozens of palms, gave a tropical appearance that looked just as you'd imagine the real thing would look. And gracefully posed amidst these palms were ten maidens. The group was composed from an advanced dancing class and rendered the "Dance of the Enchantress."

The prologue was a tremendous hit with the patrons of the Opera House. It brought people from near and far. It brought regular patrons, and many who had never been inside the Opera House

Columbus Exhibitor Takes Advantage of Aeroplane Convention

Uses Flying Machine to Exploit "Butterfly Man" with Audience Ready Made

EXPLOITATION for motion pictures. One kind creates a situation and then follows the created condition to a logical conclusion. The other kind of exploitation takes advantage of a made situation, and rides in on the tide of local interest.

That's what Manager H. Frankel of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, Ohio, did the week of May 9th, in connection with the first showing in the state of "The Butterfly Man." Frankel tied his fortunes to the other fellow's kite, and beat him at his own game.

It so happened that during the week prior to May 9th, the Aerial Club of America held its first annual convention in Columbus. A lot of flyers were in the city, of course, and a big exhibition was planned. Arrangements called for the aerialists to perform over State House square during the noon hour of a certain day. Now Manager Frankel knew what day that was to be. He knew that everybody in Columbus who could, would be in the neighborhood of State House square at that time. He also knew a student of Ohio State University, Joseph B. Kuhn, who had been in the airplane service during the war. Kuhn likes flying, and has a little plane of his own, which he uses for commercial purposes.

Manager Frankel engaged the services of Mr. Kuhn for the day of the aerial exhibition. He painted the bottom of the plane with big letters spelling "The Butterfly Man." And he had Kuhn fly over State House square just fifteen minutes before the big show was scheduled to start. His audience was all set. They were out looking for planes, and along came Kuhn, and he got the attention of all those thousands of eyes. But Kuhn wasn't alone. In his plane were a mechanician and another man. The three of 'em seemed to be having a nice time while the plane was flying straight, but when it suddenly dipped, one of the occupants seemed to bend over and as the plane dipped more and more, he lost his balance and fell out.

Then there was some real excitement. Some women screamed. Some fainted. One of them turned in an ambulance alarm, and amid all the noise came the clanging of the ambulance bell. Then they reached the mangled form of their fallen victim and learned from the sawdust that surrounded him that he was a dummy, and that he was only another advertisement for "The Butterfly Man."

This publicity had a wonderful effect on business, according to Manager Frankel, who reported crowds standing in line before the Majestic all week. Everybody in Columbus knew about the stunt. And whoever knew that, knew also that the "The Butterfly Man," was the object of the stunt. And how the newspapers used the story! It was on the front page of the Columbus Dispatch. It was on the society page of both the Dispatch and the Ohio State Journal. In fact, the two papers, in their Sunday editions of May 9th carried fifteen unsolicited notices about "The Butterfly Man." These fifteen notices, if assembled would have covered an entire page.

Manager Frankel is a showman as well as an exhibitor. His job is a bigger one than to start a ball rolling. He keeps the ball rolling. And so, having received more than his share of publicity with his aerial exhibition, he kept that publicity focused on his theatre, and his show all week by putting on a special prologue with scenery, lighting effects, and all the trimmings that make a bad show good, and good show better. Four young girls danced a butterfly dance in this prologue, as nearly like the one danced in the "Butterfly Man" as possible. Costumes, scenery and gestures were duplicated. The result was that the picture seemed real. It made the story an actual happening, instead of a play, and it made it more interesting to more people, judging from the amount of business done during the run of the picture.

Branham's Stunt Stuff Sets Town Talking

"Down on the Farm" Gets Great Eploitation Campaign at Minneapolis

"DOWN ON THE FARM" was an attraction which Charles Branham, who has been playing the United Artists attractions now available at the Minneapolis Auditorium for week runs, gave an exploitation campaign which will be long remembered by residents of the Twin Cities.

Branham is a native of Minneapolis and an old newspaper man with thousands of friends and acquaintances in the city.

Naturally with his knowledge of the newspaper game and being a good showman as well, he began his advertising campaign in the papers. Next came the bill boards and other more orthodox forms of publicity.

After this came stunt stuff that set the town talking. The week before the Sennett comedy was to open at the Auditorium a "Rube" band with the biggest giant in the Middle West as the star attraction, paraded the streets creating no end of attention.

The band leader was John Assen, the village cut-up of New Rockford, N. D., who is seven feet four inches high and weighs 391 pounds. He wanted to get into "the movies" and so Mr. Branham gave him a chance to lead a "rube" orchestra in a movie theatre, did all sorts of antics on the streets, and during the prologue, was one of the dancers. His work during the week created all sorts of attattractive comment.

The only thing done in exploitation on the exterior of the theatre were attractively painted signs, since this sort of material at this particular section of Minneapolis is far better than exterior decorations. But the interior of the theatre was turned into a real honest-to-goodness, with hay and straw everywhere, and farm implements to be found on all sides, while the stage was decorated precisely like the loft of a real barn.

The orchestra was tastefully dressed in full farm-hand regalia, wearing large straw hats and playing all of the old time "hoedown" music that was ever written. As a prologue to the picture "country girls and village fellers" danced a good old-fashioned square dance, with practically every one in the audience having the time of their lives when the commands came forth, "Salute your partners," "balance all," while the audience kept time to the music.

Every day the management pulled new stunts, such as would legitimately draw crowds, never exaggerating their product, but just telling the public enough about, and keeping on telling them. The newspaper reviewers were very generous with their praises of the picture, but the best of all came from the word-of-mouth business that was obtained by those people who packed the theatre the first few days.

When McCormick Played "The Virgin of Stamboul"

S. Barrett McCormick's presentation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" was most elaborate. An attractive lobby display (left and below) and a still more pretentious prologue were features of the engagement.

Co-operative Publicity Discussed from New Angle

Theatres Located in Different Towns Play Same Attractions Day and Date

BLAZING the trail for smaller town exhibitors situated conveniently nearby—although their respective cities bear different names—comes a tried-and-proven exploitation stunt from Robert Hayward, manager of the Regent theatre, Beaver Falls, Pa,. and Louis Nadler, manager of the Majestic theatre, Rochester.

To correctly understand the plan of Messrs. Hayward and Hadley it is necessary to know the size of their cities. Beaver Falls has a population of 13,100 and Rochester has 5,903 inhabitants. Less than a score of miles separates the two cities and in this day of the automobile and flivver this distance is unimportant.

The policy of day-and-date engagements sponsored by rival theatre managers in the same city for any given special feature attraction and the pooling of exploitation efforts in the accomplishing thereof is not new.

However, to apply this city principle to the smaller town exhibitors is the accomplishment of Messrs. Hayward and Nadler.

Thus far, the Regent theatre of Beaver Falls and the Majestic theatre at Rochester have tried the scheme with but one attraction—"In Old Kentucky." In inaugurating the plan the coöperating exhibitors took full advantage of a local condition applying to their respective cities when they grouped their advertising in the columns of the Beaver Daily Times, which publication has quite a large circulation in Rochester. The managers figured they could obtain a more effective display spread, creating far more word-of-mouth publicity and general interest if they went in for a combination advertisement centering on the points of merit in the picture and consuming but little space for the extollment of the charms of either theatre.

"It is essentially a proposition of creating and meeting a big desire," said Mr. Nadler. "The whole thing can be considered in an out-and-out business way. Grant that a couple of business firms find a new commodity on the market. The firms are located in nearby towns. In order to popularize the article they want to sell, they could well afford to join hands in its exploitation, thus creating the demand and each meeting the demand on a fair and square business basis.

"Putting 'In Old Kentucky' over in either of the two cities would have required almost as much money as we spent for both cities. There was a saving. Furthermore, if Mr. Hayward and I had acted independently of each other with regard to this picture it is likely that neither of us would have experienced a three-day run. As any exhibitor knows, a three-day engagement is quite an event in a town under 20,000 population."

A young star, exploited by bills and "in person"

Mr. Hayward of the Beaver Falls house explains that there is a far more logical reason for the day-and-date in nearby towns than in the same city. It is his contention that the primary reason for the simultaneous showing is a factor of more significance in the smaller towns than in the larger cities.

"The day-and-date showing," said Mr. Hayward, "was conceived for the express purpose of impressing the public with the bigness of a picture. From the time when the first two exhibitors agreed to pool their advertising money and advertise the same picture the main idea for so doing was to convince the public that the picture deemed great enough to be given a simultaneous showing certainly merited patronage. This is not saying that the day-and-date is dependent upon word-of-mouth exploitation for exactly the opposite is true. Even the most casual reader of a newspaper is impressed when he finds that two theatres are giving their unqualified endorsements to the same production. When one house puts its good reputation behind a picture the average theatregoer is not struck. Such is expected. But when two houses favor it with their preferment, then truly the public feels the weight of a double endorsement.

"Mr. Nadler and I take no credit for originating the idea of day-and-date bookings in the large or small towns. Trade paper accounts show that such procedure has been in vogue over a period of eight or ten years off and on. But we do take credit for having put over a good box-office deal for ourselves and if there is any value to other exhibitors located in adjoining towns similar to our own in what we have done we are glad that it be made known."

So far as the word-for-word literary and copy value for other showmen is concerned, the campaign of the Messrs. Nadler and Hayward for "In Old Kentucky" is not vital. But their idea in joining hands, despite the fact that they were separated by more than twenty miles, is new and a bit of pioneer showmanship. And if results in attendance and box office records count for anything, it is certain that the feat put across by Bob Hayward and Louie Nadler will have some good food-for-thought value to other exhibitors.

"Who Am I?" Brings Crowds to "Fortune Teller"

YOU can lead a horse to water but you cannot make it drink. The positive of the old adage is that you can lead a crowd to your box office and make them deposit the necessary admission to your theatre, providing you can excite their curiosity. The difference being that a horse is not always thirsty, but human thirst for motion pictures cannot be satiated.

With this idea in mind, the management of the Bijou theatre in Jackson, Mich., took the suggestion outlined in the press book on "The Fortune Teller." As suggested, they engaged professional "seers" to give demonstrations in connection with the showing of the picture, but they also persuaded one of them to walk around the street in his oriental make-up.

A crystal ball, which is used in "The Fortune Teller," was carried by the man ad in the capacious pockets of his flowing robes he carried a number of cards which he gave out to the hundreds who expressed curiosity in his appearance. The cards merely excited further curiosity for they read—"WHO AM I?—Come to the Bijou and find out."

The best proof of the success of the stunt was the crowds who followed the man to the Bijou and, as above noted, paid the necessary at the box office. The stunt created so much interest that the local papers carried stories about it in sufficient volume to make "The Fortune Teller" the talk of Jackson.

Big Time Exploitation for Small Town Houses

Opportunities for Those Who Operate Shows in the "Tanks" Says Todd

"THERE'S a wonderful opportunity for the man who wants to develop the motion picture theatres in the small towns," Bert Todd, secretary and general manager of the Manheim-Tucker Amusementn Enterprises, National City Bank Building, Cleveland, said recently. "The small town motion picture exhibitor has neglected to read the sign posts on the road to success, and because he has not kept abreast of the times, he has made it possible for others to step in and give the small town fan proportionately the same kind of entertainment that the big town fan is getting."

The Manheim-Tucker Amusement Enterprises owns two big small town motion picture theatres. One is the Utopia, a thousand seat house in Painesville. The other is a house of like size in Geneva. Geneva has a population not in excess of 5,000 people. Painesville's last census numbered about 30,000. "We plan to own a chain of houses in all the principal northern Ohio towns of population from three to thirty thousand. We shall build these houses, so that they shall meet all modern requirements, and shall operate them on the same principle as other chain houses are operated.

"Fundamentally we believe that the small towns in northern Ohio aren't getting a fair deal. Most small town exhibitors think they are doing all that's necessary when they knock out the front of a dilapidated store room, put up a theatre front, plaster it with a couple of posters and run a show. Now that's all wrong. The small towns want pretty theatres. They respond to pleasant surroundings just the same as the big town patrons do. More so. Because they have fewer diversions and take great pride in local civic improvements.

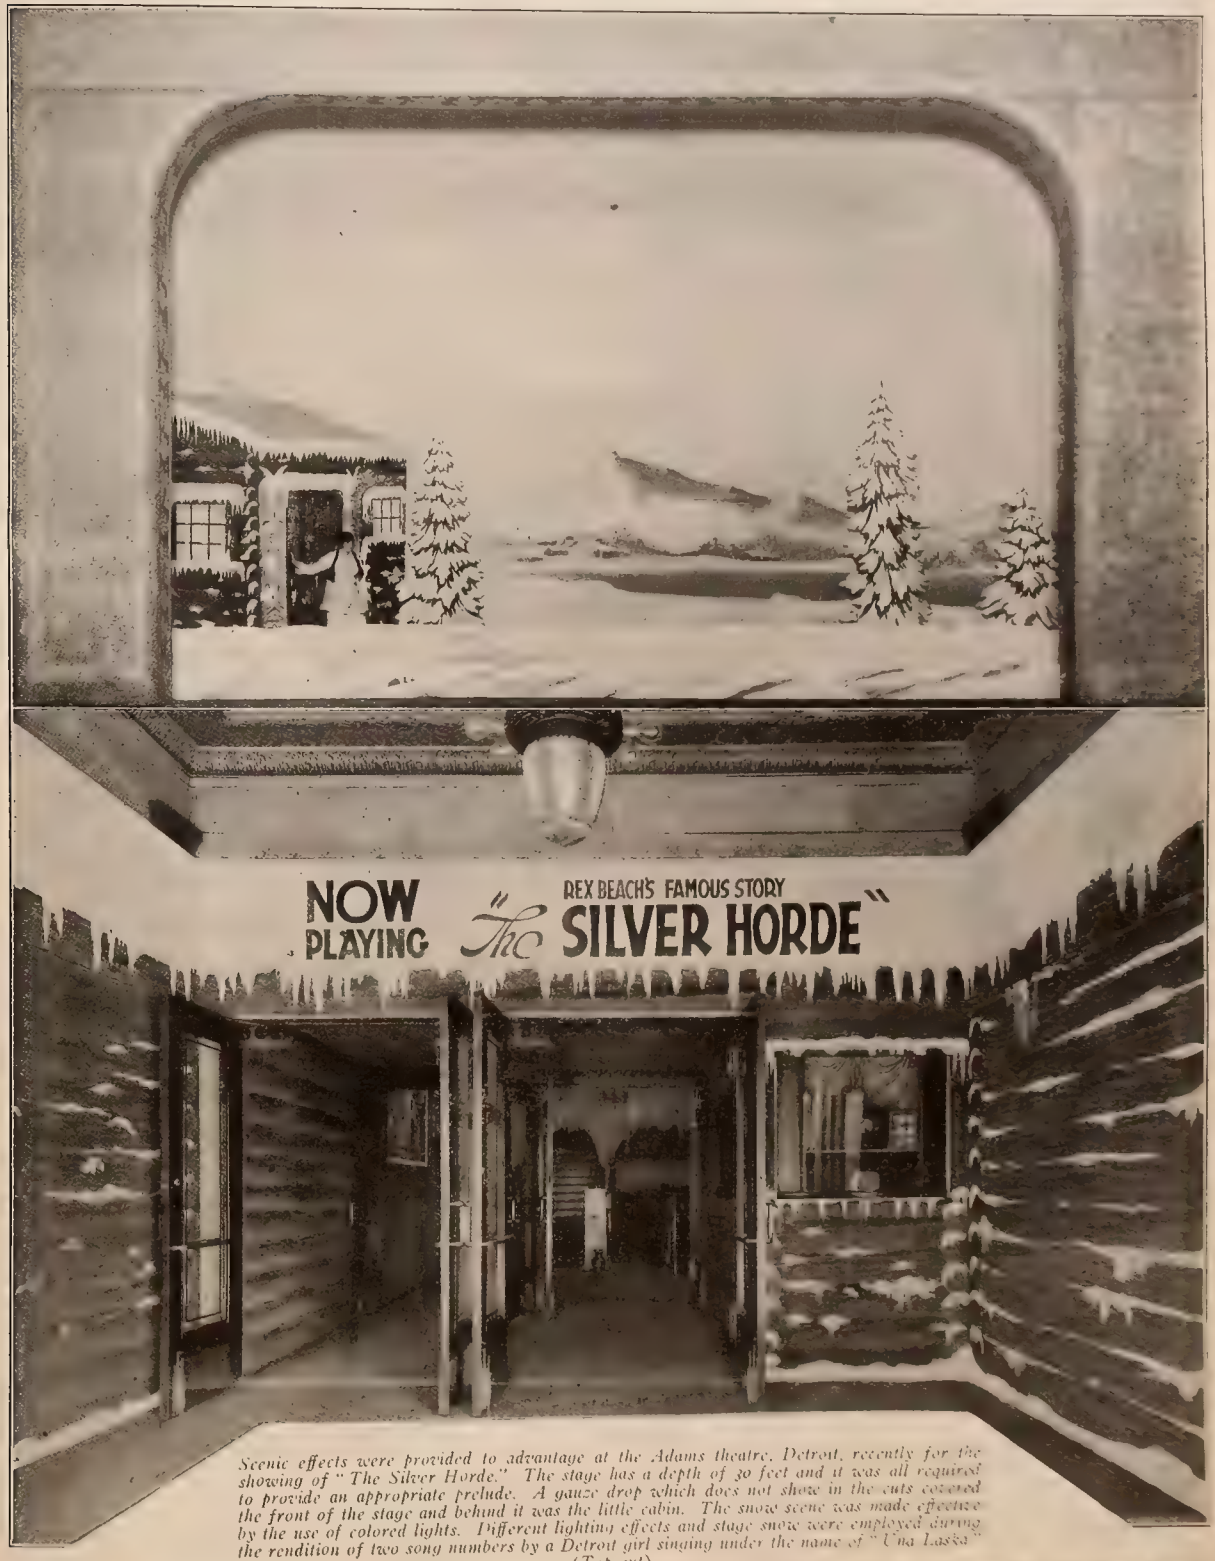
"We also believe in exploitation. That's another thing that most small town exhibitors fight shy of. They're afraid it might cost 'em a couple of dollars. We have been operating the Utopia in Painesville for over a year and by consistent exploitation, we have more than quadrupled the house's receipts. Seldom does a picture pass without special exploitation of some sort. Our displays are seldom costly. A ten dollar bill covers the most elaborate ones. Half of that is the average expenditure. People come from all over to see what the Utopia lobby has by way of lobby surprise. Take this one," Todd said, picking up a picture of his lobby for "Shore Acres," which just completed a phenomenal two-days run at the Utopia, Painesville. "We gave over one entire side of the lobby to a painting of a water scene. It was done on beaver board by Clinton Covert, our drummer, who has a knack for this sort of thing. He turned out the article complete in an hour and a half. The scene was 10x12 feet. In one corner we had a ten-foot lighthouse, built up out of out-of-date window cards. When new cards are placed in display windows the old ones are collected. Placed one over the other and painted, they looked just like shingles. There was an on-again off-again light in the tower of the lighthouse, of course. And there was also a gong in the tower that attracted widespread attention. This gong was also the result of Clinton Covert's fertile brain. He took an old clock, and removed some of its organs, leaving only enough to move a pendulum. He inserted a small gong, and with every full swing of the pendulum, the gong sounded. It was great stuff, and made a lot of conversation. At the foot of the lighthouse were rocks and a small house, supposedly for the lighthouse keeper.

"This whole display didn't cost over five dollars, but it brought in many times five dollars.

"There's another point on which the average small town exhibitor has slipped, and that's in the matter of bookings. It's the usual thing to hear an exhibitor for a neighboring town say that he won't run a picture when it's new because it costs too much money. Now that exhibitor is all wrong. We run a picture in Painesville directly after its first run in Cleveland. Usually the following week. And we have been very successful in this method. Here's the reason. The Sunday Cleveland papers all circulate throughout the nearby towns. Everybody reads 'em. Everybody knows what's going on in town. The papers are full of advertising on the town shows. So we follow right on the heels of the big town, and ride right in on their exploitation. It more than compensates for the big time prices we have to pay for the pictures. Also, many of the small town people go to town and see the shows. They come home and talk about them to their friends. And we show the same productions while they are still being discussed at the family dinner tables. What's the use of waiting until a production is old and dead and forgotten? No matter how good it was in its youth, it will not have the same pull with the public as it had originally.

At the Liberty theatre in Geneva we proceed along the same lines. Big shows and new shows. Only in Geneva we have a more intimate policy of running the house. Mrs. C. Weisenberger is resident manager of the Liberty. She knows everybody in the town. And she makes it her business to know what kind of shows the people of Geneva want to see. How does she find out? Why, she calls on them and visits with them and asks them how their tastes run. And she has a unique way of getting patrons from the towns around Geneva to attend the Liberty. Every once in a while she offers a free pass for a month to the patron who travels the farthest to attend a show at the Liberty theatre. Every ticket that comes in is then marked and to the one who has ventured the farthest, goes the month-pass. That pass is seen by everybody in the place where the winner lives, and the Liberty theatre is talked about on all sides.

If by any chance there should be a few people in Geneva who are not enrolled as regular patrons of the Liberty theatre, Mrs. Weisenburger gets them by offering a pass to the persons giving in the names of ten residents who do not attend the shows. When she gets the names, she calls on them, asks why they stay away from the pictures, and leaves a couple of passes on the sitting room table. It invariably works. And they always become regulars ever after."



The Liberty theatre, Geneva, and the Utopia theatre, Painesville, have also the admission prices in common with the city houses as well as their attractions. They are twenty-eight cents regularly, and thirty-nine cents for special productions.

The Manheim-Tucker Amusement Enterprises do all of their booking from their Cleveland office. They do all of their special exploitation in their Cleveland office. But the local atmosphere of a picture is worked up individually by the local managers—H. F. Lederer in Painesville, and Mrs. Weisenberger in Geneva. As soon as this plan of booking and exploiting and managing is extended to cover fourteen or fifteen houses in towns near Cleveland, as it will within the year, then the old-fashioned, staid, conservative small town exhibitor will be relegated to the ash heap, and all because he wouldn't hitch up to the wheels of progress.

Sugar Sacks Used as Ad for Willow Tree

As a means of coöperating with the New Garrick theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., in its exploitation of "The Willow Tree," A. H. Fischer, branch manager of Metro's Minneapolis exchange, devised a novel exploitation stunt recently. The stunt consisted in printing up a number of little paper sugar sacks, bearing the name of the star, the title of the production, name of the theatre and date of showing, and were placed in one of the big local cafeterias for use by its patrons.

Adams Theatre Employs Scenic Effects to Big Advantage

Scenic effects were provided to advantage at the Adams theatre, Detroit, recently for the showing of "The Silver Horde." The stage has a depth of 30 feet and it was all required to provide an appropriate prelude. A gauze drop which does not show in the cuts covered the front of the stage and behind it was the little cabin. The snow scene was made effective by the use of colored lights. Different lighting effects and stage snow were employed during the rendition of two song numbers by a Detroit girl singing under the name of "Una Laska"

Live News From The Producers

Big Results Expected from "Passers By"

Based on the reports of Pathe reviewers and branch managers, Pathe Exchange, Inc., expects the latest J. Stuart Blackton picture, "Passers By" to surpass in distribution and in popularity anything ever produced by Commodore Blackton. This statement is made after a careful analysis of the advance situation and with full knowledge of the strength of the prediction.

A notable cast has been assembled. Herbert Rawlinson is claimed to be one of the best drawing cards on the screen. William J. Ferguson is one of the best known actors on the American stage and has been identified with the best productions of the last forty years. Tom Lewis and Dick Lee are two other really famous men of the stage who are in the cast Ellen Cassidy and Leila Valentine complete the leading characters of what may be termed an "all star cast."

Exchangemen Combine Baseball and Track

West was best when Metro exchange men from the East and West fought it out in a ballgame recently in connection with the annual convention of Metro district and branch managers in New York. For three innings it resembled a ballgame, but finally degenerated into a track meet, the final score being 20 to 6, with the Westerners on the top.

Blackwell Appears in "The Restless Sex"

Carlyle Blackwell, who has placed his name to a Cosmopolitan contract, will make his first appearance with Marion Davies in her latest starring vehicle, "The Restless Sex," from the Robert W. Chambers' novel of the same name.

Metro Improves West Coast Plant

Studio construction operations started several months ago by Metro on the West Coast, are to be rushed to completion. Work has also begun on a three-story receiving, shipping and property building at the Metro plant.

To Screen Modes of Travel

Universal Educational Dept. Preparing "Evolution of Travel" Film

IT has been proved by actual statistics that about 80 per cent of the people are "eye-minded" rather than "ear-minded." As a result of this, motion pictures are in some instances taking the place of oral dictation as a means of educating children in the schools.

Based upon this theory, a motion picture depicting the entire "Evolution of Travel" is now being filmed by the Educational Department of the Universal Film Company, under the direction of Harry Levey, general manager, in conjunction with the Cole Motor Car Company, and will be preserved and used for school-work together with other educational pictures.

Permission was secured to film the carts and vehicles on exhibition in Smithsonian Institute, and which were used as the mode of travel up to the advent of the automobile. Directors, camera-men, and a company of players left recently for Washington to film these.

In addition to this, camera-men, it is stated, are being dispatched all over the world to film the modes of travel in vogue—to Japan where scenes will be made of travel in the Jinriksha; to the frozen North, where the dog-sleds furnish means of transportation; to Venice, to "shoot" the gondolas—to all countries of the world where interesting means of travel prevail.

"The De Witt Clinton," now on exhibition at the Grand Central Terminal, New York, the first train that was ever run in the state of New York, has already been filmed for this picture. Governor Smith made a special trip to New York at the invitation of Mr. Levey, and was "movied" as he sat in this locomotive.

The bicycle, the motor-cycle, and "the horseless carriage" are shown; the newest model aeroplane, the automobile, the Cole Aero-Eight and last, the aeroplane.—completing the evolution of travel to the present day.

Another "Flying A" Soon

American Film Makes "The Week End," Cosmo Hamilton's Story

THE WEEK END," a play from the pen of Cosmo Hamilton, will be the next "Flying A" Special, to be released by the American, following "Peggy Rebels." It is a story of Margarita Fisher's own selection, and in it she appears in the stellar role at her best under the direction of George L. Cox.

An unconventional comedy-drama, scintlating with the Cosmo Hamilton touch, with most of the action crowded into a few days during an unchaperoned week end at Hideaway Cottage, with Margarita Fisher delectable in some bathing scenes—this is one of the American Specials offered for summer business.

Milton Sills, the handsome leading man, does some earnest love making in an exceedingly satisfactory manner, thereby winning the hearts of all the women fans, for all through his successful career there has been a tacit agreement that he is the sort of a man they would not mind serving coffee to 365 mornings out of the year. In the role of his rival for the hand of the whimsical Vera, Bertram Grassby is very much at home in a blasé society role for which he is celebrated.

The remainder of the supporting cast is said to be unusually well chosen.

Second of New Rolin Series Out in June

"Start the Show" is the title selected for the second of the new series of Rolin comedies, starring Beatrice La Plante. This picture will be released by Pathe June 13th.

Tower Sells Rights on "A Trip to Mars"

Tower Film Corporation reports the sale of "A Trip to Mars" to Sam Grand of Boston, Mass., for the New England States, and the Magnet Film Exchange, of New York, for New York City.

Mr. Grand, who is treasurer of the newly formed Federated Film Exchanges, in commenting on "A Trip to Mars" said, "This production is one of the most novel I have seen in a long time, and I was so impressed with the box office possibilities that I immediately purchased same for my territory. I believe that "A Trip to Mars" will become an excellent box-office attraction, and any state-right buyer who is in the market for a feature that is different and that offers exceptional exploitation possibilities should secure this production for his territory."

Northern Story Good for Summer Days

That exhibitors with an eye to pleasing their patrons during the summer months are booking "The River's End," Marshall Neilan's production, is the claim of an official of that company. "'The River's End,'" he said, "offers an ideal hot-weather subect in view of the fact that the story is laid amidst the frozen Northwest of Canada. Exhibitors have already expressed their intention of playing this and another similar picture on the hottest days of their respective territories.

Anita Stewart Picture of Bohemian Quarter

Greenwich Village in all of its interesting and eccentric phases will be seen as the residence place of Anita Stewart in her new Louis B. "Humoresque" Huge Triumph

New York Press Enthralled by Production

"HUMORESQUE," Cosmopolitan Productions' picturization of Fannie Hurst's story of mother love, featuring Alma Rubens, and directed by Frank Borzage, which opened an indefinite pre-release engagement at the Criterion theatre, Broadway at 44th street, N. Y., Sunday, May 30, is declared by many critics to be the greatest hit of the year in motion pictures. This judgment is made after considering the fact that the big Criterion has been packed to capacity at every performance of "Humoresque" and hundreds are turned away at each show.

Enthusiastically received by the daily press of New York, and hailed as the year's biggest screen offering and the logical successor to "The Miracle Man," "Humoresque's" popularity is daily growing larger. While capacity performances are the best attestation of a motion picture's success, the opinions of the critics of New York's daily press reveal in a measure the unprecedented hit "Humoresque" has made.

S. Jay Kaufman in the New York Globe said: "We do not propose to tell you the story. We propose to ask you to go to the Criterion to see what a combination of earnest people can do in a motion picture. It is of "Miracle Man" class. We've seen it twice— but there are more days of its run at the Criterion."

B. F. Holzman in the New York Evening Mail said: "'Humoresque' to my mind is the second best picture ever shown on Broadway, and, although "The Miracle Man" continues to head the list, I am of the opinion that "Humoresque" carries as much, if not more, appealing quality."

The New York Evening Sun said: "There is real humor and real pathos in 'Humoresque' and real characterizations of real people. When three such vital elements of drama appear in one moving picture, one should be duly amazed and thankful, and should register their gratitude by attending the picture."

The Brooklyn Citizen said: "The producers say the picture has the humor of 'Potash and Perlmutter' and the pathos of 'The Music Master.' It has more, because it has both, and it has both in their contrasts and in their finer shadings."

Alan Dale in the New York American said: "'Humoresque' is something ardently new in pictures. Even the most callous need not expect to escape a 'lump in the throat.' It sets a new picture pace."

Frank Pope in the Journal of Commerce said: "'Humoresque' ranks with that other master-piece of the screen, 'The Miracle Man.'"

The Illustrated Daily News said: "We warn you not to miss 'Humoresque.'"

The New York Tribune said: "It is doubtful if a better picturization has been placed on the screen in a decade."

The Evening Post said: "Never before has the colorful atmosphere of the crowded East Side been so vividly sustained."

The New York Commercial said: "It stands unrivalled among motion pictures."

Seldom in the annals of the amusement world has an attraction of any kind received such unanimous and unstinted praise at the hands of the critics. And the fact that it did and that it continues to play to standing room only at every performance at the Criterion is proof sufficient of its tremendous appeal to the popular taste and its great drawing power. While its run at the Criterion is a pre-release showing, "Humoresque" already gives evidence of becoming one of the biggest money-makers ever known in motion pictures.

Reports Heavy Call for "The House of Toys"

Heavy advance bookings for extended runs in some of the largest "Class A" theatres are taken by the producers as an earnest of the coming popularity of the new American Special, "The House of Toys." In fact, this new heart drama, starring Seena Owen, promises a new booking record for "Flying A" features of this class, says American Film Company.

Among the advance bookings for extended runs before the prints were shipped from the Chicago executive offices were the Isis theater, Kansas City; the Southern at Columbus, Ohio; the Beacon at Boston; the Victory at Providence; the Marcus Loew Circuit of New York; the Crandall Circuit at Washington, D. C., etc., etc.

Two Metro Companies Out on Location

Metro's New York studios in Wets Sixty-first Street, which have recently been the scene of continuous activity with three productions going on at once, have quieted down this week to the comparative calm. The S-L production, "Love, Honor and Obey" is having its rural scenes screened on Long Island, and Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," adapted by Julia Burnham, is having some of its outdoor scenes screened at Stamford, Conn.

Walsh Leases Office on Broadway

In line with the extension of his producing activities, R. A. Walsh has leased a suite of offices in the Capitol Theatre Building, Broadway, N. Y. The newly acquired quarters will house the producer's executive staff consisting of Harold Horne, production manager; J. T. O'Donohue, head of the play-reading and research departments, and Ralph Mahan, office manager and private secretary to Mr. Walsh.

Glifograph Screen Used in Hotel Astor

The new Glifograph screen is being used for the exhibiting of "The Wonder Man" in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor. The officials of the Robertson-Cole Company expressed themselves as exceedingly well pleased with the Glifograph Screen, not only because of the depth it gave the scenes, but because of the excellent lighting and the removal of eye strain and distortion, no matter from what angle the picture was viewed.

Burton Holmes Scene Shows Rhine Country

Famous from time immemorial for its magnetic singing which, according to rumor, drove men to distraction and destruction, "The Lure of the Loreley," which is the title of the Paramount-Burton-Holmes Travel picture of June 13, spins this famous Rhine legend upon the screen in a scenic picture. Mr. Holmes takes the spectator over the entire country bordering the Rhine where the famous folk tale is supposed to have originated.

Press Lauds "The Wonder Man"

Banner in front of Hotel Astor, New York, to announce showing of "The Wonder Man," Robertson-Cole special, in the Grand Ball Room of the hotel

NO picture which has been seen in recent months, won from the New York press the laudatory reviews and space in the regular news columns which were accorded "The Wonder Man," the Robertson-Cole super-special which opened at Hotel Astor Saturday evening before a distinguished audience. The only evening daily published on Sunday, the day after the opening, devoted close to two columns, with a two-column picture, and two-column heading to a big signed review of "The Wonder Man."

The reviews and reports of the Astor Hotel showing reveal a universal interest in the Carpentier picture, on the part of the newspapers. The notices do not have to be carefully plodded through in search of favorable adjectives, or phrases of praise.

The Evening Telegram stated: "We have been accustomed to think of M. Carpentier in terms of the roped circle. Last evening, in the grand ballroom of the Astor Hotel, Georges appeared for the first time as a contender for the camera championship of the world. The bout went seven reels. M. Carpentier has proven beyond peradventure of doubt his is no one-track talent. The Wonder Man! Carpentier not only lived up to the title. He did more. He topped it.

"Truth to tell, the Carpentier picture was one of the biggest surprises Broadway has had in many a season. We are wise to the ways of capitalizing celebrities, hundred—thousand—dollar name, ten-twenty-and thirty scenario, acting, scenery and support. It always makes us feel as if some had sold us a toy balloon and then stuck a pin in it.

"Robertson-Cole have not imposed upon a hero-worshipping public. They have made it possible for to see one of the most popular athletes of the day in action. They have given us a glimpse of a man who can fight with his fists and with his heart, a boxer who can win his belt in the ring and a soldier who can bring back his D. S. C. from over the enemy lines. This much we expected; but what we did not expect was to find in Carpentier a real actor, an artist with the finish of a French gentleman and the finesse of an habitual stage star."

Louella O. Parsons, writing in the Morning Telegraph, said: "Carpentier has all the adaptability for which the French are noted, and seems to grasp the requirements of the camera with amazing aptness. The men like his serious scenes, especially when he is putting his slenderness in scientific combat against a heavier opponent, but the women like the nice boyish smile that so attractively lights up his face."

Commenting on the outstanding feature of the picture, which is the acting ability displayed by Carpentier, the World says: "The most surprising feature of the evening, was the young Frenchman's ability as an actor. Unlike most of the celebrities who have from time to time exploited on the screen because of notoriety gained in another field, Carpentier seemed at all times to be living the role he was playing."

The Sun characterized "The Wonder Man" as "a splendid picture" and says further: "There was hearty applause for Carpentier when he first appeared upon the screen." The Sun's review was close to half a column in length.

The Tribune said: "The photoplay furnished good entertainment, and an opportunity to observe at close quarters the French fighter's magnificent physique and his unusual style of boxing. The most striking feature of the entertainment, however, was the revelation of Carpentier as an actor. 'As a cultured, polished man and the representative in Washington of the French Secret Service, he has many opportunities for distinctive action, opportunities of which he takes full advantage."

Ben F. Holzman, in the Evening Mail was enthusiastic as follows: "Georges Carpentier demonstrated real acting ability in 'The Wonder Man,' a Robertson-Cole production. Georges is a real honest-to-goodness actor."

Realart to Announce Its Policy

Result of Recent Convention to Be Revealed Soon

AN announcement of its 1920-1921 plan and policy will be issued shortly from the offices of Realart Pictures Corporation regarding the company's policy for the coming year.

The statement will be of a most comprehensive nature, including not only the production activities of the company for the next year but a complete booking plan which will embrace new and novel features for both large and small exhibitors.

The new policy announcement is the result of the strenuous conference held recently for a week between the Realart field men and home office officials. It will be the first detailed statement which the company has made, inasmuch as its activities during the last season were limited to six months of actual business.

"There will be some welcome news for exhibitors all over the country," declared General Manager Woody, "in the announcement we are to make within a short time. Not only our old clients but hundreds of other exhibitors who, I am confident, will join the Realart family this year, will be interested in the proposition we will have to offer.

"While I cannot yet disclose any of the details of the plan, let me state that the evidence that progressive and co-operative spirit which has characterized all of the first to earn the confidence of exhibitors and make our dealings mutually profitable and I think the new year's policy reflects a full realization of this purpose.

"Realart called all its managers in from the field after sending them into their territories to get a first hand knowledge of what exhibitors wanted. All of that material was presented to the conference, carefully gone over and analyzed. We have formulated our policy to conform with this information and to advance, as far as we can, the interests of large and small exhibitors.

"Realart is ready for any exhibitor who wants a showdown. Our cards are on the table, the entire fifty-two from a new clean deck and no joker running wild. Despite the fact that the deal will produce a good many full houses, it is to be a gentlemen's game and Realart invites the best in the business to sit in.

"Although our plans may occasion some surprise for their size and importance, they are fully justified by the success which Realart has attained in its first year of existence. Despite the fact that we didn't get under way until late in the season, we made a record that is little short of miraculous.

"We encountered a market that was fairly hungry for quality pictures. That Realart has made good in meeting that demand has been evidenced several times—notably by the Wanda Hawley campaign. The same elements that made this success possible are at the foundation of our next year's plan. That's promising exhibitors something worth while."

Items of Interest in Paramount Magazine

A sense of mystery pervades the heading of "No-Account News," Paramount Magazine's featured subject for the release of June 13. Matters of ordinary daily routine in journalistic life—"no-account" items are done into something decidedly interesting in film. The picture has simply taken up odd incidents here and there about which no one cares particularly and made of them a composite story in film which tingles with dramatic interest

MACK SENNETT'S policies as outlined by his personal representative, E. M. Asher, who just returned to New York, contemplate a year of extraordinary activity. New associations will be established and new ventures hazarded on the sea of motion picturedom.

Mr. Sennett's first necessities in New York, says his representative, will be to find suitable and ample office space. Mr. Asher will seek to secure such headquarters with the Producers' Association, of which organization Mack Sennett is treasurer, and the members of which, besides Mr. Sennett, include Thomas H. Ince, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, and George Leone Tucker.

On account of the immediately forthcoming distribution of Sennett's latest five-reel comedy, "Married Life," Mr. Asher's present duties relate to its release through First National. The release date is set for June 15, and the picture has been safely delivered in New York. The picture says Mr. Asher will even eclipse the popularity of "Down on the Farm," which proved a record breaker.

Ninety days following the release of "Married life" will see the beginning of the distribution of the second five-reel comedy, for which the First National has contracted, says Mr. Asher. This will bring Mr. Sennett's activities up to the time of the beginning of operations by the Associated Producers which thereafter will distribute Sennett Comedies.

These activities of Mr. Sennett will include the production of two-reel feature farces, five-reel comedies, and five-reel comedy-dramas. Mr. Sennett resents the rumor that he is to discontinue the production of two-reel comedy features.

Broadway Goldwyn Strong

Spring Season Marks Record for Goldwyn's Broadway Showings

THE spring season is marking a record for Goldwyn Pictures at the leading Broadway theatres, the Capitol, the Strand and the Broadway. Early in May, after occupying the Capitol for a week, Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde" was moved to the Broadway for a two weeks' run that was terminated by the engagement of Edgar Rice Burroughs' sensational jungle story, "The Return of Tarzan," a Numa production handled by Goldwyn. The run that started May 30th with capacity audiences bids fair to extend well into the summer.

Will Rogers in "Jes' Call Me Jim," which was received as one of the season's strongest attractions at the Strand during the week of May 23d, was followed the week of the 30th by Madge Kennedy in "Dollars and Sense," an Octavus Roy Cohen story written directly for the screen. In telling characterization, pointed humor and story appeal, "Dollars and Sense" takes a place among the finest productions in which the Goldwyn comedienne has ever appeared. Harry Beaumont directed a cast including such popular players as Kenneth Harlan, Miss Kennedy's leading man; Willard Louis, well known for his work in Goldwyn pictures, and Richard Tucker, who has supported many of the leading stars of the day.

Other Goldwyn pictures scheduled for an early showing on Broadway are the picturization of Gertrude Atherton's great novel, "The Tower of Ivory," renamed "Out of the Storm," and Rupert Hughes' inimitable comedy, "Scratch My Back." Both of these productions are in the Eminent Authors series.

Love Letter Contest Ends

15,000 Answers Received by Robertson-Cole Help Boost Lew Cody

FIFTEEN thousand love letters, ranging in length anywhere from one hundred to one thousand words each, were received at the Robertson-Cole offices in answer to the love letter contest that was promoted in the name of Lew Cody. The judges have just announced that they have read all the letters and have awarded the first prize of $150 to Maude H. Bell, of Greely, Colorado.

Anne Rankin Murray, of the Centennial Club of Nashville, Tenn., demonstrated that the Southern girls, although soft-spoken in speech, are love-making winners when they can put their thoughts to paper. She captured the second prize of $100. The Los Angeles girls will undoubtedly have something to say regarding the decision of the judges who favored Bernice C. Bowne of 890 Geary street, San Francisco to the extent of awarding her the third price of $75.

The fourth prize of $50 went to Jean Stannton, of 43 West street, Northampton, Mass., and five prizes of $25 each found their homes with C. N. Horworth of Hardeville, S. C., Elsie Gibson, 171 North Ashland avenue, Lexington, Ky., Joan Johnson, 7 Alden street, Danvers, Mass., Hazel Shannon, 4010 West Van Buren street, Chicago, Ill., and Edith Lucille Huff, 119 South Whiteword avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

The Judges who made the selections from the thousands of love letters were Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, famous novelist and journalist, James Kuirk, editor of the Photoplay Magazine, and Lew Cody, star of numerous Gasnier productions released through Robertson-Cole. It was his picture, "The Beloved Cheater" which was the inspiration for the contest.

Seitz Serial Comes in August

Pathe Names August 15 as Date for Release of "Pirate's Gold"

WITH the designation of August 15th as the date of its release, Pathe announces "Pirate Gold," starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot, as one of its most important serial offerings of the year.

This new serial, in ten episodes, is the second offering in which George B. Seitz is star, and owing to the popularity he gained in "Bound and Gagged" the picture is regarded as a notable one. It is the first response Pathe has been able to make to the demand by exhibitors reported from every Branch Office for information as to when the next serial starring Mr. Seitz would be available.

In "Bound and Gagged" this director and star introduced into serial form a new style and his employment of the situation of suspense in place of the mere physical action and thrill stunts of the conventional serial was hailed as a novelty. Mr. Seitz used the same method in the production of "Pirate Gold." The play is by Frank Leon Smith, author of "Bound and Gagged," and it deals with a refreshing idea in an adventure-romance. The story is modern dealing with a post-war incident, and plays in a locale near New York.

The picture has been pronounced by Pathe to be up to the expectations created for it by "Bound and Gagged." In every department of the offering "Pirate Gold" is said to attain the standards required to give it a place on the screens of the big theatres. The company appearing in support of Mr. Seitz and Miss Courtot, is headed by Harry Semels,

News Reel Shows Presidential Aspirants

In the International News Reel No. 31, distributed by Universal, are shown the pictures of many of the aspirants to the Republican candidacy for President, who are now more than ever before the public on account of the convention in Chicago. Views of Senator Johnson, General Wood, Senator Harding, Governor Lowden, Herbert Hoover, Senator Poindexter, Governor Allen, Governor Coolridge and General Pershing are all shown.

"Miracle Man" Breaks Record for Rembusch

Frank Rembusch's American theatre, at Columbus, Ind., set a new record for itself when it recently played George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man." Manager Cursson, Mr. Rembusch's representative, put on a clever newspaper and outdoor exploitation campaign for the big picture, and was awarded with sensational results, the picture running two days, to be booked back in the near future for another day.

Hampton Picture Bests Its Predecessors

Off to a fine start with a week of turn-away business at both the Mark Strand, New York, and Tom Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C. —"Riders of the Dawn," Benjamin B. Hampton's powerful production of Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat," is creating a booking record for a Western type of picture greater than that achieved by Mr. Hampton's previous picture, "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher.'

Few Interior Scenes in Leah Baird Picture

"Cynthia-of-the-Minute," starring Leah Baird, the Gibraltar picture version of Louis Joseph Vance's novel for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, is said to be one of the very few plays recently completed to represent the great outdoors by land and sea practically to the exclusion of interiors.

Heat Has No Terror for Pathe

High-Class Pictures to Overcome Summer Slump, Says Brunet

WITH the approach of the Summer period and the difficulty it presents to distributors and exhibitors alike, Elmer R. Pearson, Director of Exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., strikes a reassuring note in a report he has just made to Vice-President and General Manager Paul Brunet, regarding the situation throughout the country. Mr. Pearson has gained from personal touch and from reports from Exchange managers that everywhere conditions are such as to warrant the belief that this will be the biggest Summer in the history of the motion picture industry. Mr. Pearson's report did not imply that business will hold up as it has during the last few months, but did indicate it will not undergo the severe decrease that has marked it during recent summers.

"There is only one cure for poor Summer business," said Mr. Pearson, "and that is high-class pictures. People demand amusement and entertainment in the hot months, just as in any other period of the year. Yet there are exhibitors who invite a decrease in business by supplying their patrons with cheaper programs. They apparently fail to realize the serious consequences this will have on their business when the Summer is over.

"Pathe will not curtail the class of its production in the least during the Summer. In fact, a number of the biggest pictures in Pathe's history will be released during this season. For instance, there will be J. Stuart Blackton's 'Passersby,' a production that cost more than $100,000, and which undoubtedly is one of the finest pictures the industry has ever seen. This is to be released on June 20th.

"Then, as an Independence Day issue, there will be William Desmond in 'A Broadway Cowboy,' which is in a class by itself for this type of picture.

"Harold Lloyd in his greatest comedy, 'High and Dry,' first of his second series of $100,000 two-reelers, is to be issued July 11th. This is a certain business getter in any kind of weather. In our Serial Department, we will release 'Pirate Gold,' second of the George Seitz series in which the producer is starred himself.

"The public wants big, outdoor pictures for Summer consumption. Consider then, these offerings, which are of recent issue: 'My Husband's Other Wife,' a story of Broadway and the Kentucky Hills; 'Other Men's Shoes,' Edgar Lewis's first big Pathe feature; 'The Deadlier Sex,' with its wonderful settings in the California mountains; 'Sherry,' another Edgar Lewis offering, which is built largely outdoors, on the plane with other of Mr. Lewis's eminent works such as 'The Barrier'; and 'Rio Grande,' which transports one into the glorious Southwest—a picture with a punch throughout.

"Comedies, too, have their place in Summer programs, and Pathe is offering exhibitors as fine a product as there is on the market—'Bringing Up Father' Comedies; the Rolins, starring 'Snub' Pollard and the Mrs. Sidney Drew series starring John Cumberland.

"I am thoroughly convinced that no exhibitor needs to lose money this summer, if he only supplies the public demand. It is much better to have the figures on the winning side, than on the deficit page—and the good picture is the deciding factor. The public must be pleased—and a pleased public means big money in the box office, even in Summer."

Famous Boy Stories Ready

Educational to Release Judge Brown Pictures in Near Future

MOTION pictures made from the stories by Judge Willis Brown, probably the best known authority of today on the American boy, are hereafter to be released by Educational Films Corporation. The pictures will be in two reels and there will be at least one and probably two releases a month, the first being available at an early date. Twelve of the pictures are ready for laboratory work and production on others will be started in a short time.

Judge Brown, who personally produces the pictures, has devoted the greater portion of his life to work among the boys and embraces the rare qualities of knowing his subjects thoroughly, of being able to write and having the motion picture technique that enables him to produce quality films.

First of the "Judge Brown Stories," as they will be known, were made during the latter days of General Film Company's activities. While they did not get the wide circulation desired at that time, they attracted much attention.

Under the contract just signed, Educational will control all of the Judge Brown pictures, and the ones that have been exhibited in some cities will be available to those who have not yet shown them. At the same time there will be a sufficient number of new productions to supply theatres with pictures that have not been exhibited before. The new series includes "The Discoverers," "The Case of Bennie," "Kid Politics," "The Demand of Duran," "Gumdrops and Overalls," "Jim's Sister," "Dog vs. Dog," "Frank's Endorser," "The Boy-Built Car," "Shift-the-Gear Frank," "Danny Asks Why" and "The Love of Bob."

Educational promises that when the pictures are ready for release exhibitors will be offered unusual cooperation of magazines and newspapers, as well as receiving the benefit of Judge Brown's appearances in various sections of the country as a portion of his work.

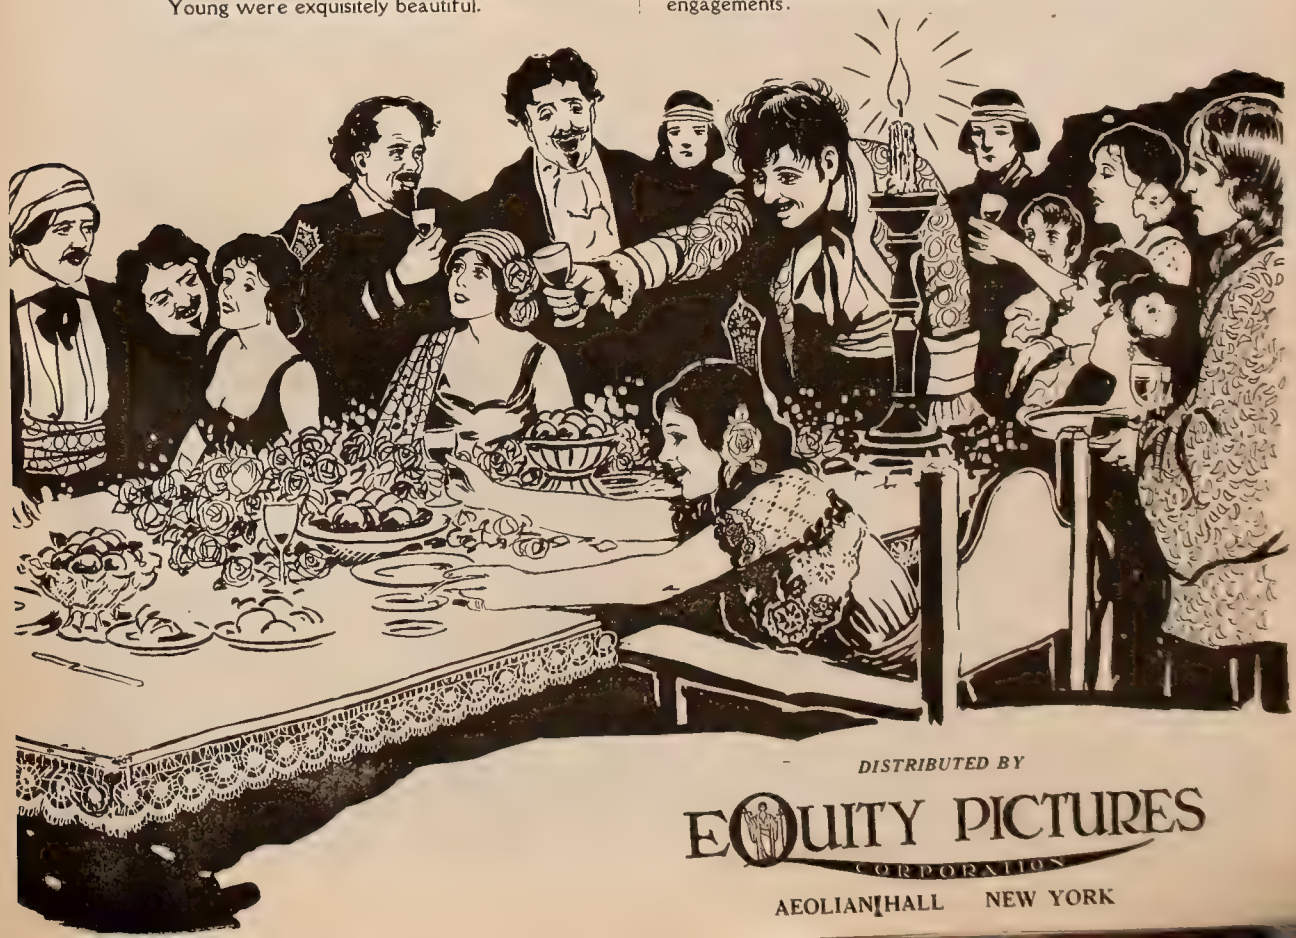
"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL"



The first motion picture production considered fine enough to form the basis of an elaborate Grand Opera

WHEN it was learned that the magnificent Auditorium Theatre in Chicago was to be opened with Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL," The Exhibitor's Herald of Chicago said: "No more fitting picture than this could have been chosen by Andreas Dippel for the opening attraction. It is undoubtedly one of the best things Miss Young has done in years and will create and warrant unusual exploitation on the part of Exhibitors everywhere. It is as fine a piece of work as has graced the silver sheet for a long time."

The Billboard said: "It is a gem of superiority far above the ordinary drama picture of today. Photographic effects and many shots of Miss Young were exquisitely beautiful."

Exhibitor's Trade Review said: "Clara Kimball Young in 'For the Soul of Rafael' beautifully produced. Its lavishness and beauty entitled it to special attention . . . dramatic denouement of especial interest while Clara Kimball Young is given ample opportunity to display her emotional gifts and beauty which are distinctly individual." . . . Further criticism of the Exhibitor's Herald said: "One of the best performances of Clara Kimball Young's long screen career."

A scene from "Below the Surface," starring Hobart Bosworth, which is an Ince production directed by Irwin V. Willat

Famous Has Two Features

"Below the Surface" and De Mille Reissue on Paramount Schedule

TWO features of unusual distinction, Famous Players-Lasky states, are released on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule for June 6. These are "Below the Surface," a Thomas H. Ince special production, starring Hobart Bosworth, and "Old Wives for New," the first of Cecil B. De Mille's specials dealing with problems of married life, which is now reissued.

The rocky coast of Maine serves as the picturesque background for the Bosworth picture, "Below the Surface," and the story, written by Luther Reed, is said to be as rugged as the scenery. Few motion picture actors are as much at home in stories of the sea as Mr. Bosworth. Something of the tang and power of the salt waves seems to have been transmitted to his staunch frame, and for that reason he seems to be ideally suited to his role as a veteran deep-sea diver in this Ince-supervised production.

Irvin Willat directed and Mr. Bosworth is given sterling support by Lloyd Hughes, Grace Darmond, Gladys George and George Webb, among others.

When it was first released just two years ago, "Old Wives for New" met with sensational success. Adapted by Jeanie Macpherson from the famous novel by David Graham Phillips, it won wide popularity because of its pitiless arraignment of the frailties of men and women and the follies of modern society.

The production set a new standard in gorgeousness of costumes and settings, which Mr. De Mille has consistently followed in each of his succeeding society dramas. As for the cast, it may be said to be truly all-star as any ever assembled, including Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, Julia Faye, Florence Vicor, Sylvia Ashton, Helen Jerome Eddy, Marcia Manon, Gustave Seyffertitz, Tully Marshall and Maym Kelso. The photography is by Alvin Wyckoff.

Film Built on Feminism

"Restless Sex," by Chambers, Has Unique and Interesting Theme

"THE RESTLESS SEX," Marion Davies' newest starring feature for Cosmopolitan Productions, which will be pre-released in New York shortly, is announced as a spectacular drama of modern society life, a massive production with magnificent settings and scenic investitures, and a cast of more than six hundred.

Done in Robert W. Chambers' best style, "The Restless Sex" which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, deals with the theme of feminism, the restlessness of the awakened woman who has tasted of independence and craves for the topmost rung on the ladder. Under the guise of romance and love is a thought that, it is said, hits every woman in the civilized world and should interest every man also. Distinct from the question of suffrage which is purely political, the question of feminism as it occurs in "The Restless Sex" concerns woman's desire to be something more than a man's wife. It treats of her striving to rise above the status of mere chattel goods and become a factor in civilization. Woman's restlessness today is due to nothing else.

Bert Lytell in Varied Roles

Settings of "The Price of Redemption" Decidedly Oriental in Tone

IN "The Price of Redemption," his forthcoming Metro production, Bert Lytell will make a distinct departure from his customary roles, it is stated by Metro Pictures Corporation. At the opening of the picture he will portray a British soldier; then he appears in turn, as a London gentleman, a dope fiend, and finally a regenerated man.

The picture calls for many scenes in native East Indian towns, and in order to obtain unassailable atmosphere for the settings A. W. Alley, the technical director, called to his assistance Dr. H. R. M. Maddock, a retired officer of the Indian British Army. The remarkably realistic sets finally conceived and constructed are exact reproductions of the original places in Akbar, India, states Metro.

A throne room, used in the last episode in the picture, is said to be an exact replica to the Diwan-i-Am, or Hall of Public Audience in the palace of Udaipur, Rajputana. In this room are important scenes between Mr. Lytell and Edward Cecil, who enacts the Rajah and villain of the photoplay. Mr. Cecil's court costume is in every detail a copy of that worn by Rajah of Bhawalpur at the coronation durbar at Delphi in 1912.

Cleo Madison in "The Price of Redemption," plays the part of the Rajah's English mistress, a girl who through an embittered heart loses for a time her perspective of life's true values. The gorgeous jeweled costume she wears was cleverly worked out from suggestions furnished by Mrs. Maddock, who with her husband was a frequent guest at the various native courts where she had access to the privacy of the Zenanas, a privilege extended to very few European women.

The picture is an adaptation by June Mathis of I. A. R. Wylie's powerful novel of England and the Orient, "The Temple of Dawn." It was directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

Author Visits Fox Studios

Seltzer Pleased with Picturization of His Western Story

CHARLES ALDEN SELTZER, author of many Western stories which have been used in motion pictures, was a visitor to the Fox studio in West Fifty-fifth street a few days ago, and for the first time saw one of his stories on the screen.

Mr. Seltzer, accompanied by Mrs. Seltzer, came to New York on a business trip, and, having sold several of his most popular stories to Fox Film Corporation, expressed a desire to see one of them in picturized form. Fortunately a new print of "Forbidden Trails," which was written by Mr. Seltzer under the title "The Ranchman," was in one of the Fox projection rooms.

After witnessing the picture, in which Buck Jones, the new William Fox screen sensation, is starred, Mr. Seltzer asserted that "nothing more could be desired," and that Buck Jones was the character he had in mind when he was writing the story. He was particularly thrilled by Buck Jones' daring horseback stunts and by the way in which he manhandled the heavy man in the picture. The fine scenic effects which Director Scott Dunlap obtained also elicited much praise from the author.

Author-Producer Combine Announced

Announcement is made that Messmore Kendall and Robert W. Chambers have formed an organization for the purpose of making, presenting and exploiting motion pictures based upon the published works of the latter.

Both have had an introduction to the motion picture business calculated to give them an unusual insight into its possibilities—Chambers as an author and Kendall as both a producer and exhibitor. It is understood the Kendall-Chambers combination will announce shortly the acquisition of an important Eastern studio.

New Laboratory Opens in New York

The Kineto Company of America, of which Charles Urban is president, announces the opening of the Masonic Building Laboratories at 23rd street and Sixth avenue, New York City. The equipment is stated to be of the most modern type, and the personnel is said to embrace skilled technicians in all departments of title-making, negative developing, commercial printing, etc. Directors and editors are provided with cutting rooms where they can get their material ready. The plant is reported to be able to turn out one million feet per week.

Thieves Turn Actors to Rob Studio

That high class thieves are adding acting to their accomplishments in order to gain admittance to motion picture studios is revealed by several robberies in the studios about New York City.

Two of these modern burglars obtained admission to the D. W. Griffith studios, posing as "extras." The first night a motion picture camera with extra lenses was missing and the second night a valuable fur piece had disappeared. The latter, however, was recovered. As costly garments and expensive jewelry are often worn by screen players the inducement to major crooks is said to be very great.

Goldwyn Gives Special Care to Short Stuff

In accord with its policy of supplying exhibitors with motion pictures of the highest quality in short lengths as well as feature productions and super specials, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has founded a Short Subject Department, whose province will be the promotion of the one and two-reel films that now are being distributed under the Goldwyn trade mark.

Pathe Will Distribute "Broadway Cowboy"

"A Broadway Cowboy," in which William Desmond appears, has just been taken over for distribution by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The production was made by Jesse D. Hampton from the very popular story, "The Man from Make Believe," written by Byron Morgan.

Producer Urges Independence

Whitman Bennett, now producing Lionel Barrymore pictures for First National

THAT the day is here when the young producer should avail himself of the opportunity to break away from the old established company and enter into production as an independent, is the firm belief of Whitman Bennett, formerly connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and now producing a series of Lionel Barrymore pictures for First National release.

"The hour of the young producer is here," said Mr. Bennett in a recent interview, "a year or two ago the directors began to be independent. In a short time they were followed by such artists as Mary Pickford and Chaplin, and to-day should witness the branching out of the young producers of the industry. There is no reason why the best brains of the motion picture industry should be tied up with the larger companies to make money for them. They should be willing to take a chance and risking their own capital and time. They seem, however, to be unwilling to take the chance. Instead of supervising a large number of pictures every year, they would be able to produce a limited number for themselves."

Another great benefit that would accrue to the industry, said Mr. Bennett, was the fact that should there be more independent companies in the field, the money earned by them would be reinvested to produce more and better pictures. "The dividends which are paid to Wall street," said the producer, "are not going to find their way back into the industry. Rather they are going to buy automobiles for the stockholder who has no interest in the betterment and growth of the motion picture."

Mr. Bennett also deplored the fact that the business and producer ends of the business should be in the same hands. "It is not the same as making a suit of clothes," he said. "The producer is not a business man, and the business man is not capable of producing successful pictures. The ideal firm is a combination of each in such a way that both are allowed to work along their own lines.

"I wish to emphasize," continued Mr. Bennett, "that the time for the independent producer is here. There are in the industry no more than twenty-five or thirty minds which are capable of producing really first class pictures. Why should not these men be willing to take the risk and strike out for themselves, instead of being salaried men in a large company even if they are receiving high salaries?"

In speaking of the Lionel Barrymore pictures which are now being made in the old Triangle studios in Yonkers, Mr. Bennett said he would make four of those during the year. In addition he plans a series of three special productions with all-star casts. Releasing plans for these three pictures have not as yet been definitely arranged. Mr. Barrymore's first picture, "The Master Mind," which will be released by First National, has just been completed and delivered to the distributors. "The Master Mind" ran on Broadway several seasons ago and was a decided success. Mr. Barrymore plays an almost straight part, with no make up except a small mustache. One exceptional feature of the production, said Mr. Bennett, is an example of quintuple exposure which illustrates a psychological point in the story in an effective manner, and the mechanics of it, which were not explained, produce an unique effect. The story is handled in a delicate and effective manner, suggestion being used as much as possible to leave its impression.

Work has just started on Mr. Bennett's second Barrymore picture for First National, "The Devil's Garden." This ran as a stage play in both New York and London and is one of the greatest novels of W. B. Maxwell. All seven of Mr. Bennett's productions during the current year have been dramatic successes on the stage.

New Studio Manager Is Pleased With Plant

Coming to his new position just prior to the opening of the new studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Long Island City, Arthur V. Smith, recently appointed general manager of Eastern Studios, will devote his time and attention first to the plans for the equipment of the Long Island studio and laboratory. After carefully going over the work that has been done and is to be done, Mr. Smith said that he could make no criticism nor could he find a single fault in the plan or construction of the building. "The work has been done thoroughly and practically," said Mr. Smith, "by men familiar with the production of pictures in the most efficient manner.

Considering the personnel of the studio Mr. Smith said, "I certainly have been handed an efficient and well organized staff. Mr. Naulty deserves the utmost credit in his selection of men in which to place the responsibility of his various departments.

Wallace Worsley Coming East to Direct

Wallace Worsley, Goldwyn director, who has been working at the Culver City studios, is coming East to make his next production at the Goldwyn studios in New York. It will be a picturization of Maximilian Foster's "The Trap," renamed "To the Highest Bidder."

Mayflower Moves Its Eastern Studio

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation has transferred its eastern producing activities from the Paragon Studio, Fort Lee, to the Biograph Studio 177th street, New York, where space has been leased for the making of R. A. Walsh's second independent production to be presented by Mayflower through First National. Mr. Walsh will occupy the main stage at the Biograph plant and has already taken possession of his new quarters. He will begin his new picture shortly.

Goldwyn Product Sold in Two Countries

Two more deals for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in European countries were closed last week by Arthur Ziehm, manager of Goldwyn's foreign sales department. The transactions cover the entire first year output of Goldwyn for Holland and Finland. The figure paid is not disclosed, but it is said to be unusually high in view of market conditions as they exist today in the two countries. There are twenty-six productions in Goldwyn's first year output.

in the last stages of production.

Ray Film Wins Contracts

"Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" in Many First Run Houses

FIRST reports from all parts of the country on Charles Ray and his forthcoming First National Productions show increased demand for this star since his affiliation with Arthur S. Kane and the First National Exhibitors Circuit. According to John C. Ragland, general manager of Kane Pictures, there has been a veritable landslide in favor of this actor. His initial offering "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway," adapted from the famous George M. Cohan drama, is finding favor among exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Large first run houses are prominent among the hundreds of early bookings already made for Ray's initial offering "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway." The George M. Cohan comedy-drama is scheduled for the opening week's run in Chicago at Barbee's Loop Theatre, the well known picture palace of W. S. Barbee. In Salt Lake City, Utah, the American Theatre of the extensive Swanson Theatre Circuit has already arranged for the first run on Ray's forthcoming production.

At East St. Louis the film is booked at Joe Erber's house for a week's run; at the Hippodrome, Alton, Illinois, the Cohan play will be seen on the screen for a similar period. Week runs at the Apollo and Madison Theatres in Peoria, Illinois, have already been arranged while bookings are also on the calendar for the Gaiety of Springfield, Illinois; the Orpheum of Quincy, Illinois; the Bio Theatre of Moline, Illinois; the Lincoln Square of Decatur and the Princess of Joliet, Illinois.

The big Olympic Theatre of Watertown, N. Y., and the Regent Theatre owned by the Regorson Corporation of Rochester, are among large upper New York State houses to make arrangements for the Ray Pictures.

Lewis Signs With Pathe

Producer to Make Four or Five Pictures for Pathe During Year

FOUR or five Edgar Lewis' productions are assured for Pathe distribution during the coming year, under a new contract just signed by the producer, and Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

This is exclusive of "Sherry," which has just been released, and "Lahoma," which Mr. Lewis has just completed for release in the early fall.

The new Lewis contract calls for the production of "four or five superfeature photoplays to be produced during the year commencing on or about May 15." These plays are to be produced from stories of the same merit of "Other Men's Shoes," adapted from the novel by Andrew Soutar; "Sherry," taken from the novel by George Barr McCutcheon, and "Lahoma," produced from the book by John Breckenridge Ellis through the courtesy of Bobbs-Merrill Company, of Indianapolis.

Mr. Lewis will continue his policy of featuring the story, rather than a star, a policy he has maintained ever since he gained prominence in the directorial art. That his belief in the story is founded on a thorough knowledge of the demands of the public, has been manifested by the success with which every one of his attractions has been crowned.

The director is about to begin the first of his series under the new agreement with Mr. Brunet. The story has been selected, and Mr. Lewis has made all arrangements for the "shooting" of it. Announcement of his selection will be made after work has actually been started on the play.

Goldwyn Signs Dramatist

Clayton Hamilton, Authority on Stage, to Write Screen Stories

CLAYTON HAMILTON, author, lecturer, editor and one of the country's leading authorities on the drama, has signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to write original stories and continuities. He went to the Culver City studios recently and is now working on his first picture.

Goldwyn's acquisition of Mr. Hamilton adds another foremost stage expert to the list of authors and playwrights who are devoting their energies to the adaptation of novels and plays for production by Goldwyn. As a member of the Culver City colony, Mr. Hamilton will be associated with J. G. Hawks, head of Goldwyn's scenario department, Thompson Buchanan and Charles Kenyon, both writers for the stage, and other equally prominent figures in the scenario department, also Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King, Gertrude Atherton and Leroy Scott, the Goldwyn Eminent Authors, who spend a considerable

Up to the present time, Mr. Hamilton has held aloof from picture work, partly because his many other activities occupied so much of his time. The peronnel of the Goldwyn producing organization and the policy followed in the selection and preparation of material, assured Mr. Hamilton of the harmonious conditions which he sought.

"World and His Wife" Cosmopolitan Film

The next Cosmopolitan Production scheduled for general release is "The World and His Wife," a picturization of the play of the same name by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger, July 25th is the date set for its premiere showing in the different theatres of the country.

When William Faversham appeared in the stage play some years ago he registered one of the greatest hits of his career; and the play was spoken of as the most perfectly constructed drama of modern times. Frances Marion, who made the picture scenario, has consistently followed the play's construction and characterization, adding greatly to its strength, of course, by the greater possibilities the screen offers.

Alma Rubens as the featured player, and among the cast are such well known players as Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordova, Charles Gerard, Gaston Glass, Byron Russell, Margaret Dale, Mrs. Allan Walker, and a host of others. R. C. Vignola directed.

Edwin Carewe Makes Curwood Picture

Realizing the popularity of James Oliver Curwood's stories and knowing Edwin Carewe to be a personal friend of the author and an exceptional screen interpreter of Curwood's stories, Louis B. Mayer recently succeeded in persuading Carewe to temporarily cease operations of Edwin Carewe Productions, Inc., and personally direct "The Trail's End," an adaption of the novel "Isabel."

In order to obtain Carewe's services, Louis B. Mayer took over the entire Carewe staff. The picture is now in the cutting room and will probably be shipped east for prints within a week.

Ward Crane Takes Vacation in New York

Critics Praise "Miss Hobbs" After Premier

Wanda Hawley's debut as a Realart star in "Miss Hobbs" at Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles has been hailed as one of the big events of the season by the critics of the local newspapers. Henry E. Dougherty wrote that he had never seen "a more beautiful picture." Another called Miss Hawley "one of America's foremost film beauties."

Sid Grauman made a special event of the American premier of the new star by designating the week of showing as "Lovers' Week" and conducting an unusually heavy billboard and newspaper advertising campaign. In his advertising he described Miss Hawley as "conceded to be the most beautiful girl of the screen" and the play as "the story of a great, big, wonderful love."

"Married Life" Prints Rushed to Exchanges

Following its Pasadena tryout last Friday night, "Married Life," the latest five part comedy from the Sennett studios is being rushed to New York to the eagerly awaiting executive committee of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit by E. M. Asher, personal representative for Mack Sennett.

Immediately upon Mr. Asher's arrival in New York, ninety prints of the new comedy will be rapidly rushed to the various First National exchanges, in order that the production may have an early release.

"Athalie" to be Ready to Ship in a Week

According to a wire received by Benamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation from the Brunton Studios, California, Sidney A. Franklin has completed the final cutting and titling of "Athalie," adapted from Robert W. Chambers' novel of that name. The print, Franklin states, will be ready for shipment to First National within the ensuing week. The cast of "Athalie" includes such prominent screen players as Sylvia Braemer, who portrays the role of the seer, Conrad Nagle, Rosemary Theby, Sam De Grasse, Robert Cain and Edward Martindel.

New Factor in the Film World

W. M. Patch to Base Stories on World-Wide Questions

AN announcement of far-reaching importance is contained in the incorporation at Albany, N. Y., of a new film producing concern to be known as Greater America Films, Inc. This announcement comes from the offices of William Moore Patch, who was prominently identified with the picture industry several years ago as an exhibitor of big features at the Pitt theatre in Pittsburgh.

During the war the Government itself began to realize the tremendous possibility of the motion picture as a medium of spreading patriotism, said Mr. Patch. Various liberty loan, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, Jewish Welfare and Salvation Army drives were given enormous impetus on the screen; and finally President Wilson's war messages were brought home to people all over the world by means of the comprehensive pictorial work undertaken by the Division of Films on the Committee of Public Information.

A careful study of these new uses to which the motion picture was being put convinced Mr. Patch, according to his own story, that national problems and policies would inevitably reach the public through the motion picture screen, if they were handled in a subtle enough manner. This is the fundamental idea of the company he has formed, which is to be known as Greater America Films, Inc. The organization is to be a parent concern, founded for the purpose of financing and producing scenarios written by men of national reputation on vital questions of the day. These scenarios will be put into final form by expert writers for the screen, so that they will be accurate on hand; and drama instead of propaganda, on the other.

Mr. Patch pointed out that since the armistice was signed many attempts have been made to write screen plays around important questions of the moment. Most of these efforts were undertaken by men who had not studied their subjects thoroughly, and who had seized upon current topics because they happened to be timely—and, therefore, of possible commercial value. On the other hand, various other producers, attempting to co-operate with the Government in spreading the Americanization idea, had produced films that were so obviously propaganda that they drove people out of the theatre, rather than attracted them to it. It is Mr. Patch's idea that a middle ground must be reached if the screen is to be of any constructive value. In other words, scenarios dealing with important national and international problems should be prepared by men well versed on the subjects in question, in collaboration with trained dramatists.

Mr. Patch has interested some of the biggest men in America in his scheme. They have all, he said, been quick to see that his vision is likely to mark the discovery of a new and powerful channel for the shaping of public opinion. A year or more ago Mr. Patch took his plan to one of the most prominent financial magnates in America, Joseph Leiter, of Chicago and Washington. Mr. Leiter not only placed unlimited resources at Mr. Patch's disposal, but gave him the benefit of his knowledge, experience and advice.

Through the corporation he has formed Mr. Patch has announced the production of a half dozen big features dealing with as many separate vital problems of the day. The first picture will deal with the question of Radicalism; and on this subject Mr. Patch has been working constantly for almost two years. He has employed a small army of investigators, writers, private agents and travelers going to and coming from Russia and Siberia. While many of the scenes of this picture will deal with the terrible drama that has been enacted in Russia since 1917, the major portion of the story reveals this tremendous problem in all of its dangerous phases in America.

Associated with Mr. Patch in Greater America Films, Inc. in an advisory capacity, in addition to Mr. Leiter, are the following well-known men: Franklyn D'Olier, prominent cotton broker of Philadelphia and Commander of the American Legion; Redmond Stewart, well-known Baltimore lawyer; Major Lorillard Spencer, of New York; J. D. Wooster Lambert, of the Lambert Pharmacal Company, of St. Louis; and Colonel Eric Fisher Wood, of Pittsburgh.

Doraldina to Start Production

DORALDINA, the famous dancer, whose engagement as one of its new stars, was recently announced by Metro, left New York recently for the Pacific Coast, where she will begin work in about a fortnight on her first production under the Metro banner. This vehicle is to be a picturization of Carey Wilson's story, "The Passion Fruit." The locale of the subject is the Hawaiian Islands, and it will present Doraldina in the native atmosphere which she first popularized by her famous hula hula dance.

Doraldina first blazed into prominence as the creator of the hula hula, which introduced to the American public the native dances of Hawaii. Her success in the role of interpretess of the dances of the Pacific Islands was so great as instantly to install her as a prime favorite with the patrons of restaurants and theatres everywhere. Her first appearance before New York audiences, after her return from Spain where she had gone to study the Castilian dances, was in Reisenweber's Cabaret. There, her success with the restaurant's patrons resulted in her name being exhibited in electric lights, followed by an offer from the Shuberts, who signed her to appear as a featured member of the musical play, "Step This Way," starring Lew Fields.

Thus established as a headliner on Broadway, Doraldina's next conquest was in motion pictures. George Fitzmaurice had been engaged by Pathe to produce Kipling's novel, "The Naulahka," and the subject required a "wild woman" for the feminine lead. Doraldina got the part, and registered an emphatic hit in the role of the East Indian nautch dancer. Following her success in "The Naulahka," Doraldina formed her own motion picture company and started making screen productions of her own.

Doraldina, the famous dancer, who will appear in "The Passion Fruit," her first picture under the Metro banner

Born in San Francisco, Doraldina was unknown to the world of amusement twelve years ago. A chance was offered for the young San Francisco girl to go to Spain. She at once embraced it, and at length found herself in Barcelona, without the knowledge of a single word of Spanish.

This handicap, however, proved a spur to the ambitious young dancer, and she set about acquiring a knowledge of the language and the acquaintance of Rafael Vega, Spain's foremost maitre de danse and the one time partner of Carmencita, who shocked New York with her Hispanic wriggles twenty-five years ago. She at last induced Vega to teach her, and after months of training under his tutelage she obtained a position in the ballet of the Teatro Principal of Barcelona, and had the honor of being the first American premier danseuse ever to appear before a Barcelona audience. She danced in Spain for several seasons, studying her art the while, and at last came to New York.

Announcement of the cast of "The Passion Fruit," starring Doraldina, will be made later, after the production has been started on the West Coast.

A. Johnny Mack Joins Equity Pictures

Joseph I. Schnitzer, general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, announces the appointment of A. Johnny Mack, in capacity of director of exploitation for all Clara Kimball Young productions and Equity Specials. Mr. Mack, formerly president and general manager of the Hill Theatre, Newark, is a showman of many years' standing, and his experience dates back to childhood days when he amused himself in and around circuses and outdoor amusement companies.

Mr. Mack's first opportunity at keeping the Equity ball rolling will be the exploitation of Clara Kimball Young's production "For the Soul of Rafael," which will be seen in New York soon.

"Yanconna Yillies" Is Outdoor Picture

Work continues in the filming of Douglas MacLean's first starring vehicle for Paramount "Yanconna Yillies," at the Thomas H. Ince studios, or rather, in the surrounding country, for this is an outdoor picture and MacLean and the company spend most of their time on location. But it is not a rube picture in any sense of the word, in spite of its farm life setting.

Betty Compson Tells Plans

Star of "Miracle Man" Finishes Feature in West Coast Studio

BETTY COMPSON, who was literally catapulted into stardom through her portrayal of the role of "Rose" in George Loane Tucker's production of "The Miracle Man," and who is now at the head of her own company, has just made the first announcement of her plans for the future.

The studios and offices of the Betty Compson Productions have been established at the Robert Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, and Miss Compson has already completed the first of a series of superfeatures which will be distributed through one of the largest releasing organizations in the industry. The initial production is to be called "Prisoners of Love," and is of a calibre entirely in keeping with her extraordinary work in "The Miracle Man." The direction was by Arthur Rosson, assisted by his brother Richard.

Alfred A. Grasso, general manager of the company, was for eleven years with Henry W. Savage, in the capacity of his secretary, as assistant to the general manager, assistant to the press representative and in the engaging, booking and stock play departments. His seventeen years intensive experience in the theatrical business caused Edgar Selwyn and Margaret Mayo to engage him for the scenario department of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Later on Mr. Brasso became assistant to George Loane Tucker when he was directing for Goldwyn, and served in a similar capacity to Mr. Tucker when he became director general of Goldwyn.

Ernest Palmer, who was Mr. Tucker's principal cameraman, became chief cinematographer for Miss Compson; Jack Little came over as technical director from the Tucker unit; Chester Roberts, who was Mr. Tucker's secretary, became secretary of Miss Compson's company, and even one of Mr. Tucker's cutters was placed in the new organization. Miss Compson's present plans provide for about four pictures a year.

Universal Comedy Finished

Edith Roberts in Edgar Franklin Story Pleases in Latest Comedy

ANOTHER of the Edgar Franklin stories has been screened by Universal. This time it is "Alias Miss Dodd," starring Edith Roberts. The original title of the story was "Dodd—His Diary." It recently appeared in one of the Munsey publications

In "Alias Miss Dodd," the heroine thinks she is somewhat of a modern Joan D'Arc, to right all wrongs she encounters. She gets herself into a series of hilarious situations by presenting herself as the acknowledged daughter of a respectable old bachelor.

The photo-play is not without its serious and dramatic moments, but they merely serve to accentuate the humorous situations in which the characters find themselves at almost every turn.

Among others in the cast are Johnnie Cooke, Walter P. Richardson, who plays the hero; Harry Van Meter, a suave villain as usual; Ruth King, as an elegant woman of the world, Margaret McWade and Vida Johnson.

Harry Franklin directed the picture. It will be released June 21, at one of the last releases under Universal's present special attraction policy. Beginning with the July releases, a new Star Series will be put on the market. Miss Roberts will contribute eight high-class photoplays to this series during the next twelve months.

Molly Malone Signed for Goldwyn Pictures

Molly Malone, the petite, brown-eyed girl with a roughish smile, who was leading woman for Roscoe Arbuckle and in other productions, has just signed a long-term contract to play exclusively in Goldwyn Pictures. Miss Malone recently completed a part in "It's a Great Life," an adaptation of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "Empire Builders," produced by Goldwyn as an Eminent Authors' picture, and is now supporting Tom Moore in "Stop Thief," a screen version of the famous Cohan and Harris stage farce.

She has been with the Vitagraph, Lubin, Lasky and Universal companies, playing feminine leads. Miss Malone is regarded as a valuable addition to Goldwyn's acting forces on the Coast.

Expert Title Writers Form Organization

Katherine Hilliker announces the formation of an organization of expert title-writers to be known as "The Hillikeriters," which will include besides herself Raymond S. Harris and H. H. Caldwell. All three are well-known in the film industry and for the past year-and-a-half have been associated in the Outing-Chester Pictures organization, which they recently left to form this new association. H. H. Caldwell left Hollywood recently for New York where he will close pending deals for the organization, making his headquarters at D. H. Hilliker's studio, 125 West 40 street. The new association will be represented by Edna Schley, combining offices with hers in the Markham Building, Hollywood.

Next Alice Joyce Picture to be "The Prey"

"The Prey," a society drama of tangled lives, is the next special production in which Albert E. Smith will present Alice Joyce. In writing the scenario, Calder Johnstone provided Miss Joyce with many unusual opportunities outlined in the original story by Joseph Le Brandt. George L. Sargent directed "The Prey," after several weeks had been spent in casting it. Harry Benham appears as leading man, and L. Rogers Lytton, one of the most polished "heavies" on the screen, has a role in which he perpetrates his villainy in his usual convincing manner. The story is highly dramatic, but at no time does it become melodramatic. It will be released in September.

Goldfarb Made General Manager of Climax

Felix Goldfarb has been elected vice president and general manager of the recently formed Climax Film Corporation. Mr. Goldfarb has been in the film business for the past twelve years, and recently resigned as New York manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corp. His first release for Climax will be "A Common Level," featuring Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney.

Simplex Notes

That the Simplex Projector is regarded by the industry as being a popular one is being evidenced by the fact that out of the thirty-two projectors in use in the Godfrey Building, thirty of them are Simplexes, leaving but two machines of other makes in the entire building.

These thirty Simplexes are installed in the projection rooms of the following companies with the number of machines used as indicated.

Famous Ployers-Lasky Co., Selznick & Select Pictures Corp., J. Frank Brockliss, United Artists Corporation, Hi Silverman's Public Projection Rooms, Reginald Warde, Educational Films Corporation, Republican Laboratories, International Cinema Center, David P. Howells, Trans-Atlantic Film Co., L. Harstn Exchange, Empire State Film Corporation.

S. Rankin Drew Post to Hold Outing in July

Speaking before the S. Rankin Drew Post No. 340, W. H. Buxton, county chairman of the American Legion, declared that the "turn-out" of the Legion forces in the Memorial Day parade had dispelled the idea that the association was a mere "paper organization." At the meeting at Keen's plans were laid for the promotion of Mr. Buxton's campaign to have the New York County Chapter lead the A. L. in effectiveness. This will possibly mean an increase in dues. The matter is to be voted on at the post's meeting on July 13. A committee headed by Sidney Samson has been appointed to arrange for an outing of the post to be held late in July. At the last meeting films, taken in France at the decoration of S. Rankin Drew, were exhibited.

Print of "Midlanders" Reaches New York

"The Midlanders," Bessie Love's first production for Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., arrived in New York by special representative from Los Angeles last week and was hailed by its producer as being better than his high expectations of it. His enthusiasm was not dampened by the fact that the delay in arrival of the print caused the cancellation by the film executive of reservations aboard the steamer on which he had been scheduled to sail for England. Owing to the scarcity of reservations Mr. Callaghan is compelled to defer his voyage indefinitely.

After viewing Miss Love's initial Callaghan photoplay the producer expressed himself as being highly elated at the successful results of the younthful star's first production under his auspices.

Sales Manager on Long Tour of Exchanges

S. R. Kent, sales manager, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was a visitor at the Lasky studio in Hollywood last week. Mr. Kent is on a tour of the various exchanges of the country throughout the country, laying plans for the forthcoming season.

Paul Chalfin with F. P.-Lasky

Paul Chalfin

IN accordance with its plans to fill the ranks of its organization with leaders in every phase of motion picture production the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that Paul Chalfin, one of the foremost authorities in this country in the field of architecture, interior decoration and landscape gardening, will go to California in about three weeks where he will work at the Lasky studio in association with Cecil B. DeMille. Negotiations with Mr. Chalfin were opened by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky, in charge of production, some time before the latter's departure for Europe, and the announcement of his engagement was made by Adolph Zukor just prior to his departure for Cleveland to attend the meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

In announcing the acquisition of Mr. Chalfin, Mr. Zukor laid emphasis upon the fact that it was in keeping with the company's well-shaped policy of highly specialized production. "This policy," said Mr. Zukor, "first took definite form with the production by Cecil B. DeMille of the first of his elaborate dramas of married life. The immense success scored by these DeMille productions has been due, in no small measure, to the attention to detail in settings, interior decoration and costuming, bestowed upon them by Mr. DeMille, himself a thorough artist in the largest and best sense of the word."

In addition to being a leading figure in the field of art and architecture, Mr. Chalfin is an expert in determining the authenticity of antiques and often is called into consultation by leading collectors and importers. He was graduated from Harvard in the class of 1898, after which he studied at the Art Students' League in New York and at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris. Later he painted portraits under the tutelage of James McNeil Whistler of his London studio and spent three years at the American Academy in Rome, where he won the Lazarus scholarship in 1909.

Mr. Chalfin's greatest work, however, one which has engaged his interest for the past eight years, has been the designing, supervision and furnishing of "Vizcaya," the palatial home of James Deering at Miami, Fla., in which he was associated with F. Burrall Hoffman, Jr. This house and its grounds form one of the show places of the United States and have been the subject of many articles in architectural magazines, in fact, of entire issues, notably The Architectural Review of July, 1917. In this connection it is interesting to note that the elaborate bathroom setting in Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," luxurious almost beyond the belief of the average spectator, was an exact reproduction of one of the baths in the Deering house.

In commention upon his entrance into the motion picture field, Mr. Chalfin called attention to the fact that the leading figures in literature and in other branches of the fine arts are turning their attention to the films. "The time has come," he said, "when the work of men like Barrie and Henry Arthur Jones should have an attention as serious and as highly considered as has been their work in literature. It is the time for architects and artists to step forward to put their work on the screen in suitable and proper settings. I am entering the motion picture field in a spirit of co-operation, with a desire to be of assistance in establishing the motion picture as one of the permanent expressions of artistic feeling."

Christie Starts First Feature

"So Long Letty" Under Way; Two Reel Comedy Finished

"SO LONG LETTY" the first of the Christie's first all-star specials, goes into production in Los Angeles June 15th. Already Al Christie, who will direct the picture himself, is lining up the cast of featured players.

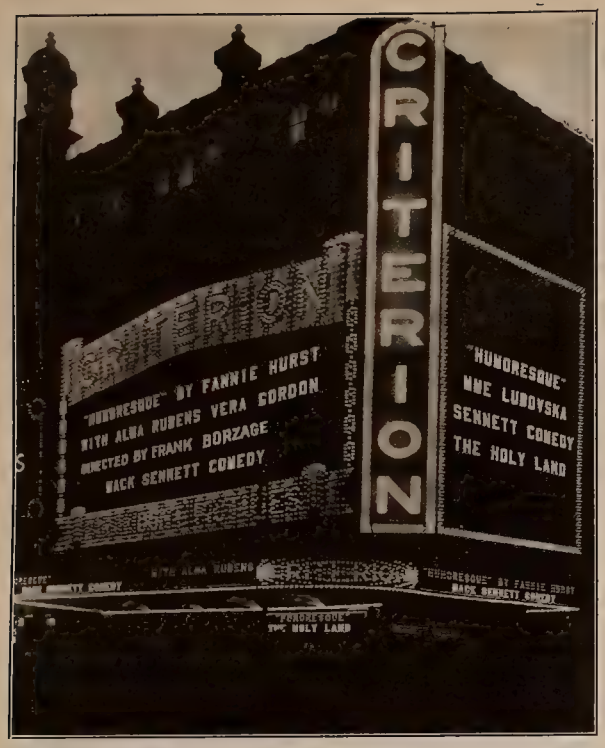
Probably the most prominent of the players in the special, which will be released by Robertson-Cole, are two pairs of characters who were made famous in the stage version. The plot, revolving about two married couples, has many farcical situations which, it is believed, have been admirably cast. The first of these couples who play together in the piece are Grace Darmond and Walter Hiers. Miss Darmond is "Letty" and Mr. Hiers in the role of her abused husband. The second couple is T. Roy Barnes and Colleen Moore, in this case, Barnes being the abused husband.

The Christies are receiving congratulations on the securing of Barnes, Hiers, Miss Darmond and Miss Moore, all of them being featured stars. T. Roy Barnes made his latest appearance in "Scratch My Back" with Goldwyn, but before that founded his reputation on many successful stage roles, one of the chief among them being the featured part in "Katinka" and in many musical and legitimate comedies and with his own company in vaudeville. Miss Darmond played several starring roles in pictures, one of them being "What Every Woman Wants." She has recently played the lead in "The Hope Diamond Mystery," and in Ince's latest production, "Below the Surface."

Hiers made a hit in Paramount's "It Pays to Advertise" and "What's Your Husband Doing," Colleen Moore was featured by Griffith Selig, and in Christie special comedies and has recently completed a leading role in Marshall Neilan's newest production which is yet unnamed.

Following the completion of contracts whereby the new Christie special two-reel comedies will be handled through the Educational-First National exchanges, the first of these new pictures has been completed and negative is being sent to New York for the supplying by Educational of a large number of prints.

The first comedy is "Kiss Me Caroline" featuring Bobby Vernon, with Vera Steadman, Teddy Sampson, Neal Burns and Charlotte Merriam, it is directed by Al Christie and is a light farce.



Harold Lloyd Comedy is Due July 19

A new standard in comedy making is said to have been established by Harold Lloyd in "High and Dry," first of his new series of $100,000 two-reel comedy specials for distribution through Pathe. Surpassing even "Haunted Spooks," "High and Dry" will be released on July 11th, is said to be a sort of a tonic for "summer illness" from which so many picture theatres suffer.

The initial release of the new two-reel series was longer in the making than any comedy ever produced by the Rolin Film Company starring Harold Lloyd. It took nearly two months to create "High and Dry."

Alice Brady Will Not Desert the Stage

Alice Brady, Realart star, according to reports will not desert the stage for the screen for a period of one year.

Cosmopolitan Keeps Busy

Has Five Productions Completed, and Several Others Start Soon

AN idea of the extent of Cosmopolitan Productions' picture plans can be gleaned from the fact that this company now has five new productions completed, or nearly completed, two more to be started next week and several others ready to be put into work within the next few months.

"Humoresque," now playing a pre-release engagement at the Criterion Theatre, New York, is the latest Cosmopolitan Productions' release. Written by Fannie Hurst, it was directed by Frank Borzage and has a notable cast, including Alma Rubens, Vera Gordon, Dore Davidson and Gaston Glass.

"The Restless Sex," Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle, is another Cosmopolitan Production that has been completed and scheduled for early release. This is the screen version of Robert W. Chambers' novel of the same name, which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and was later published in book form. In the cast supporting Miss Davies are Carlyle Blackwell, Ralph Kellard, Charles Lane, Robert Vivian, Etna Ross, Stephen Carr, Vivian Osborn and Corrine Barker.

"A Whiff of Heliotrope," from the story by Richard Washburn Childs—which appeared a short while ago in Hearst's Magazine—has recently been completed by Director George D. Baker with an all-star cast, and will be released by Cosmopolitan Productions in the near future.

A screen version of Winston Churchill's novel, "The Inside of the Cup," is now nearing completion under the direction of Albert Capellani for Cosmopolitan Productions.

Marion Davies has started work on a new picture, entitled "Buried Treasure," from the story by F. Britten Austen which appeared recently in Hearst's Magazine. George D. Baker is directing.

Director Robert Vignola starts work this week in "The Passionate Pilgrim," from the novel of the same name by Samuel Merwin, which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine; while Director Frank Borgaze begins "Just Around the Corner," by Fannie Hurst, also a Cosmopolitan Magazine story.

Among other big features scheduled for early production are "The Young Diana" by Marie Corelli, The Nth Commandment" by Fannie Hurst; "The Wild Goose" by Gouverneur Morris; "Uneasy Street" by Arthur Somers Roche; "Zal" by Rupert Hughes; "Yellow Magic" by F. Britten Austen; and "Superman" by Fannie Hurst.

All-Star Cast Includes Miss Frankie Mann

The next international offering, under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, will be "The Passionate Pilgrim," in which Frankie Mann, will play an important role.

Lasky Reorganizes Staff

Famous Players' Executive Makes Changes in Production Department

ONE of the last things Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, did before sailing for London Saturday on the Adriatic was to complete the reorganization of the production department of Famous Players.

Mr. Lasky has appointed Walter Wanger production manager, and Mr. Wanger is now fully installed in that position, having charge of all production activities during the absence of Mr. Lasky in Europe. Another announcement made by Mr. Lasky was that Robert E. MacAlarney, scenario editor, has been given enlarged powers and greater duties, which will necessitate the enlargement of the scenario department. In connection with the enlargement of the scenario department Miss Maude Miller, who has been connected with the department for some time, has been appointed Mr. MacAlarney's assistant.

Victor Smith has been appointed studio manager to succeed J. N. Naulty, who resigned. Mr. Smith, who formerly occupied a similar position with Vitagraph, has already taken up his new work. He will have charge of the company's eastern studios, and among his first big tasks will be the removal of studio activities and organization from the Fifty-sixth street studio, Manhattan, and other studios in New York and in New Jersey to the new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City.

Mr. MacAlarney also announced the appointment of Roswell Dague as production editor of the eastern studios, succeeding Gardner Hunting. Mr. Dague, who has been assistant production editor, will have charge of the editing of all productions made in the East. Before going to the Fifty-sixth street studio Mr. Dague was assistant scenario editor under Mr. MacAlarney.

H. Bergman Joins Realart

Former Vitagraph Writer Adapts First Picture for Bebe Daniels

HELMAR WALTON BERGMAN, who has been a successful scenario writer for many years and adapted fifteen O. Henry stories to the screen some time ago, has been added to Realart's scenario staff. He will work at the company's Hollywood studios.

Mr. Bergman has recently completed the first Bebe Daniels starring vehicle for Realart, "You Never Can Tell," from two Saturday Evening Post stories by Grace Lovell Bryan. In it he has provided the new Realartist with many opportunities to wear beautiful clothes and to display the striking dramatic talent she has shown in recent productions.

Mr. Bergman wrote scenarios for Kalem for some time and then shifted to Vitagraph. When with that company he wrote "An Enemy to the King," in which E. H. Sothern played; "Aladdin from Broadway," "Womanhood" and the adaptations of fifteen O. Henry stories.

Mr. Bergman is enthusiastic over his profession. "I have been in all branches of motion picture production," he said, "but I consider that the scenario writer has by far the most fascinating field. Many times one has to build the story from nothing, where the director and actor have more or less of a skeleton to work from.

"It is real source of gratification to those in the profession that the scenario writer is gaining more and more recognition for his part in the formation of a feature photoplay. It may not be significant, but it is at least a curious coincidence that the advance of the motion picture has been accompanied by the recognition and advance of the profession of scenario writing."

Elmo Lincoln Film Ready

Universal to Give Early Release to Central America Production

UNIVERSAL announces the early release of a new Universal jewel production. It is called "Under Crimson Skies," and is a dramatic photo-play of gun-running and revolutions in Central America. The feature player is Elmo Lincoln, heretofore the strong man of a series of Universal serials, including "Elmo the Mighty" and "Elmo the Fearless." Lincoln also will be remembered as the huge half-savage in "Tarzan of the Apes," the original Tarzan picture.

"Under Crimson Skies" is from the pen of J. G. Hawks, who numbers among his output many of the successes of Dorothy Dalton and William S. Hart. In the multi-colored Central American story, Hawks has woven all of the romance, love and adventure, life on the high seas and political intrigue of which he is capable. "It is an ideal story of the picturesque turmoil that periodically upset our Southern neighboring republics," is the way brother authors have characterized the story.

"Under Crimson Skies" is in six reels. It was directed by Rex Ingram, the scenario being written by Harvey Thew. The name of the original story was "The Beach Comber." The production had "Captain Courageous" as a working title.

Part of "Tarzan" Serial En Route to New York

David P. Howells, who controls the world rights for "The Son of Tarzan" serial, which the National Film Corporation has announced as its chief release for 1920, reports that the prologue and the first episode of this chapter-picture have been completed and are now on their way to New York for preview.

Edgar Rice Burroughs' jungle books have been unusually successful. "The Son of Tarzan" is the fourth of his books to be screened but the first to be adapated as a serial. Harry Revier, who directed "The Return of Tarzan," is also handling this production, while Roy Somerville is writing the continuity.

Information on Selig Serial is Sought

Exhibitor's inquiries are rapidly coming in on "Vanishing Trails," the Colonel Wm. N. Selig serial being state righted by the Canyon Pictures Corporation, according to an announcement from that company.

The Canyon pictures also announces that rapid progress is being made on the production on the Franklyn Farnum five-reel features, production of which started two weeks ago. The first picture is based on a story by William E. Wing, who is at present working on the second story. The pictures are being produced under the personal supervision of Colonel Selig, and will be state righted by Canyon.

Hallmark Serial Set for Bookings

Stuart Paton's fifteen episode serial, "The Fatal Sign," is set for immediate bookings, according to the announcement of Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

"The Fatal Sign" stars Claire Anderson and Harry Carter.

Attractive paper and press book, and a special trade paper advertising campaign backed by the work of a competent sales force are in working as exploitation helps.

Fine Arts Moves Into Larger Quarters

The Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., who are ushering in their activities as independent distributors of motion pictures with the six reel comedy "Up In Mary's Attic" have been compelled to seek larger quarters. The offices have been moved from 126 West Forty-Sixth street, New York, to the 11th floor of the Brokaw Building, Forty-Second street and Broadway.

Hayakawa in Chinese Story

Robertson-Cole Star to Appear in "Li Ting Lang," Just Completed

Sessue Hayakawa, Robertson-Cole star, being featured in "Li Ting Lang"

THE name of the big drama starring Sessue Hayakawa, which has been occupying the attentions of Haworth and Robertson-Cole for several months, will be "Li Ting Lang," a contraction of the original title of the story "Li Ting Lang, Chinese Gentleman," published in the Green Book Magazine a short time ago.

It was definitely decided last week to preserve the working title as it is so typically Chinese that it carries with it all the mystery of the Orient. The picture was completed just before Mr. Hayakawa made his recent trip east and it will be released within a short time. As the original title indicates, Sessue Hayakawa is seen in this picture in a Chinese role, but one that is quite different from any of the other Chinese roles he has played. As "Li Ting Lang," he plays a Chinese prince, educated in the United States and the scenes are set in both America and China.

It is said that Hayakawa has never before had such an opportunity to display his splendid screen artistry and histrionic ability. The story, which was written by Howard P. Rockey, and adapted for the screen by E. Richard Schayer, abounds in an unusual wealth of colorful atmosphere.

A splendid cast supports Mr. Hayakawa including Doris Pawn, who appeared with Lew Cody in "The Beloved Cheater," Marc Robbins, one of Mr. Hayakawa's "Tong Man" associates, Frances Raymond, Alan Forrest and C. E. Mason.

Fox Making Stage Success

Shirley Mason to Be Starred in "Merely Mary Ann," Popular Play

MISS SHIRLEY MASON is to do "Merely Mary Ann" as a motion picture. The stage success in which Eleanor Robson won international renown during the period in which she appeared under the management of the old theatrical firm of Liebler & Co., is to be converted to the silent drama by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation.

Work has already been started on "Merely Mary Ann" at the Fox studios in Hollywood, with Miss Mason in the title-role. This part, known to most theatregoers of the country, is suited perfectly to the little star whose success since she started with Fox, in "Her Elephant Man," "Molly and I," and "Love's Harvest," has brought her rapidly to the front rank of American screen stars.

The director selected for "Merely Mary Ann" is a past master in the production of stories of this type—Edward J. Le Saint, one of the veterans of the Fox studio in Hollywood. In addition to directing this film, Mr. Le Saint wrote the scenario.

"Merely Mary Ann," with that very fine dramatic actress, Eleanor Robson, in the title-role, is probably one of the best known of stage successes produced during the past decade. It was in this play that Miss Robson established herself most firmly in the hearts of theatregoers of this country, and brought to the author of the play, Israel Zangwill, the greatest success of the day.

According to arrangements made by William Fox from his headquarters in the new Fox Building in West Fifty-fifth Street, New York, a goodly portion of the original stage settings used by the Liebler firm in presenting "Merely Mary Ann" to Broadway audiences will be shipped to the West Coast for use in the film version. The remainder of the interior settings used in the screen production will be modeled after the design of the original stage backgrounds and properties, and every effort will be exerted toward making a most faithful production.

Shirley Mason, now being starred in Fox pictures

G. B. Seitz Will Make Feature in Spain

George B. Seitz, a producer, director and star in Pathe serials, is going to Spain to produce the first feature picture he has attempted in his career in motion picture work.

Following arrangements made with Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., June Caprice, long one of the best known women stars in picturedom, will be co-starred with Mr. Seitz. Marguerite Courtot, who has appeared with Mr. Seitz in serials he has produced for Pathe will have a leading part in the production. Harry Semels, interpreter of heavy roles in several Pathe serials, is also to accompany the party.

The story selected for Mr. Seitz's first feature starring vehicle is an adaptation from a play he wrote some time ago under the title "The Golden Senorita." In making the scenario, however, Mr. Seitz made over the title also and the picture version is to be called "Rogues and Romances."

Brunton Studios Open Scenario Department

The Robert Brunton Studios have opened a scenario department to co-operate with the seventeen producing units working at the big plant. It is the intention that this new department shall take care of stories or books and prepare working scripts for any producing organizations that desire. The new department is in charge of Jack Cunningham who has been under contract with George Loan Tucker and who in the past three years has written seventy-six photoplays. Associated with Cunningham will be Fred Stowers and George Elwell Jenks. The fourth member of the cast is Paul Scofield.

"The Four Horsemen" to be Made in West

Metro's all-star production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," originally intended to be made at the New York studios in West Sixty-first Street, under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general, has been shifted to the West Coast studios at Hollywood, Cal.

The all-star cast of "The Four Horsemen" has not yet been selected, of course, but it has been decided that Rex Ingraham will direct the production.

All Los Angeles Likes "Below the Surface"

Thomas H. Ince's special production for Paramount, "Below the Surface," starring Hobart Bosworth which was released June 6, proved to be a smashing box-office attraction at Grauman's Rialto, Los Angeles, where it had its premiere. In the middle of the third week of the engagement, H. G. Ballance, Famous Players-Lasky Branch Manager at Los Angeles wired General Manager A. Lichtman as follows: "Business far surpassing our fondest expectations. Press is unanimous in its approval of this production."

Beware of Fraudulent "Sennett Beauties"

THE following communication has been received by the News from the Los Angeles offices of Mack Sennett:

"It has been brought to the attention of Mack Sennett that an unauthorized and spurious production of Mack Sennett Bathing Girls took place at St. Louis recently.

"Exhibitors are warned to beware of any company of Bathing Girls, appearing as Mack Sennett Bathing Girls, unless a written authorization so to do is presented over the signature of Mack Sennett, showing him actually to be the producer.

"Mr. Sennett has announced that he will prosecute anyone falsely using his name in connection with any Bathing Girl acts. Before booking any Girl Acts in which the name of Mack Sennett is used, exhibitors are urged to communicate with Mack Sennett at his address, 1712 Alessandro Street, Los Angeles.

"At the present time no Bathing Girl act from Mr. Sennett's studios is appearing anywhere in the United States, and no such act has the right to use his name."

Schaefer Writing Vitagraph Continuity

Fred Schaefer, past president of the American Press Humorists, is now on the scenario staff of Vitagraph. In the last few months he has adapted stories for Earle Williams and Harry T. Morey.

Year's Schedule Completed

FIFTEEN independent production units having contracts for the exhibition of their total minimum of sixty special feature attractions for the 1920-1921 season in the six thousand independent theatres which, this fall, will be enfranchised members of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., this week announce the list of titles of their respective releases.

This information is augmented by a detailed schedule of release dates which exhibitor officials of Associated First National Pictures have established for the sixty attractions. This schedule lists each production, the star producer or director-producer, with its release date from August 30, 1920, the start of the new season, to May 2, 1921, on which date the summer season for that year will begin.

Beginning August 30, of this year, the First National schedule opens with "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," on which Charles Ray is working at present. Production has already started on "Good References," the forthcoming Constance Talmadge production that will be directed by R. William Neill. Release date will be August 30th. September 6 will mark the release of "The Scoffer," an Allan Dwan production.

Louis B. Mayer's production of "Harriet and the Piper," in which Anita Stewart will be starred, is announced for release on September 13th. This story by Kathleen Norris ran serially in the Pictorial Review and is now being published in book form. Norma Talmadge in Jane Cowle's successful stage play, "Smilin' Through" will be released on September 20th.

Whitman Bennett announces that the initial Lionel Barrymore feature to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures entitled "The Master Mind," will be ready for release by September 20th. Sydney Franklin, is now working on his initial independent production for the Circuit. This will be entitled, "Athalie," and is adapted from the story by Robert W. Chambers. "The Woman," a special feature production which will be exploited in very much the same fashion that characterized First National's handling of "Auction of Souls" will be released October 4th. Arthur S. Kane announces that "Peaceful Valley," Charles Ray's second production for release through First National will be ready October 11th.

The initial production of R. A. Walsh and personally directed by Mr. Walsh will be ready for release on October 18th. "Old Dad," from the novel by the same name by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott, and which ran serially in the Woman's Home Companion and is now in book form will be the attraction starring Mildred Harris Chaplin. This picture will be released on October 25th. November 1st will mark the release of Katherine MacDonald in "Curtain," adapted from Miss Rita Whitman's story which was originally published in The Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven will make their debut as a First National starring combination on November 8th with the release of "Twin Beds," screen rights for which were purchased a month ago from the Selwyns. "The Heart of a Fool," an Allan Dwan production, is scheduled for release on November 15th. "The Honorable Peter Sterling" will probably be the title of the attraction in which Lionel Barrymore will make his second appearance as a First National star. "The Girl of Gold," will be the Norma Talmadge release for November 29th.

The remainder of the schedule is as follows: "Nomads of the North," by James Oliver Curwood, on October 25th; "Penrod," produced by Marshall Neilan, on November 29th; "The Woman in His House," starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, on December 6th and R. A. Walsh production on December 13th; "The Human Chess Board," with Constance Talmadge, on December 13th; a Charles Ray picture, possibly by Rob Wanger, on December 20th; a special attraction to be announced later on December 27th; a James Oliver Curwood production early in January; Allan Dwan's "Faith in Humanity" on January 17th; "Sowing the Wind," with Anita Stewart, on January 24th; "Jim, the Penman," with Lionel Barrymore a week later; a Norma Talmadge picture on February 7th, and a Marshall Neilan production on the same date; Katherine MacDonald in "The Notorious Miss Lisle" on February 14th; Charles Ray in "Ramsey Milholland," on February 21st, and "Wedding Bells," with Constance Talmadge, on February 28th.

A Mildred Harris Chaplin release on March 7, an R. A. Walsh production to be released on March 14th, and a Katherine MacDonald feature for release on March 28th, lead up to the release of "The Devil's Garden," in which Lionel Barrymore will be starred and which will be released on April 11th.

A Norma Talmadge and a Charles Ray release on April 18th, a Marshall Neilan picture on April 25th, and Constance Talmadge starring in "Mama's Affair" to be released on May 2nd, carry the Associated First National schedule almost a year in advance.

Hampton Picture Scoring

"Riders of Dawn" Gives Evidences of Being Great Success is Report

"BACKED by Zane Grey's literary reputation and audience-power and the production and direction standards given it by Benjamin B. Hampton, 'Riders of the Dawn,' has already won its way to the fore-front among the few big productions generally regarded as the banner attractions for the approaching Summer season," says W. W. Hodkinson in a statement just issued by that organization.

Trade showings held simultaneously this week at all Hodkinson exchanges lead to the opinion that first run exhibitors throughout the country feel toward "Riders of the Dawn" as did Moe Mark of the New York Strand and Tom Moore of Washington, both of whom gave the Zane Grey production immediate presentation.

Ray A. Grombacher, the power behind the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., where another current Hodkinson success, Louise Glaum in "Sex," just closed a week of capacity business, paid "Riders of the Dawn" signal tribute by booking it for early June showing and beginning his campaign with one-column teaser ads in the Spokane dailies two weeks before its first local presentation. Tabor's Grand, Denver, has also booked "Riders of the Dawn" for a week's engagement in mid-June.

Harper & Brothers, publishers of the Zane Grey novel, have inaugurated a bookship link-up campaign on "Riders of the Dawn" that surpasses anything of its kind ever before attempted in the promotion of a picture, the big publishing organization having already linked up close to 18,000 booksellers throughout the country, whose co-operation may be had for the asking, says Hodkinson, by exhibitors in the larger cities playing the big Hodkinson release.

"Shore Acres" Gets Returns

St. Louis and Los Angeles Exhibitors Do Big Business with Film

FROM the far west and the Mississippi Valley exhibitor reports are reaching the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation in New York, telling of the remarkable pulling power of "Shore Acres," the new Metro picturization of James A. Herne's drama, with a notable cast featuring Alice Lake. As two instances in point, Metro officials are stressing advices just received from St. Louis, Mo., and San Bernardino, Cal.

"Shore Acres" played seven days at the Kings theatre, St. Louis, and C. Werner, Metro branch manager in that city, states that "hundreds were turned away, unable to obtain admittance. The admission prices were 30 cents and 44 cents." The picture later was booked for three-day runs at the Lindell, Grand-Florissant, Shenandoah and Juniata theatres in St Louis.

Even more praiseworthy was the box office achievement of "Shore Acres" in San Bernardino, where it was shown at the Temple theatre. After he had reaped a golden harvest with the Metro production, J. G. Knapp, of the Temple theatre, wired to B. F. Rosenberg, Metro exchange manager in Los Angeles, as follows:

"'Shore Acres' great; went over with a bang. Everybody delighted and nothing but words of praise from a jam-up house, both matinee and night. This was once in my life when I was undersold, and if you have any more like 'Shore Acres' sign the contract for me and place a date. Congratulations."

New Star's Picture Ready

Anne Cornwall Makes "The Girl in the Rain," Universal Release

ROLLIN STURGEON, Universal director, has just announced the completion at Universal City of a new picture starring Anne Cornwall, Universal's most recent star. The picture, "The Girl in the Rain" is an adaptation of Varick Vanardy's popular novel, "The Girl By the Roadside." It will be one of the first releases until the newly established Star Series plan of Universal bookings. "The Girl in the Rain" is Miss Cornwall's third picture for Universal. It is a story of a pretty girl who is marooned by a tempest in a deserted shack with a socially prominent young man. Supporting Miss Cornwall in this picture are James Liddy, Lloyd Bacon, Jossalyn Von Trump, James Farley, George Runkel and Neal Hardin.

Both Miss Cornwall and Mr. Liddy, who plays opposite her, are newcomers in the films. Both are former musical comedy favorites. Miss Cornwall formerly was one of the chorus girls in the series of intimate musical shows presented at the Princess theatre, New York. Her principal screen portrayal before joining Universal, was that of the ingenue role in "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore.

Mr. Liddy was a star foot-ball half-back before he went on the stage. He was a University of Arizona favorite and made the All-Western team.

"The Girl in the Rain" will be released July 12th.

Bessie Love Picture Ready

Agent Brings Print to New York to Be Screened for Callaghan

IMMEDIATELY following the assembling of the completed production of "The Midlanders," Bessie Love's first photoplay for Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Al Rogell, a special representative of the Los Angeles company, left the Western producing center for the East with the first print. Mr. Rogell is expected to arrive in New York City within the next few days, thus giving Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the Callaghan producing company, an opportunity to see the completed version of his initial Bessie Love film prior to sailing for Europe in the interests of his concern.

Mr. Callaghan left his Los Angeles studios several weeks ago when work on "The Midlanders" was well under way. After viewing the rushes of the complete production, the film executive was satisfied to trust the assembling and titling of the film in the hands of Miss Love's two directors, Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, while he came on to New York City with the principal intention of buying rights to additional famous plays and novels for his star.

This week Mr. Callaghan announced to his associates that he had practically completed all arrangements for sailing for England where he will personally supervise the preliminaries to the production there of Charles Dickens's "Old Curiosity Shop" to produce which Miss Love will shortly cross the seas. Mr. Callaghan will precede his star to make all necessary arrangements, and following his return to this country, he expects to send a company abroad to make this photoplay in the locale in which the original novel transpires.

Goldwyn Stars All Busy

Many Productions Prepared for Coming Season at Coast Studios

HAVING finished his work in "Cupid, The Cowpuncher," a story by Eleanor Gates, produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the Culver City Studios, Will Rogers, who has taken a place among the most popular comedians on the screen, is waiting for the completion of the continuity of "Old Hutch," Garret Smith's story that ran in The Saturday Evening Post. In the new picture, as in his previous successes, "Almost a Husband," "Jubilo," "Water, Water Everywhere" and "Jes' Call Me Jim," about to be released, Rogers will be directed by Clarence Badger.

The production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Empire Builders," a story of "prep" school life, is progressing under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, who at present has an army of 500 colored people on an island north of Santa Monica where scenes representing life among South Sea Island savages are being filmed.

"Just Out of College," George Ade's play, has been selected as the next starring vehicle for Jack Pickford, who, directed by Al Green, is nearing the final episodes of "The Man Who Had Everything." By the latter part of this week, Tom Moore will be engaged on the production of the mystery farce, "Stop Thief," with Hazel Daly as his leading woman. Harry Beaumont is directing. Wallace Wormsley has just finished editing Gouverneur Morris' "The Penalty," a Goldwyn Eminent Authors Picture. The author has expressed his admiration at the wonderful characterization given by Lon Chaney in the part of Blizzard, a legless man.

Pathe Reports Big Business

Peak of Pathe's Feature Bookings Said to Have Been Reached in May

THE peak of Pathe's feature business, which has been growing steadily for the last year, was attained during May, according to an announcement just issued by the distributing organization. Bookings for May showed an increase of thirty-three and a third per cent over March, "Brunet Month," which upset all previous business in the annals of Pathe Exchange, Inc. During March the thirty-two Pathe branch offices averaged a gross increase in all business over November, December and January, of forty-five per cent, it is declared, indicating the big strides that must have been made by the Pathe feature department during May.

Elmer R. Pearson, Director of Exchanges, in making his report for May to vice-president and general-manager, Paul Brunet, attributed the great growth of the feature-business to two things:

"First, the upbuilding of a feature sales organization, which in numbers and ability, is outranked by none at this time.

"Second, to the ever increasing merit of the Pathe feature product, which, during May, was augmented by two sterling productions—Edgar Lewis's 'Sherry' and 'Simple Souls,' Jesse D. Hampton's production starring Blanche Sweet."

The showing being made by "Rio Grande," the Edwin Carewe production, which, during the first month following its issue, was booked by 2,000 exhibitors, was also a factor in the increased bookings for May. "The Blood Barrier," "Dollar for Dollar," and "The Miracle of Money" likewise were heavily booked during the month.

Busy Days at Ince Studios

Florence Vidor Engaged for Stellar Role of "Beau Revel" Feature

FOLLOWING a temporary lull in activities, the Thomas H. Ince Studios in Culver City once more hum with activity as four companies are at work on forthcoming Thomas H. Ince productions to be released through Famous Players-Lasky Exchanges.

Enid Bennett's current vehicle, "I Wonder If——," which marks her last picture under the supervision and banner of Thomas H. Ince, is progressing under the direction of Fred Niblo. The story is by Frank Dazey, and the scenario by Agnes Christine Johnston. Donald MacDonald appears opposite Miss Bennett in the leading masculine role.

"I Wonder If——" is said to offer many possibilities for the exhibitor. The picture, it is stated, possesses an appeal of romance and mystery. Moreover, the production is described as a genuine fashion show.

The new Ince-Vance special, "Beau Revel," under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince and the direction of John Griffith Wray, is in its second week of filming. Thomas H. Ince announces that he has engaged Florence Vidor for the leading role of "Beau Revel." In connection with the acquisition of Miss Vidor for the stellar role, the following statement has been issued from the Ince office:

"The role fits her like the proverbial glove, and her vivid brunette beauty and great personal charm will be seen to the utmost advantage in the settings of gay New York life, which wil make 'Beau Revel' one of the memorable pictures of the year."

Douglas MacLean and his company are shooting "exteriors" for "Yanconna Yillies" under the direction of Jack Nelson. Gladys George has the principal feminine role. "'Yanconna Yillies' is brimming over with laughs," states a report from the Ince studios. "It presents the 'back to the farm' idea from a very different and modern angle, but there is genuine farm stuff in it, and the farm which is serving as the background leaves nothing to the imagination."

Seena Owen Becomes Star

"Flying A" Says Her Latest Work Qualifies Her for That Position

THE work of Seena Owen as the star of the "Flying A" special, "The House of Toys," is made the subject of a statement just issued by the American Film Company, Inc. The statement claims that the theory of Miss Owen's lack of a "camera face" is absolutely discredited in the actual results that have been achieved with the star in the production of "The House of Toys." The statement follows:

"Seena Owen has at last come into her own in the American super-special, 'The House of Toys,' in which she carries the role of the typical romantic girl who thought it would be so romantic to marry and be poor and work together,' forgetting that there is nothing poetical or inspiring about a small flat on a side street, or last year's millinery.

"Miss Owen has always been acclaimed a gifted actress, and yet a magazine article of recent date started a long article with the query: 'Why isn't Seena Owen a star?' She was described as 'vigorous, athletic, clear-skinned and clear-eyed, with grey-blue eyes that look at you frankly from under curly lashes, finely arched eyebrows,' with blond hair which was long and curly until the fashion of the minute bobbed it, and yet the idiosyncrasies of the camera never did her justice. In fact it was said the camera was cruel to her. They said she didn't have a camera face! Now just what a camera face is nobody has defined, because just when the director thinks he knows, along comes a star who departs from every theory which had been formulating into rules, and photographs to perfection. So with Seena Owen, by some little trick of lighting, or as a result of some study on the part of the make-up expert, whatever difficulty there might have been has most certainly been eradicated in the new 'Flying A' drama, in which she carries the stellar role to the entire satisfaction of the most critical spectators."

Censors' Objection to "Sex" Wins Publicity

The objection of three women to the showing of "Sex," the Hodkinson release starring Louis Glaum, resulted in front page publicity in Lawrence, Mass., papers and led the manager of the Rialto theatre to abandon his proposed exploitation campaign.

Penn Import to Handle Hallmark Pictures

Through a contract recently consummated, the Penn Import and Export Company will handle the entire foreign distribution Hallmark Picture Corporation's product. The contract was signed last week by Frank G. Hall, representing Hallmark, and Adolph Penn for Penn Imports, and covers all of the Hallmark projects for the next twelve months.

A number of subjects which have been released in the United States are ready for distribution in England, on the Continent and in the Far East. Included in this are "The Phantom Honeymoon" and "Wits vs Wits" with Marguerite Marsh; "The Heart of a Gypsy" with Florence Billings; "High Speed" with Gladys Hulette; "The Veiled Marriage" with Anna Lehr; "What Children Will Do" with Edith Stockton; "Parted Curtains" with Henry Walthall and Mary Alden; "The Discarded Woman" and "The Common Sin" with Grace Darling. Several serials are now in preparation.

'The Black Sheep" Is Being Picturized

The "Black Sheep" by Will Payne, that ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and published in book form under the title of "The Scarred Chin," is being produced as a special feature by the Ore-Col Film Corporation at the Enwood Studio, Denver, Colorado. No expense is being spared to make it one of the year's big successes under the direction of John B. O'Brien with a well balanced cast.

Arrow Indian Picture Ready to Distribute

A five-reel special production, is announced by the Arrow Film Corporation. This is an all-Indian production titled "Before the White Man Came." The picture was made entirely by the Crow Indians of the Crow reservation in Montana. Not a single white man is seen in the entire picture. The attraction is now ready for distribution.

George Tucker Signs Contract

Suit with Mayflower Definitely Settled with Signing

BENJAMIN A. PRAGER, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, this week received George Loane Tucker's signed contract, definitely and satisfactorily closing the Tucker-Mayflower litigation which has been pending for almost a year. Mr. Prager expressed himself as gratified that an amicable settlement has been reached, a sentiment echoed by the entire industry.

Immediately upon affixing his signature to the new contract, Tucker resumed the cutting and titling of "Ladies Must Live," his second independent production to be presented by Mayflower. Actual filming of the Tucker production was completed some time ago at the Brunton Studios. According to the terms of the contract, the producer of the sensational film success, "The Miracle Man," will make four more specials to be presented by Mayflower.

In commenting upon the Tucker settlement, Mr. Prager stated that Mayflower will place at the director's disposal the resources of its organization and lend him all possible support and co-operation. "It is Mayflower's aim to help Mr. Tucker in every way possible, to achieve in his forthcoming productions the same high standard of artistry that made 'The Miracle Man,' the greatest film sensation of the past decade. We believe that he can more than duplicate this achievement, and we will leave no stone unturned in our efforts to foster his success.

"In characterizing Mr. Tucker as one of the screen's master directors we are merely reflecting the opinion of the motion picture industry, the press and the public. We welcome Mr. Tucker's return to the studio, for he has and will continue to contribute much to the artistic development of the photoplay."

Film experts who have seen "Ladies Must Live" in the rough, are said to agree that the noted director has produced another epoch-making feature. In many quarters, it is predicted that the new Tucker special is destined to surpass in box-office strength and popular appeal its notable predecessor. The story, it is said, transcends in power and emotional intensity "The Miracle Man," while Tucker's handling again reflects the brilliant, penetrating mind and technical skill that found expression in his great photoplay classic.

The cast of "Ladies Must Live" includes many of the screen's foremost players, the principal feminine role is played by Betty Compson, who leaped to stardom overnight by virtue of her performance in "The Miracle Man." As the painted grizette of New York's underworld who found her soul in the crucible of Faith, Miss Compson startled the film world by the consummate skill and artistry of her performance. In "Ladies Must Live," the talented artist is entrusted with a role equally rich in opportunities for dramatic expression.

International Film Moves

Executive Offices and Other Departments Will Be Centered in Studio

IN order to bring about closer co-ordination between the production and business departments, International Film Service Co., Inc., has moved its executive offices and all other departments to its main studio on Second avenue at 127th street. This action has been found necessary, according to Vice President Henry M. Hobart, because of the rapid expansion of the company. Plans for the future call for increased activity on an unprecedented scale. The new studio building of International occupies an entire city block.

"Success can be had only by co-operation and coordination of effort," said Mr. Hobart, "and the reason for centering our entire personnel under one roof is because we feel that in that way we will obtain better understanding between the different departments of the organization which will have, naturally, a favorable effect upon our production. Under the new system each department can keep in close touch with the other departments without waste of time and effort. Our plans for the coming year are very ambitious and we believe that by concentrating our various departments at the studio we strengthen our organization by a considerable degree."

International Film Service has occupied the entire sixteenth floor at 729 Seventh avenue, for the past three years. These quarters have contained the executive department, the auditor's department, the sales department, the contract department, the publicity and advertising department, the cartoon department where the animated cartoons were made, and the news reel department. Under the new plan these departments are moved up to the studio with the exception of the news reel department which takes up headquarters at 238 William street in the heart of newspaper row so as to be in closer touch with the news of the day.

Lowell Made Special Foreign Agent

"Literary Dept." for Pathe

Mary Edith Butler-Curtis Dunham Comprise New Publicity Extension

AN innovation in motion picture publicity work has been initiated by Pathe Exchange, Inc., with the formation of a "literary department" as an adjunct to its publicity force. Mary Edith Butler and Curtis Dunham, well known in the newspaper and magazine syndicate field, have been added to the Pathe publicity staff and at present comprise the "literary department."

An insistent demand from newspapers and magazines throughout the country for a grade of publicity suitable for actual syndicating led to the organization by Pathe of its "literary department." One syndicate alone has placed with Pathe an order amounting to 180,000 words.

Mary Edith Butler, new special writer for Pathe, has been engaged in newspaper, magazine and book work for about eight years. Her experience in the writing game has been unusually varied. It ranges from campaign work and political articles on the practical side, humorous and straight feature stories in the newspapers and magazine field, to vers libre—and the production of wild-west fiction and romance in the realm allied to the literary.

Curtis Dunham was for twenty-one years associated with the Hearst newspapers as reporter, correspondent, music and dramatic critic, and special writer for the Sunday sections. During this time he published half a dozen volumes of fiction with Houghton Mifflin Co., Bobbs-Merrill, R. J. Fenno and Co., and Dick and Fitzgerald. Included in this series was "The Casino Girl in London;" "Two in a Zoo;" "The Golden Goblin;" "A Legend of St. Patrick at Tara;" and "Gambling with Galatea." He is author of the English metrical versions of the war poems of Edmond Rostand. He has produced several short plays and wrote and produced a motion picture of his own.

Mayer Purchases "The Drums of Jeopardy"

Louis B. Mayer, producer of Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin First National attractions, has purchased the world's motion-picture rights of Harold MacGrath's great Saturday Evening Post story, "The Drums of Jeopardy." It was not announced for which of his stars the story was secured. The success of "The Yellow Typhoon," which was also written by Mr. MacGrath, prompted Mr. Mayer to secure this latest offering of Mr. MacGrath.

To Take Scenes in Frisco's Chinatown

Chester Bennett will take his company, headed by Earle Williams, from Hollywood to San Francisco this week to spend two weeks in obtaining colorful Chinatown scenes and in filming submarine incidents in the bay. The story is "The Purple Cipher," announced by Albert E. Smith as the next Williams release. It is taken from a popular magazine novel.

Special Service on

Georges Carpentier in "The Wonder Man"

TO the exhibitor that will play "The Wonder Man," we would recommend two exploitation angles which we feel should receive the greater measure of his selling force; first, the star as a personage of international prominence; and secondly, those scenes that set him off in his contrasting roles as a gentleman and a pugilist. The second suggestion needs a word of explanation. "The Wonder Man" proves conclusively that a clever prize-fighter can at the same time be a perfect gentleman, not only in appearance but in manners as well. This fact is somewhat opposed to the regular notion of what a "pug" ordinarily is. That this element is of supreme exploitation value in selling this picture to the public we will point out later. For the present, we would advise that the exhibitor in his desplay emphasize those scenes that play the star up in his "ring togs" and his dress-suit as well. Consequently, let the keynote of your exploitation for "The Wonder Man" be—Carpentier a figure famous on two continents, and Carpentier the gentleman-pugilist.

That the picture is pleasing; that Carpentier shows a surprising screen personality and gives a genuinely creditable performance; that the production is really one of the big ones released this season; and that the cast represents a carefully selected line-up, including Faire Binney, sister to the better-known Constance Binney, star of "39 East"—all are of comparatively small consequence to the patronage that you will bring into your house by means of your exploitation campaign. Curiosity to see the star—this figure well known to Europe and America—to watch him work in the gymnasium and the ring and thus secure a general idea of his much-discussed physique and boxing prowess—these are the dominant factors that will serve to attract your audiences, especially the male contingent. For the men, Carpentier's reputation as a clever ring-master and his standing as a war "vet" who saw service under fire will possess an inherent appeal, and provided you play up these two facts strong enough in connection with your exploitation of the star the male complement of your patrons will be well provided for. But how to get the ladies. That is the main problem.

The idea of prize-fighting is repulsive to the average feminine mind. It smacks of brutality, of bettle-browed "beef" and of low ideals. The ring-encounter in the woman's mind takes on the aspect of a contest where brute-force alone matters; where intellect has no part to play; where all the finer feelings and nobler sentiments of man's character must be discarded and his primitive instincts depended upon to prove his superiority over his opponent. These are the prejudices that you must seek to overcome in exploiting "The Wonder Man." First of all, make it plain to your clientele that this picture is not one where a professional "bruiser" is given the opportunity to fight his way through several reels of blood and thunder. There is no blood; there is no thunder. There are a couple of ring-encounters in which Carpentier figures as the member of a fashionable club, but these serve only to demonstrate Carpentier's slim graceful build, his ability, even temper, quick eye and rapid-calculating mind. In other words (and this is the point to drive home), Carpentier's ring-appearance in this picture is only a specimen of perfect "team-work" between the mental faculties and the physical make-up of a clean-cut, self-confident and scientifically clever young fellow.

Moreover, let the ladies know that the star's role in the roped circle is only a small part of the action in the production, comparatively. For the greater part of the footage, Carpentier is playing the part of an agent for the French government—the resident of a fashionable hotel where he "hobs-nobs" with the gentility in evening dress, a lion with the ladies and a gentleman to the tips of his fingers. In the garb and part of a French gentleman he moves about in the most gorgeous of settings, for the greater part of the action, lending his attractive personality and winning smile to the appeal of the story itself. So, as far as the ladies are concerned, be sure to play Carpentier up as the gentleman of France, a World-War hero, who moves and plays his part as gracefully in the ball-room as he does in the prize-ring.

In the foregoing we have tried to indicate what we feel should be the key-notes of your exploitation campaign. Now for a few suggestions as to individual stunts that can be put over in behalf of "The Wonder Man."

Educators See Special at Hotel Astor

AN unusual tribute was paid to Robertson-Cole's special during its showing last week at the Hotel Astor. In the midst of an unusually successful run of "The Wonder Man" in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor, the Society Hoi Scholastikoi, composed of the principals of the New York City High Schools, bought out the Grand Ball Room for Thursday evening, June 3, and fifteen hundred educators and others of prominence saw the Carpentier picture on that evening, it is stated.

Word-of-mouth praise of the picture reached the New York High School principals at a time when they were planning their banquet to celebrate an increase of salaries in Greater New York. It was only after much difficulty in arranging for a cancellation of the hundreds of seats sold in advance for Thursday evening that the educators arranged with the Legion, at considerable expense, it is said, for a special showing for them and their guests. Among those invited to the Thursday evening showing were Governer Smith, Mayor Hylan, members of Congress from New York City, and members of the Assembly.

The opportunity for window displays in stores that specialize in sporting goods is an excellent one. Robertson-Cole has a liberal stock of stills showing the star in gymnasium togs at various poses, attitude of defense, punching the bag, getting a rub-down, etc. These stills mounted as a series and placed on display in conjunction with almost any sort of sport-supplies in a window are sure to get attention. A touch of color in the stills adds to the effect. Besides the stills of the star, Robertson-Cole is also carrying a line of photographs of just such window displays. Send for them and give them to the shops you tie-up with. They will serve as basic suggestions for the window-dresser.

While the atmosphere of the display window of a sporting-shop is most appropriate for the presentation of Carpentier's photo in ring-togs, punching the bag, etc., clothing stores can also be effectively tied-up with the campaign in the way of installing photographs (enlarged or small-sized) of the star in top-hat and evening suit in the shop-windows. The Robertson-Cole Co. has a supply of these stills in various sizes. This particular stunt was tried by the Robertson-Cole Co. with various Broadway haberdashers and attracted much favorable notice. If the frames of the stills be draped with the American and French colors, the effect will be heightened.

In the matter of lobby and interior decorations, the international phase of the picture—loaned to it by the nationality of the star—should not be overlooked. Flags of the allies, with the Stars and Stripes and the French tri-colors in preponderance, could be very attractively arranged in various designs. Fac-similes of the Military Medal and the Croix de Guerre—the two decorations worn by the star—might also be distributed in various parts of your lobby display with a word or two about their significance, should your audience be of a character that would be interested in these details.

The New York showing prior to the week's run at the Strand theatre which began Sunday of this week, was given under the auspices of the American Legion. It has been a great success and indicates what can be done in co-operating with a Post or Posts of your American Legion. To members of the Legion, Carpentier is more than a clever boxer. He is a soldier with a record for bravery and service in France which incites their greatest admiration. Some of your ex-doughboys may have seen him personally and be enthusiastic boosters for your showing. At any rate, do not neglect the American Legion when you play the picture. Any benefit arrangement or tie-up you may effect will be beneficial in more ways than one.

"The Wonder Man" is a picture to be advertised in a big way. As a working basis for your ad display we do not think there is anything better than the 24 sheet-poster gotten out by the producers. It plays up a big head-cut of Carpentier, is attractive in many ways and is a "flash" that has been seldom equaled, especially for any motion-picture in which a pugilist has been starred. Bill the attraction as extravagantly as you like from the star and boxing angles, with Miss Binney mentioned as a coming screen ingenue, and the story relagated to the smaller end of the selling talk. Get Georges Carpentier's name into big type with explanatory sentences as to who he is and what he has done. Enlist the aid of the sporting-editor in putting over some feature-stories about Carpentier and his record for agility, speed of delivery, cool temperament, his clean, scientific boxing, etc., being careful to avoid anything that might suggest the "brute-force" and lack of mentality so commonly associated with the professional "pug."

Basic story for press notice or program reader:

Georges Carpentier, the French World War hero and champion heavy-weight boxer of Europe, will be seen in "The Wonder Man" at the ——— theatre on ——— and ——— of next week. "The Wonder Man," while giving the star an opportunity to demonstrate his agility, grace of action, speed and boxing science in the roped-circle and the gymnasium, is predominantly a society picture, presenting the French celebrity in the role of a gentleman who moves about amid gorgeous settings in the unfolding of an interesting story. "The Wonder Man" is not a "blood and thunder picture" in which the hero is called upon to smash his way through five-reels by force of brute-strength and professional "bruiser tactics." There is no blood in this picture, and there is no thunder. Instead you will find a gentleman playing his part in most creditable fashion and lending to an interesting story the support of a winning smile and remarkably attractive personality.

The supporting cast, led by Faire Binney, sister of the better-known Constance Binney, represents an array of carefully selected talent. The director, John G. Adolfi, is conceded to have realized in this production his greatest achievement since his direction of "The Cavell Case" with Julia Arthur as the star. To this appeal of strong cast and clever direction is added the beauty of rare and gorgeous settings in which colorful surroundings and beautiful gowns vie for supremacy. And with it all runs a story of romance and mystery which is sure to keep your interest fully aroused from start to finish. So draw a circle around the dates of ——— and ——— and visit the ——— theatre to view a star, famous on two continents, supported by a cast of unusual quality in a story which under capable direction and with the help of beautiful settings is bound to give you an afternoon or evening of rare entertainment.

SYNOPSIS OF "THE WONDER MAN"

IN "The Wonder Man," Georges Carpentier is given the part of Henri D'Alour, residing at a fashionable Washington hotel. His youthful appearance, gentlemanly bearing and, above all, his air of mystery excite much comment and attract the attention of the feminine complement among the younger set. He falls in love with Dorothy Stoner, daughter of a prominent business-man, who holds important contracts for war supplies from the French government. Shortly after D'Alour's arrival on the scene, Mr. Stoner's secretary is found murdered in his office and the Stoner safe rifled. The attempted robbery of the French war contracts seems to have been the motive for the crime. Who committed the murder?

Another issue also is involved. Alan Gardiner, champion athlete of the fashionable club to which D'Alour has received entré, is also in love with Dorothy Stoner. During a gymnasium session Gardiner easily outpoints D'Alour in an informal boxing bout. Later Gardiner angers Dorothy by his forced demonstrations of affection. D'Alour arrives in time to see Dorothy's rebuff of his rival. She requests D'Alour to thrash Gardiner for his insulting conduct. D'Alour's failure to do so at once is interpreted by the young lady as a confession of his cowardice, and she leaves him in scorn.

Meanwhile, evidences of a compelling kind point to Henry D'Alour, the man of mystery, as the murderer of Mr. Stoner's secretary. Shunned by the girl he loves and suspected by his associates as the one responsible for the crime in Stoner's office, D'Alour sets about to reestablish himself in the good graces of his sweetheart and to detect the true assailant. After an intensive course of training, he meets Gardiner in the big ring-scene of the picture and, spurred to supreme efforts by the arrival at the last moment of an encouraging note from Dorothy, he turns a losing fight into victory. Aided by one of Stoner's servants, D'Alour lays out a plan of campaign against the secret forces that are working for the possession of the coveted French contracts. How he eventually exposes them and captures the true culprits responsible for the murder is told in the final scenes of the picture. The mystery of D'Alour's identity is also cleared up when he is revealed in the closing moments as an agent of the French secret-service system.

Pioneer Will Release Series of Comedies

The Pioneer film exitorial department which has just completed its work on "What Women Want" with Louise Huff, is now busily engaged in preparing the forthcoming series of the two-reel comedies, which are to be released within the next month or so.

These comedies deal with the humorous exploits of "A Modern Pecks Bad Boy." They will be released at intervals of two weeks. The leading part is played by Frank McGlynn, Jr., the son of Frank McGlynn, who is now appearing in the title role of "Abraham Lincoln," in New York.

Matty Roubert Pictures to Be Shipped Soon

"Circus Day" and "She's a Vamp" are the titles selected for the first two Reelcraft pictures, starring Matty Roubert, the 12-year-old "leading man." Sample prints of these two pictures will be in the hands of all Reelcraft exchanges shortly for screening for exhibitors. The pictures are to be but two reels each and released one a month at the Reelcraft and allied exchanges throughout the United States.

A national advertising campaign on this series has already started in the trade papers, and Reelcraft plans to carry a separate advertising campaign for each release.

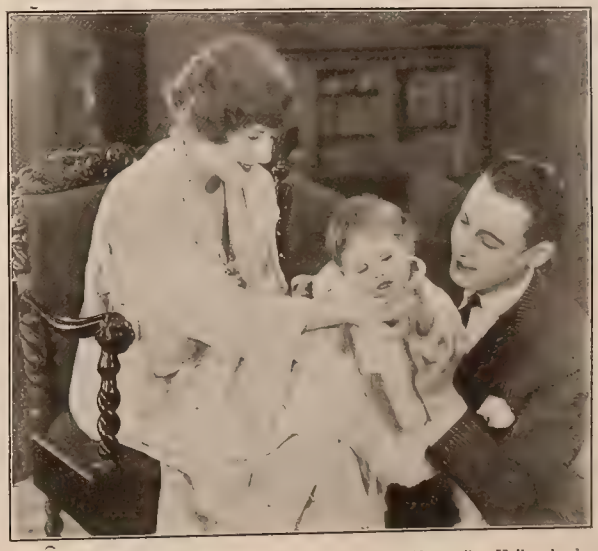
Hallmark Has King Picture

"The Discarded Woman" Scheduled for Early Release by F. G. Hall

"THE DISCARDED WOMAN," a Burton King production in six reels, is announced as the June 15 release on the Hallmark Picture Corporation's program by Frank G. Hall, its president. The picture is in six reels and was produced under the personal direction of Mr. King whose last special production was "The Lost Battalion."



Grace Darling and Rod La Rocque are the featured players with a supporting cast including E. J. Radcliffe, W. D. Corbett, Madelene Clare and James Cooley. Miss Darling recently completed the starring role in a Robert W. Chambers novel and Mr. La Rocque is one of the screen's best known leading men, his latest appearance being opposite Mary Miles Minter in the screen version of Israel Zangwill's novel, "Nurse Majorie."

"The Discarded Woman" is the story of an unhappy marriage and of a wife who would deceive her husband to safeguard the home but sacrificed all rather than betray him.

The locale takes in the East and West giving rise to strong dramatic moments and action. The Western dance hall and the Eastern high life are presented with a "true-to-life" faithfulness that makes the picture, according to pre-reviewers, ideal entertainment. This King production is Hallmark's early summer special and will be followed in July by the second of King's, a screen version of an original story by Willard Mack.

Hemmer Finds Location in New Jersey

Edward Hemmer, president of the Hemmer Superior Productions, reports that he had considerable difficulty in finding the correct exterior for the picture he is now making. A sufficiently dilapidated farmhouse was finally discovered in New Jersey.

"Isle of Destiny" Can Be Well Exploited

Unusual exploitation possibilities as well as strong entertainment values are said to be features of Character Pictures Corporation's special production that has just been completed, "The Isle of Destiny." Realizing the importance of exploitation, special consideration was given, according to the producer, to all elements entering into the making of the production that would tend to give it the best of exploitation possibilities.

Cannibals play an important part in the picture and much time was given to get the correct cannibal atmosphere. One of the freak "shots" is a scene in which it is estimated that at one time 50,000 fiddle crabs are in evidence. In trying to get scenes and locations that were different, the company had great difficulties and only secured them at the expense of much time and money.

Christie Studio to the Fore in News Reels

The Motion Picture Magazine Screen Supplement has photographed a scene at the Christie studios showing prominent members of the Bankers' Association taking part with Al Christie, Bobby Vernon and Dorothy Devore in a comedy.

Screen Snap Shots, another novelty reel, shows scenes of Fay Tincher, Christie star, at the studio and at home. It will also show in one edition a back-stage view of putting on a special Christie comedy with the Christie Follies girls.

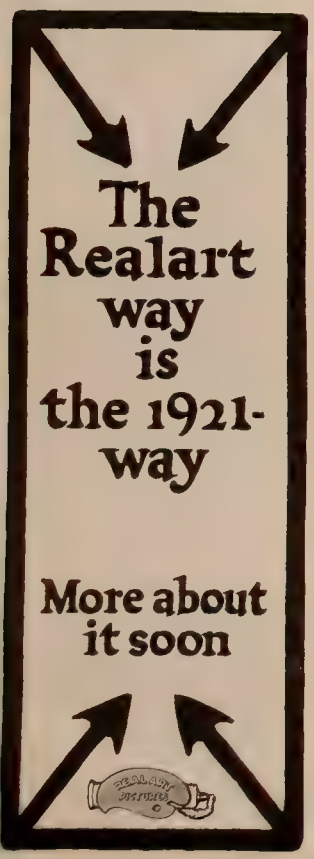
The Pathe Weekly has another view of the Christie studios, with Dr. Neal Dodd addressing players in his campaign for a Motion-Picture Church in Hollywood.

Booklet Helps Boost Reelcraft Pictures

Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has issued an attractive booklet of twenty-four pages, entitled "Aladdin's Lamp Realized." In it are set forth interesting statistics giving the number of theatres in the United States and their estimated daily attendance, as well as the investments in the industry. It also contains, under the heading "Pictures Owned or Distributed Generally or Sectionally," a complete list of all Reelcraft subjects. The booklet is attractively gotten up and contains pictures of Reelcraft laugh makers.

Annette Kellerman's Premier in West

"What Women Love," starring Annette Kellerman, was given its initial showing at Santa Anna, California, on June 1st. The premiere has been the source of great satisfaction to Sol Lesser and the members of his organization. The new picture does not emphasize her aquatic skill, but presents her in the comedy field as an American girl of the out-door, athletic type. George Reban is also reported as putting the finishing touches on his "One Man in a Million."



Three scenes from "The Isle of Destiny," showing Paul Gilmore, Hazel Hudson and Frank Williams at various moments in the action of this Character Pictures production

"An Overall Hero" Is Chester Comedy

"An Overall Hero" is announced by Educational Films Corporation as the second of the Chester Comedies. Work on the production has just been completed at the C. L. Chester studios in Los Angeles and the prints are now on their way to New York.

"Torchy Comes Through" has been selected as the name of the second "Torchy" comedy starring Johnny Hines, taking the place of the working title, "A Knight for a Night."

Reelcraft for Independents

Deals Directly With Twenty-five Exchanges Throughout the Country

IN response to the present popular query from the Exhibitors "Where Do You Stand?" comes the announcement from the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation declaring for the independent exhibitor and the independent exchange.

Reelcraft is dealing directly with more than twenty-five Independent Exchanges throughout the United States at the present time, and attributes a big measure of the present success of Reelcraft to the close co-operation maintained by this Independent distributing organization. There is no desire to interfere in any manner with those independents selling Reelcraft releases, each independent takes those releases he wants for his territory, and permits Reelcraft to sell those he cannot place among his releases to any other independent exchange in the territory.

That the present plan is an ideal one is said to be proven by the cordial and successful relations established between Reelcraft and the R. D. Marson Attractions Company of Boston; the Arrow Film Company of Denver; the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati; The Dooley Exchanges of Syracuse and Buffalo; the Consolidated Film Company of Los Angeles and San Francisco; the Greater Features of Seattle; the R. D. Lewis Film Company of Dallas, San Antonio and Little Rock; the Supreme Photoplay Company of Denver; the E. & H. Distributing Company of Atlanta; the S. & S. Film Supply Company of Pittsburg; the United Film Company of St. Louis; the Magnet Film Company of Davenport and Omaha; the First National Film Company of Kansas City; the Arrow Film Company of Boston; the Exhibitors Exchange of Washington; and the Alterbran Film Company of Knoxville.

Chatkin on Way to Coast

Secretary of Kohn Productions Returns After New York Meeting

DAVID J. CHATKIN, secretary of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, who has been in New York for the past week attending the independent producers convention, has just left for the coast. Before leaving New York Mr. Chatkin was asked about the market for short subjects, in which the Kohn Productions specialize.

He expressed himself as very optimistic regarding the future for two-reel and single reel subjects. "I believe," said Chatkin, "that the coming fall and winter will mark the greatest point in the history of the short reel pictures. Time, effort and money are being put into these pictures on a scale never anticipated. All the energy that is put into producing a five-reel production is now concentrated in the making of two-reelers. Short subjects were formerly program fillers. They were flashed on the screen without main titles and swept off in the same manner.

"Times are different now. The finest houses in the country are actually featuring the two-reelers. They appear in electric lights along with the big features on the theatre signs. As a result managers are scouring the market for really good short subjects."

While in New York Mr. Chatkin arranged for the sale of all Marion H. Kohn Productions to the Federated Film exchanges.

Radin Subjects Bought by Exhibitors Film

The Exhibitors Film Company of Pittsburg has purchased the rights from Radin Pictures on the "Zip Comedies," featuring Chris Rub and Florence E. Turner, and the two-part series of "Real Star Dramas," for the Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory.

Special Representative Named by Inter-Ocean

Carlos Salazer of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation sales staff has been selected by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales, as the emissary who will spread the gospel of American films and motion picture accessory products for Inter-Ocean Film Corporation throughout Central America and the West Indies, according to an announcement made during the week from the New York offices of the company.

The decision to dispatch a representative into these undeveloped regions is the culmination of intensive investigation and research work, and is in line with Inter-Ocean's recently announced policy of opening up wider avenues of distribution for the American manufacturer.

England Interested in May Yohe's Serial

Kosmik Films, Inc., reports that great interest is being manifested in England, Canada and India regarding the production of the Hope Diamond Mystery serial written by May Yohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope. Several offers for the foreign rights to the serial from the above named countries have been received.

Cartoonist's Hand Is Insured for $75,000

Joseph L. Friedman is taking no chances whatsoever on anything arising that will slow up the production of his Gump cartoons. To protect his investment in this new enterprise, Mr. Friedman has insured the right hand of Sidney Smith, cartoonist of the Chicago Tribune and creator of Andy and Minn. The amount the policy calls for is $75,000.

Insurance men of Chicago say that the policy entered into is one of the most peculiar policies ever issued, in case of complete disability to Mr. Smith's right hand, the full amount of the policy will be paid and each finger is separately insured in varying amounts. In addition to the hand insurance a large life policy has been taken out to cover any possibility of accident to Mr. Smith which would mean the slowing up of the production of the Gump Cartoon.

Exhibitors Said to be Seizing Pictures

With the idea that they can force somebody to make good for the losses they have sustained through the failure of United Theatres, a number of exhibitors are said to have seized United pictures received from the Hallmark Exchanges, formerly operated by United. They have held these, it is alleged, without regard for the bookings of other theatres which are scheduled to play the same features.

Hallmark has issued a statement calling attention to the fact that such seizure is illegal and that the United States District Court, which appointed the receiver, will not permit such taking of property in the possession of the court. The exhibitors, it is said, will be held responsible.

Lesser Will Not Make Underwater Picture

Sol Lesser wishes to deny any reports which have been circulating to the effect that he would star Annette Kellerman in a sensational underwater serial. Mr. Lesser is now busily engaged in having his staff put the finishing touches to the latest Annette Kellerman comedy drama "What Women Love," on which he will soon announce distribution policy.

Frank Losee Will Support Farrar

Well Known Actor is Added to Cast of "Riddle: Woman"

WITH the engagement of Frank Losee for an important part in support of Geraldine Farrar in her first Associated Exhibitors Production, "The Riddle: Woman" to be produced by Paths, Director Edward Jose made rapid progress during the last week in the filming of the great stage play. The addition of Mr. Losee to the cast, gives the production a trio of excellent players in support of the star. Adele Blood and Montagu Love are other members of the triumverate, which, with Miss Farrar is expected to make "The Riddle: Woman" a great contribution to the silent drama.

Mr. Losee is a veteran of stage and screen, and his work is known to motion picture enthusiasts throughout the land. For twenty-five years he appeared in many of the great stage plays, under the direction of Belasco, Frohman, Klaw & Erlanger, the Shuberts and John Cort. For three years the veteran appeared in Famous Players productions, numbered among which were "La Rosca," "The Spider," "Helen of the North" and "Paid in Full."

The Egyptian set upon which Mr. Jose is now engaged in filming the early scenes of "The Riddle: Woman," is said to be one of the most pretentious ever built for a motion picture.

In many respects, the production of the initial Associated Exhibitors production marks a distinct era in motion pictures according to an announcement. The Exhibitors, being purely an exhibitors-owned organization, it is to be assumed its members know just what the public wants in the way of entertainment. Director Jose, before advancing the work on the great stage play, in which Bertha Kalisch starred for two years, consulted with the Board of Directors. He obtained the individual views on just how the picture should be presented, and in that wise gained opinions that will be of vast assistance to him during the production period.

Miss Farrar has entered upon her work with her characteristic vigor. The strength of the characterization she is drawing in "The Riddle: Woman" is probably greater than any she has ever portrayed for the screen.

Director Jose is finding the old Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle an ideal place for the filming of the production. The stage is sufficiently large to permit the erection of two sets at the same time, so there need be no delay while waiting for the building of interiors. Mr. Jose's knowledge of Miss Farrar's capabilities, is another factor in the smooth, rapid progress being made with "The Riddle [illegible]

The new distributing [illegible] departure for the Christie firm inasmuch as Christie Comedies since their inception four years ago, have been handled by leading independent exchanges for the [illegible] tories of the United States and Canada. However among the exchanges which previously handled the product there were five key cities were First National exchanges, these being at New York, Buffalo, Omaha, Vancouver and Philadelphia.

The Christie company is arranging production of two-reel comedies so that featured players may be used alternately. It is expected that Fay Tincher and others will appear in the second release followed by Bobby Vernon, Eddie Barry, Harry Gribbon (a new comedian for Christie who has recently been acquired) and other featured people.

Al Christie promises the same high type of light comedy by which he has been made famous and which has established a unique standard.

Independent Field Is Strong

THAT "The Independent Exhibitor, exchangeman and distributor are now individuals of prominence in the picture art" and that "the independent field was never in a better state of progressiveness and stability," are two phrases containing the essence of a statement made by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, just before he left New York earlier in the week for the Cleveland convention.

Mr. Shallenberger is head of one of the largest independent distributing organizations in the film industry and has the authority to speak on subjects vital to the independent film man. He has offered the following statement to the trade press for publication: "I have a two-fold purpose in attending the exhibitors' convention in Cleveland. One is to watch the actual convention proceedings and the other one, the major reason, to meet all the independent exhibitors and exchangemen that attend. This convention comes at a time when the independent man is reaping the deserved harvest of his straightforward businesslike policies. The independent exhibitor, exchangeman and distributor are new individuals of prominence in the picture art. By that I mean, they are considered in a more serious manner than ever before.

"While the larger producing-distributing organizations have been progressing and carrying on an internal war, the independent organizations have been coming closer together for the purpose of bettering their condition."

In discussing the condition of the independent field Mr. Shallenberger pointed out in detail the stability of the organizations themselves. He said, "As proof of the stability of the independent field I point to the men in the independent organizations. They are among the most capable in the entire industry and in many cases more so. They are level-headed individuals imbued with the earnest desire to provide the public with real screen drama of high character.

"The independent field was never in a better state of progressiveness or stability. At least twenty to thirty buyers visit our office here each week, seeking as it were, the highest class of attractions. They are not seeking ordinary pictures—pictures which go over because of a startling title or a lurid appeal, but pictures that contain clean dramatic action or wholesome humor."

Mr. Shallenberger, Mr. Dana and Mr. Hubenstein expected to go to Chicago after the Cleveland convention, where they will hold a special session with other independent executives in that territory.

Washburn Picture Last of Kremer Revivals

With "Skinner's Dress Suit" Victor Kremer Film Features close their "star revivals." This is chiefly due to the lack of "Big Bets" among reissues. In other words the market in that branch at this time offers no attraction big enough to suit Mr. Kremer.

Most extensive new press matter has been prepared, the novel compo-board "Dress-Suit-Stand" especially designed for the purpose being most in demand. Judging from the manner Skinner's Dress Suit" is booking where the feature has been released, Mr. Kremer is sanguine that "Skinner's Dress Suit" will surpass all expectations. Simultaneous with the exit of "Revivals" Victor Kremer makes his debut as producer and distributor of New Independent Big Feature Attractions

To Executives and Advertising Managers:

I am bringing before you, somewhat bluntly, the following facts because they seem worthy of your very serious consideration:

The subscription circulation of the NEWS, issue of May 29th, was guaranteed, every single subscription.

10,327

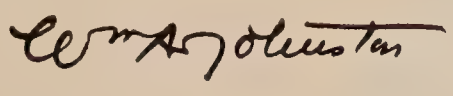
Subscription circulation is the only circulation test. If a paper includes newsstand circulation in its circulation figures you can subtract just that amount.

If, therefore, any other paper is lower in subscription circulation by 20% or 30% or 50% your advertising in that paper, compared with the "NEWS," is just 20% or 30% or 50% less effective.

If, furthermore, a paper has not selected its subscriptions and confined them strictly to trade prospects (as the NEWS has, returning over a thousand non-trade subscriptions), then you can subtract another 10%, at least, from the effectiveness of your advertising.

Do you think it fair to yourself, or fair to us, then, to put all papers in this field upon the same basis of advertising effectiveness—by giving to each the same amount of copy either by duplication or alternation?



You would not expect pictures to be rented on such a basis.

We are not asking you a higher advertising rate—higher by 20% or 30% or 50%, because of our greater circulation.

We simply ask that, in your own business interest, you place your advertising upon a basis pro rata with circulation quantity and quality——And to arrive at this, that you ask all trade papers for an analysis of circulation—by subscriptions.

Sincerely,

P. S.—An A. B. C. audit report will shortly verify and analyze the above figures

News Notes from the West Coast

UNIVERSAL

ROLLIN STURGEON has everything in readiness for the filming of the first Carmel Myers picture, and work on this was started this week immediately following the arrival of Miss Myers from the east. The cast selected for this first starring vehicle of Miss Myers' new series has Thomas Holding, George B. Williams, Arthur Clayton, William Bainbridge, and a number of others including Bess Ivans and Viola Lind.

Another new production upon which filming was commenced is that of "Hitchin' Posts," which will be directed by Jack Ford with a cast that has Frank Mayo, Beatrice Burnham, and Dagmar Gadowsky in the featured roles.

Jacques Jaccard has begun the filming of the first five-reel Canadian northwest mounted police feature titled, "Under Northern Lights." This was written by Jaccard assisted by Kay Harrison, and has a large troup of western players headed by Leonard Clapham and Virginia Fair.

Work of filming the next Priscilla Dean story will be started in a day or two. The continuity for this has been prepared for several days, and Director Tod Browning has been working with the casting department in the selection of players. Up to this time Lon Chaney, Wheeler Oakman Ralph Lewis and E. F. Warren have been engaged to play the leading roles.

The Universal scenario department is working with Eric Von Stroheim in the preparation of story and script for his next production. Von Stroheim has just returned from spending six weeks in New York where he witnessed the initial presentation of his most recent production, "The Devil's Pass-Key."

Other various subjects in the making are "Fightin' Job," directed by Reeves Eason with Harry Carey as star; "Mirama," directed by Norman Dawn with Edith Roberts, and the Lyons and Moran farce comedy "La La Lucille." The latter subject has an exceptionally big cast, the principals in addition to Eddie and Lee are Ann Cornwall, Gladys Walton, Fred Gamble, Henry Meyers, Frank Earle, Charles McHugh, Rose Gore, Arthur Thallaso, Dorothy Wolbert, Sam Apple, and a number of others.

The Universal is preparing for the filming of another serial which will be "The Diamond Master," adapted from the story of the same name by Jacques Futrelle. George Lyper has been retained to prepare the scenario for this, and Eileen Sedgwick and James B. Warner will be the principals.

Other serials in the making are "The Moon Riders," directed by Albert Russell and starring Art Acord, and "The Lightning Eye," directed by Robert Hill and featuring Elmo Lincoln.

Three short western subjects are in the making, "Hoot" Gibson is playing in "Lyin'," with Dorothy Wood playing opposite; Mack Wright is directing "Our Turn to Lose," and George Webster is at work on "The Sheriff of Wompus County," with a cast headed by James Warner and Flora Braidwood.

F. P.-LASKY

CECIL B. DeMille is now doing the preparatory work on his next production which will be started the latter part of June, and a significant feature concerning this is that a number of new people are being engaged to play in this subject. Recent DeMille productions have had Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley in leading roles, but as Miss Hawley and Miss Daniels are to be starred for Realart, and Miss Swanson is to retire from the screen temporarily, Mr. DeMille has found it necessary to find a new leading woman for his productions.

It has been definitely decided that Ethel Clayton is to make but one more picture for Paramount-Artcraft at the West Coast studios. This is "Rosanne Ozanne" now in the making under the direction of Tom Forman from script written by Mary H. O'Connor. Immediately following the filming of this play Miss Clayton will take a vacation, and will then go to the London Famous Players-Lasky studio for the making of at least two films.

Tom Geraghty has completed the scenario for the "Charm School" to star Wallace Reid, and Director James Cruze will begin the filming of this next week.

Walter Woods is at work on scenario for Roscoe Arbuckle, "The Traveling Salesman," to be directed by Joseph Heneberry; and William DeMille expects to begin the filming of "His Friend and His Wife," within the next week.

The George Melford Company making, "The Jucklins," is working on exterior locations while several large settings are being built at the studio; and the Bryant Washburn unit filming, "Wanted A Blemish," from scenario by Douglas Bronston, is working under the direction of Maurice Campbell at the Morosco Studios.

Under her contract which she renewed for five years with Mr. Lasky, Gloria Swanson will be starred in a number of productions. Last year she made a tremendous hit by her work in "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?" both Cecil B. DeMille productions, and under the new arrangement she will work under the personal supervision of Mr. DeMille, who will select her stories and supervise all details of production. Another feature of the new season will be George Loane Tucker's picture "Ladies Must Live" a Mayflower Production.

Billie Burke will be starred in four pictures next year, according to the terms of her new long-term contract. The first of these, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play, is already in production and will be released late in November. It is announced by Mr. Lasky that the new plays for Miss Burke will be of a somewhat more serious nature than those in which she has appeared in the past. All will be from well known books or plays.

Thomas Meighan, whose work in Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female" and in George Loan Tucker's "The Miracle Man" won him stardom, will be starred in six pictures next season. Five pictures starring Dorothy Dalton are scheduled for release. Miss Dalton, who is now completing "A Winter City Favorite," from a story by Charles Belmont Davis, will next do "Jeanne of the Marshes" from the novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Wallace Reid, who is making "The Charm School," a lively comedy from the novel by Alice Duer Miller, will be seen in seven pictures during the coming season. Ethel Clayton, who is completing "A City Sparrow" by Kate Jordan, also will be starred in seven pictures.

Douglas MacLean, Thomas H. Ince star, is expected further to increase his remarkable popularity through the six pictures which will be released under the Paramount brand next season. MacLean already has completed "Lucid Intervals" and "The Jailbird" and is now at work on "Yancona Yillies" from the Saturday Evening Post story by Herschel S. Hall.

Six pictures starring Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince star, will be released, according to present schedule. These include "The Incubus," "I Wonder If," "Her Husband's Friends" which already have been completed or are in work.

Dorothy Gish will be seen in four new productions, the first of which "Little Miss Rebellion," will be released in September. "The Princess of New York," one of Cosmo Hamilton's stories, probably will be the first picture to be made next season by Violet Heming.

Maurice Tourneur will make two productions for release next season by Famous Players-Lasky. The first of these, "Caleb West," from the story by F. Hopkinson Smith, will be released in November.

With the vast literary reservoir of the Hearst publications to draw upon, the Cosmopolitan Productions are unusually well equipped to provide twelve pictures during the year. Four pictures featuring Bryant Washburn will be released next season. "Burglar Proof," and "A Full House" already have been completed and "Wanted, A Blemish" is now nearing completion.

Two pictures starring Charles Ray, Thomas H. Ince star, will be released during the coming year. They will be "The Village Sleuth" and "An Old Fashioned Boy."

J. D. HAMPTON

UPON completion of the Jesse D. Hampton picture starring Blanche Sweet made under the working title of "Leona Goes a Hunting," permanent title was selected which will be "Object, Matrimony." The film play was adapted from the Edwina Levin story by Geo. H. Plympton and the final editing has been done by K. E. Anderson and after preview at the Hampton studios the film will shortly be shipped to New York. Jesse D. Hampton has selected Mahlon Hamilton to play opposite Blanche Sweet in "That Girl Montana," from the Marah Ellis Ryan story of the same name. Hamilton is at present playing in the Hampton production, "Half a Chance."

Lillian Rich has been added to the "Half a Chance" cast to play the leading feminine role opposite Mahlon Hamilton. This production is being directed by Robert Thornby and will be released as a Robert Thornby production.

BRUNTON

THE initial Betty Compson production made at the Robert Brunton studios under the working title of "The Test" is nearing completion under the direction of Arthur Rosson and has been given the final title of "Prisoners of Love." A new story has been selected as Miss Compson's next starring vehicle and work of filming that will start shortly. Lindsay McKenna who came to the coast from New York where he served as newspaper and magazine writer, to supervise publicity of the Selznick West Coast forces, has been engaged as director of publicity of the Compson company.

The scenario staff of B. B. Hampton productions is now working on the continuity of the William Allen White novel, "A Certain Rich Man," and this script will be ready for filming in the near future.

GOLDWYN

DIRECTOR Frank Lloyd this week made the first scenes for the Leo Dietrichstein play "The Great Lover" and had as one of his audience John McCormack, who was in Los Angeles on a concert tour. The scenes were those of grand opera night at a metropolitan theatre and the noted tenor was invited by Director Lloyd to witness the filming and aid in creating proper atmosphere The complete cast for this production has been selected and in addition to John Sainpolis will consist of Sylvia Breamer, Mme. Rose Dion, Lyonel Belmore, Richard Tucker, Jean Cory, Alice Hollister, John Davison and others.

In addition to Mary Alden who will play the part of Mrs. Hutch in the Will Rogers play "Old Hutch," the cast will include Priscilla Bonner, Tullie Marshall, Nick Coagley, and the Trebeaol children, Eddie Ynes and Jeanette.

A week will be needed for building, setting and preparing for the filming of the next Jack Pickford play "Just Out of College," from the original stage play by George Ade which will be directed by Al Green, and the Mabel Normand subject will be started within a few days. Naomi Childers has gone to New York to work in one production for Goldwyn and Henry Ralston and Andrew Rodson have been cast to play important roles in the Tom Moore production, "Stop Thief."

Basil King, the author, who has been at the Goldwyn plant assisting Director T. Hayes Hunter in editing "Earthbound," left for the East this week with the intention of bringing Mrs. King to the Coast to make Los Angeles their future home.

VITAGRAPH

DIRECTOR Tom Terriss left New York this week after completing the Vitagraph production, "The Girl of the Sky," which is from the Gouverneur Morris story "Trumpet Island." Director Terriss took the film to the Vitagraph studios at Brooklyn where it will be edited by George Randolph Chester. Marguerite DeLaMotte and Wallace MacDonald are leads in this all star production.

Earle Williams, Viola Vale, Allan Forrest, Ernest Shields and other members of Director Chester Bennett's company are at San Francisco filming many shipyard scenes for "The Purple Hieroglyph" and following completion of the work they will go to San Diego to get submarine scenes.

William Duncan will require but two weeks more for the making of the final episode for "The Silent Avenger" serial. This week he directed and played in the fire scenes that destroyed the mammoth street settings built especially for this episode. The "Hidden Danger" serial company which is headed by Joe Ryan and Jean Page is now working on the 7th episode and Antonio Moreno and Pauline Curley under direction of Webster Cullison are busy with the 4th episode of the "Veiled Mystery" serial. Director Jess Robbins has made the fifth of a series of comedies featuring Jimmy Aubrey in which the comedian plays the role of a paper hanger. Production on this was delayed because of injury Aubrey received in making the preceding comedy when he fell about 2 feet from a tree, dislocating his shoulder. Director Robbins will introduce a number of new comedy features in this subject.

General Western Manager W. S. Smith has completed plans for a number of improvements at the Vitagraph plant which include new star dressing rooms and additional stage space and a number of permanent settings. This week Mr. Smith appointed Douglas Dawson casting director for the Western plant. Dawson served as assistant director for several years.

SELIG

COLONEL William N. Selig has three producing organizations at work at his mammoth studios. One unit is making "Kazan," the wolf dog story of Canadian woods by James Oliver Curwood, which is being directed by E. A. Martin, for many years affiliated with the Selig organization. A very remarkable dog was found by Mr. Selig and purchased to play the role in this subject and Jane Novak was engaged to play the part of the girl. William E. Wing, in charge of the Selig scenario department, has written the continuity for this production.

A still from the Universal picture "Alias Miss Dodd," in which Edith Roberts has the leading role Another company is making "In For the Night," a six reel special farce which will introduce many of the Selig Zoo animals in films for the first time. Frederick Sullivan of the Christie organization was borrowed to direct this farce which has Harry Depp in one of the leading roles.

Franklyn Farnum, who has been working at the Selig studio for the past year in the making of twelve two reel Western subjects and fifteen episode serial "Vanishing Trails" by William E. Wing, has renewed his contract and is to make a series of five reel Western, semi-Western and Canadian woods pictures, the first of which will be "Riding the Winds," an original story by Wing. Genevieve Berte will play opposite Farnum in the first subject and others engaged are Otto Ludder, Vester Pegg, Bud Osborne and a number of other well known Western players. Tom S. Nash is manager of the organization. E. G. Linder is cameraman and director will be selected shortly.

FOX

IF William Fox should come to his West Coast Studios he would find every unit save that headed by William Russell at work on new productions. It is reported in numerous quarters of Los Angeles that Mr. Fox will arive in Los Angeles during the coming week, it being his intention to come West immediately following the Fox convention. At the studio, however, this report could not be verified. The only statement to be made there was that Mr. Fox expects to visit the studios during June or July but the exact date that he will come West is not definitely known to the executives.

Israel Zangwill's play "Merely Mary Ann," is now in the making for the screen and will star Shirley

Three glimpses of Bessie Love, as she will look in "The Midlanders," an A. J. Callaghan production

Mason under the direction of Edward LeSaint. Raymond McKee is leading man and other principals of the cast up to date are Harry Springer, George Woodthrope and Babe London. The play will have additional members for its cast but the scenes now being made do not require the players for a week or more.

Lynn F. Reynolds, who for the past year has been directing for Universal following eighteen months with the Fox organization, has returned to the William Fox studio and is to direct Tom Mix. During Reynolds' previous engagement with Fox he directed Tom Mix, Madelaine Traverse and Peggy Hyland and his first present work will be the filming of "Three Gold Coins," Reynolds has specialized on out door pictures for the past several years and by Fox executives he is considered most capable for directing pictures of the type best suited for Mix.

William Russell has made the last scenes for "The Twins of Suffering Creek" and while supervising the editing of this subject he is working with the scenario department in the preparation of his next production. Scott Dunlap was the director of the Russell picture just finished and it is very likely he will continue with this star.

The Fox scenario department have prepared continuity for the Eileen Percy vehicle which will be entitled "The Husband Hunter." It is an adaptation from the magazine story, "Myra Meets His Family," by F. Scott Fitzgerald. Howard M. Mitchell is to direct the new Fox star and the cast selected to support her in her initial vehicle includes Emery Johnson as leading man, James Miller, Harry Dunkin, Evans Kirk, Edward McWade and John Stepling.

FIRST NATIONAL

PRESIDENT Sam Rork has purchased two novels to be used as starring vehicles for Katherine MacDonald. One of these is "The Brass Bowl," by Louis Joseph Vance, and the other, "The Second Latch-Key" by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. "The Brass Bowl" will probably be filmed next, production work being taken up upon the completion of the present subject, "Curtain" by Rita Weiman, which was directed by James Young, and who is now in charge of editing the film. Director Young is to be retained for the filming of additional MacDonald subjects.

The administration offices of the King Vidor Productions are being moved to the new studio at 7200 Santa Monica Boulevard, and all will be in readiness there in about two weeks for the filming of Vidor's third production for First National.

HERE AND THERE

THE American Film Company is next to produce a screen version of the Robert Browning poem, "A Little Woman," which is to be made under the direction of George L. Cox. Helen Jerome Eddy and Charles Clary have been selected to play the leading parts.

Maurice Tourneur is taking the final scenes for "Caleb West, Master Diver," and has selected as his next film, "The Tiger Lady," which will be the second film made by this producer with Hope Hampton in the featured part. The continuity for this is to be written by H. H. Van Loan and Catherine Carr.

The Monroe Salisbury Players have begun the filming of "The Barbarian," and will make the Brunton studios their headquarters. Salisbury and Director Donald Crisp have just returned from a two weeks trip in Northern California where they selected locations for the exterior scenes that will require two or three weeks for filming.

Only a Motion Picture Producer with a Vision of the Future of the Screen Will Be Interested in This—

WITH all its fine progress, the motion picture holds possibilities at present scarcely realized.

The greater evolution of the screen art will come within the next few years.

Much more dramatic truth, plausibility and expressiveness can be attained in the motion picture than in anything so far achieved.

The public knows this, and is becoming more exacting and discriminating in its taste.

Within two years there will be a non-theatrical field for certain types of films that will more than double the size of the theatrical field.

This announcement is addressed to motion picture producers interested in broadening the art, the appeal and the influence of the screen.

I want to be associated with a motion picture producer who has the vision to see the splendid future of the screen, and plans to proceed as such a vision dictates.

A long and important experience qualifies me to render a valuable and unique service. I have the knowledge and imagination to do distinctive things. My work has received international recognition.

If you are a motion picture producer with the vision to want such a man associated with you, address AUTHOR, Room 715, 4 East 28th Street, New York

Stanton Would Produce Foreign Masterpieces

According to Richard Stanton there is no such thing as a lack of good story material for the screen. "There are," said Mr. Stanton, "a great many foreign masterpieces that have never been utilized for the screen. I refer particularly to the colorful romances of Pierre Loti, the tragedies of Ivan Turgenief, Tolstoi and Gorky, and the farces of Marcel Prevost, Frank Widiking and Anatol Schnitzler.

"I cannot believe," continued Mr. Stanton, "that the fertile imagination of our best authors will ever fall short of meeting the demand for more and better stories, but if such a thing should happen, why can we not broaden our cinema taste by producing the great romances of other climes?"

Author Acquired Fame in Seven Years

No writer in America has risen to the heights of popularity more rapidly than Zane Grey. His first novel appeared in 1913 and won instant recognition. No other writer of American fiction has won so large a public in seven years. "Desert Gold" produced by Benj. B. Hampton, from the book of that name and "Riders of the Dawn" based on Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat" are claimed to be representative of a new development of the screen drama.

Pathe Traces Serial's Rise

Present Roster Shows Ten Stars Engaged in Making Serial Films

THE proportions to which the Pathe serial program has been built since the days when "The Perils of Pauline" was brought forward by that organization finds its best illustration in the Pathe serial-star roster for this year. Ten celebrities of the screen plays appear on the 1920 schedule.

Of the ten listed for starring honors, which include Ruth Roland, Juanita Hansen, Marguerite Courtot, Eileen Percy, Frankie Mann, George B. Seitz, Warner Oland, Charles Hutchinson, Jack Dempsey, Stuart Holmes, there are four whose names feature in two releases each for the year.

Ruth Roland, whose "Adventures of Ruth" was running when 1920 was ushered in, will be seen again in the vehicle she is now producing at the Astra Studios at Glendale, as it is planned to release "Ruth of the Rockies" during the summer months.

George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot are listed for two appearances in serial plays, "Pirate Gold," and the picture now in production at the Seitz plant in New York, "Velvet Fingers.."

Warner Oland, starred with Eileen Percy in "The Third Eye," Pathe's most recent serial offering, released May 23d, is now playing in "The Phantom Foe," in which Juanita Hansen is to make her bow as a Pathe star and which is on the 1920 list of offerings.

The working title of the serial Charles Hutchison is doing for Pathe at the Brunton Studios, is "The Double Adventure." The picture will be Mr. Hutchison's first since his return to the Pathe organization under a new contract.

Jack Dempsey, it is generally conceded, has measured up to the mark set for him by Pathe when it was decided to make him a serial star in "Daredevil Jack." Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann co-star in the Beck production of Charles Turner Dazey's story, "Trailed by Three." "The Third Eye," in which Warner Oland and Eileen Percy are featured, is reported to be listing enormous bookings.

Meighan and Warfield Traveling East

When Thomas Meighan comes East shortly he will be accompanied by no less a celebrity than David Warfield, who has recovered from his recent accident in Los Angeles, sufficiently to travel. Mr. Meighan and Mr. Warfield are warm friends. The former worked with the latter in "Return of Peter Grimm."

"Veiled Mystery" Will Be Moreno Serial

"The Veiled Mystery" is to be the title of the newest Vitagraph serial, according to an announcement this week by Albert E. Smith, president of that company. Antonio Moreno, whose work in "The Invisible Hand" and other serial productions has made him a favorite all over the country, is the star. Pauline Curley will again be seen as his leading woman.

The direction of "The Veiled Mystery" has been placed in the hands of Webster Cullison, who is sacrificing production speed to realism and minuteness of detail. At the same time, the production has reached a stage where its completion by early fall is a guaranteed certainty, and it is probable that the first episode, will be released sometime in September.

Denison Clift Off on Pleasure Jaunt

Denison Clift, writer of dramatic screen stories, and director of a number of features for William Fox, has resigned from the Fox West Coast studio to take a long contemplated tour of Europe for the purpose of studying world conditions and the great masterpieces of composition in the galleries of Rome, Florence, Paris and London.

Mr. Clift left Hollywood June 6th, and will sail from New York on June 26th, in time to arrive in Paris July 14th, for the celebration of the Fall of the Bastile.

Good Illumination Helps to Make the Barbee Beautiful

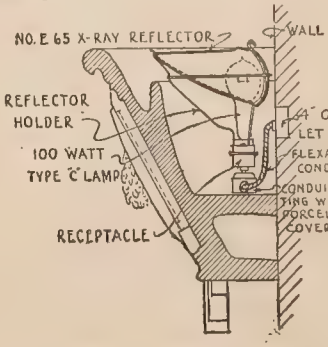
Why the "Barbee" in Chicago is Called The "Theatre Beautiful"

A Theatre Where the Illumination Was Placed in the Hands of Experts

By Darwin Curtis

ONE could hardly call it extravagance and yet the new Barbee theatre, located in the heart of the business district of Chicago, has spent an unusual sum for a most beautiful scheme of interior decoration. There was perhaps more money spent on the art work of the interior than any other one feature of the theatre.

It is not unusual to find a theatre of its magnificence ruined by that vital detail, the illumination. Would the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company permit some one in the audience to use a Claxon horn or a steamboat whistle during a recital? You probably smile at such a question, but it is no less absurd than to ask if an art institute would make it as hard as possible for visitors to see the masterpieces by hanging bare lamps in front of each picture.



The soft yellow glow of candle light is beautiful, and unharmful to its surroundings, but can you imagine lighting a modern theatre with candles? Electric lights themselves are ugly and when exposed they are never in keeping with the decorations, and the fact that they are a necessity has made the illuminating engineer use his head.

In the early stages of the electric lamp and in the days of the old chandelier scores of lamps were hung in clusters from the ceiling, or perhaps the walls and ceiling were studded with the spots of glare. In those days the art work of an interior was of little importance. Today interior decoration of the theatre means everything and the lighting plan should be carefully worked out with the end in view of bringing out this beauty to the best possible advantage.

The greatest illuminating engineers in the country have come to the conclusion that the only proper method of lighting a beautiful theatre interior is by hiding the source of light. This eliminates glare and makes vision easier. Their rule is never allow a lamp, or even part of a lamp, to show itself. In the case of the Barbee theatre the source of light is hid from view behind a cornice which encircles the auditorium about ten feet from the ceiling. Indirect lighting is the means adopted in up-to-date theatres.

In the case of indirect lighting using ceiling fixtures it is not wrong to suggest the location of the light source by the illumination of beautiful glassware in the fixtures while the source is still out of sight. The broad, light-colored, and oftentimes tinted or decorated ceiling should be the secondary light source which in turn reflects the light to the working plane. Of course, the whiter the ceiling the less is the amount of absorption. On a cloudy day, out of doors, we have diffused lighting. The entire sky is the source and shadows are hard to find. Such is the case when the ceiling of an interior is used as the sky and the absence of shadows is surprising; in fact, it very nearly resembles daylight.

By concealing the source, color lighting effects may be secured. Various colors may be blended, in fact almost any shade of color found in the spectrum may be had by using the primary colors, red, blue, green, and the combination which results in white, arranged alternately in the cornice. Now, by the use of a dimmer, any intensity of any color, or combination of two or more colors, makes these variations possible.

Cross-section of cove, Barbee's Loop theatre

After fifty per cent of the capital invested is spent on interior decoration the cost of operating the lighting system (probably less than an hour per evening) does not deserve consideration here. It is sufficient to say that the current consumption is only slightly more, if any, than in the case of any other system. At the same time, the expense of operation is interesting to us all in the case of any subject and to minimize this expense is the ambition of the man who pays the bills.

Like the rest of us, Mr. Barbee is ambitious, and after deciding to adopt "lighting from concealed sources" in his new theatre he called in an expert illuminating engineer for advice on the most efficient equipment, or in other words, the system which would direct the maximum amount of light to the ceiling. When finally laid out the cornices extending along each side of the auditorium were equipped with lamps spaced at a uniform distance apart from the front to the rear. Each lamp was equipped with its own individual reflector; a reflector made of glass with a mirrored backing, and of correct design to deliver the flux of light from the lamp outward and upward from the cornice to the ceiling. The peculiar shape of the reflector used can be easily seen in the accompanying illustration, and the cross-sectional diagram of the cornice shows its installation. The back of the reflector which is nearest the wall is curved to prevent "splash" or white streaks above each lamp.

Last Week's Blue-Print Section

A SPECIAL blueprint section in last week's issue of the NEWS was devoted to the design of the Le Rose Theatre, owned by the Jeffersonville Amusement Company of Jeffersonville, Indiana. This theatre, which cost $75,000 to build, has a seating capacity of 1,000, and was designed by Gaffney and Eppings, architects, of Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. M. Switow is the President of the firm owning the building and Mr. John F. Gillooly, Jr., is the Manager of the house.

The interior color scheme, as carried out by the architect, consists of grey, cream and blue harmonized throughout. There is no balcony, but twelve mezzanine boxes occupy the balcony position. The Manager of this theatre calls it the perfect ventilated amusement place. Above the ceiling line there are 24 Louvres, 6 x 8 feet, and in the auditorium proper, there are 30 windows. By means of these two sets of ventilating ports the air is changed without artificial help of any kind.

An equal amount of thought was given to the question of illumination. In the ceiling there are 8 art glass domes containing forty 150-watt nitrogen lamps backed by reflectors. These are controlled through dimmers which make it possible to throw any degree of illumination into the auditorium proper.

In addition to the foregoing there are 38 lights arranged above colored glass panels in the ceiling and the light shining through these panels produces one of the most beautiful effects found in any theatre in the country.

A lattice work effect with hand-painted oil flowers has been provided over the proscenium arch. This decorative matter is illuminated by 78 15-watt lamps of all colors shining through diffusers. A beautiful rainbow effect is the result. These lights burn throughout the show.

As for equipment the Le Rose is well placed. The projection room, with dimensions of 15 x 12, contains two motor-driven Powers 6-B machines. A throw of 80 feet carries the beam of light to a gold fibre screen 15 x 18. The theatre is equipped throughout with intercommunicating 'phones, and the aisles are illuminated by aislelites.

When This Theatre Was Remodelled it Was Practically Rebuilt

The New Gardner (Mass.) Theatre Not Recognized By Old Patrons

THE original Gardner theatre was built many years ago at a time when the thrifty New Englander tried to combine business and pleasure and was content to force his audience to go up stairs to a theatre so that he could rent the ground floor for income. Such a combination is so contrary to the public convenience and safety that when the Gardner theatre property was acquired by Mr. George A. Giles about one year ago he immediately decided to throw away the return from the stores and to reconstruct the theatre on the ground level, thus doing away with an extreme fire hazard and at the same time making the theatre easy of access, modern and up to date in its general arrangement. Advantage was taken of the opportunity also to make a number of changes in the arrangement, greatly improving the sight lines, the acoustics and the means of egress, also giving a far better stage and modernizing the whole structure. In the alterations the old ceiling line was retained, the balcony dropped down approximately to the former second story and the parquet level dropped to the approximate grade of the street. It was thought at first this would mean an unnecessarily high auditorium, but the proportions of the revised house have been so carefully studied that the appearance of height is even less now than it was in the old house, while the comfort of the audience, the sight lines and the exits are far more attractive than they were before, so that in every way the theatre is roomier without losing its comfortable, intimate quality and the problems of heating and ventilation are very much simplified and improved.

The entrance to the theatre is, as before, from the main street, under a new marquise projecting over the sidewalk. The recessed outer vestibule is panelled in mahogany and has a cornice and ceiling carried out in dull gold with a light stencil work beneath the cornice. Inside of the doors is a ticket office and a few steps lead up to the foyer on a level with the rear of the parquet. From this foyer a double stairway leads up to the right and left to the mezzanine lobby. This foyer is carried out in a Colonial style with white and mahogany woodwork and a very simple panelled wall Colonial treatment. Beyond it is an ample coat room and a manager's office.

The mezzanine lobby is one of the features of the theatre. The stairs lead directly into it from each side, the ceiling is covered by a broad arch with a light stencil ornament carried around for a cornice, and from this lobby steps lead up into the centre of the balcony so that there is an easy access from the first floor to the seats of the balcony without any long flights of steps. Opening off from the mezzanine lobby at each end are the men's and ladies' rooms and lavatories, all strictly first class in their appointments.

The balcony is entirely new in plan and in its sight lines. The parquet is greatly improved by the elimination of columns and the change in the lines of the soffits so that as at present arranged every seat in the house is a good one and commands an uninterrupted view of the stage.

The quality which has been most sought in the finish and decorations of the theatre is comfort and intimacy. The scheme of the decoration is a very simple one, following the general tones of Symphony Hall in Boston, the walls of the parquet being painted a strong, rich antique red, and the walls about the balcony and the upper part of the proscenium on each side carried out in tones of stone color, with a pale blue ceiling, the blue, however, being so dull as not to introduce a discordant note.

The front of the balcony and the soffit immediately adjoining is finished in a simple treatment of dull, rich gold, enlightened by a delicate checker stencil, this stencil being repeated in various parts of the house and being a feature of the whole scheme. The draperies are a deep, rich rose damask in harmony with the colors of the first story and contrasting with the colors of the balcony, and the electric fixtures are all carried out in rich dull gold and red and were supplied and installed by McKenney & Waterbury Co., of Boston. The chairs, manufactured by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield Co., are of Spanish leather and mahogany. The whole effect of the interior is quiet, homelike and intimate and the deliberate intention was to keep away from the merely theatrical type. It will be a home-going theatre, where the audience can hear, see and enjoy either pictures, drama or comedy, the theatre being fully equipped for any form of theatrical entertainment.

In connection with the alterations an entire new heating and ventilating plant has been installed which will insure comfortable conditions at all times for the audience. The heating work was carried out by McLean & Cousens, of Boston, heating contractors. The electric work, which is also new throughout, was installed by Mr. A. L. Hinds, of Gardner, Mass. The theatre alterations and finish were carried out by general contractors, John McGaw & Sons, of Boston, from the plans and under the direction of Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore, architects.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

A Hot, Stuffy, Ill-Ventilated Theatre is the Greatest Drawback to Summer Business

During the summer months you may get by with pictures that are only fair, and perhaps music that is just passable, but with a theatre that is hot and uncomfortable—NEVER. To experiment and test the correctness of this statement during the summer will cost you hundreds, perhaps thousands of dollars, therefore why not start right now to save this money and put in a assuring yourself of a big box-office return all during the hottest weather.

A delightfully cool and comfortable theatre is the one big feature that will satisfy your patrons.

It's still early with lots of hot weather yet to come.

Cleveland's New Film Exchange Building

(See front cover Equipment Section)

THE site selected for the future home of all Cleveland film exchanges and their allied industries is at the southwest corner of Payne Avenue and East 21st Street, on a lot 136 feet front by 143 feet deep. The building covers almost the entire lot, and is being erected in L shape, so as to provide better lighting facilities. It will have a basement and eight stories, being constructed of reinforced concrete, brick and terra cotta. Every new fireproof equipment of value is being used in the construction of the Cleveland Film Exchange Building, including fire doors, stoll sash, fireproof vaults, and the latest model of sprinkler system. The entire area of floor space of the building available to the motion picture industry, is 131,400 square feet.

At the present time Cleveland has twenty-eight film exchanges, located in scattered sections of the city. All of them have executed five-year leases in the new film building. The exchanges and allied industries who have committed themselves for space at this time, and who, by their support, have made the building an actuality, will pay $1.15 per square foot. Those who will execute leases in the future will pay from $1.25 a square foot up, depending upon location.

It will be a great saving to those doing business with the film interests, to find all branches of the industry all in the same building. Beside the exchanges, there will be the poster concerns, printing companies, motion picture supply industries, developing companies, and any side interests that are in any way allied to the motion picture industry.

The Film Exchange Building will be ready for occupancy by November 1st. The William Dunbar Company, of Cleveland, are general contractors for the Film Exchange Building. It is being financed by a company of Cleveland capitalists incorporated under the laws of Ohio. The directors of this company are: J. D. Paton, of the Empire Rolling Mills Company; H. H. Conaghan, of the Franklin Oil and Gas Company; W. W. Taylor, of the Taylor Machine Company; C. Clay Nims, of the William Dunbar Company; George T. Bauder, attorney; F. R. Blakeslee, insurance, and J. I. Callahan, of the James E. Milliken Company.

The Cleveland Film Exchange Building will provide every convenience possible for the exchanges, and to this end, the exchange managers have been consulted as to their requirements. According to present plans, each floor will have two completely equipped projection rooms. Each floor will have four fireproof vaults. This is said to be ample space for the purpose, and will give each exchange independent vault space.

Among the exchanges which have already signed leases for space in the Film Exchange Building are: Vitagraph, Incorporated; Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, First National Exhibitors' Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, Universal Film Exchange, Select Pictures Corporation, Republic Film Company, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Realart, Werner Films and Standard Film Service.

Holmstrom Joins Monsoon

Gustave Holmstrom

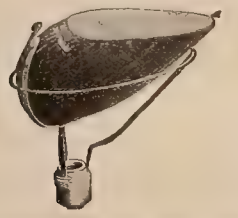
The accompanying photograph will probably be of great interest to exhibitors—that is, those exhibitors who have purchased a Monsoon Cooling System. But for the benefit of those exhibitors who are not acquainted with Monsoon and its personnel, we take pleasure in introducing Mr. Gustave Holmstrom—the highly efficient Superintendent of Monsoon installations.

After a long period spent in the service of his country on the high seas, Mr. Holmstrom has been mustered out and is now turning his attention to the installing of Monsoon Cooling Systems in theatres—to which installations his expert work adds the final touch of perfection.

Mr. Holmstrom has spent so many hours in the rigging of ships that it will seem quite homelike to him to fox-trot in the dizzy heights while looking after a Monsoon roof installation.

TEXAS

Austin—Major Geo. W. Littlefield plans to erect a $200,000 motion picture theatre at the corner of Seventh and Congress streets. The new theatre will be known as the Queen and will be managed by J. J. Hegeman.



Denison—L. M. Rideout is to erect a theatre building on West Main street. Plans are already under way and construction will begin soon.

Technical Data on the Barbee's Lighting

The auditorium of this theatre is illuminated by means of X-Ray indirect lighting from concealed sources. Hanging ceiling fixtures are entirely absent. The illumination comes from special reflector equipment placed in the cornice or cove extending along two sides of the room.

The notable feature in connection with this installation is the use of color lighting. By the use of special color mediums of red, blue and green, in connection with white, many very striking and unusual effects may be produced in the auditorium.

The equipment producing the colored illumination consists of 169 specially designed X-Ray E65 reflectors with 100 watt Mazda "C" lamps.

Reflector for indirect light, Barbee's theatre

The footlights on the stage and the equipment for lighting the proscenium arch are also arranged on four circuits so that color effects can be produced to harmonize with those in the auditorium.

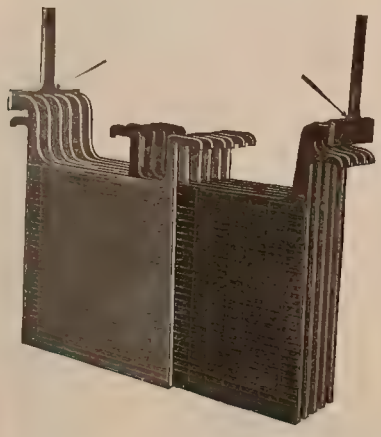
The electrolyte for a lead acid cell should be made up from sulphuric acid and water. The sulphuric acid need not be chemically pure but must be free from any impurity which is injurious to the lead plates.

In the construction of a storage battery a space is left between the bottom of the plates and the jar to allow for any sediment or active material which might fall from the plates. This space is designed to take care of all the sediment which may accumulate during the life of the cell for should it touch the plates there would be danger of short circuit.

Four-cell tray, portable lead-acid battery

In order to obtain a large capacity for a storage battery it is necessary to connect a group of plates in parallel since the total capacity depends on the surface area exposed to electrolyte. The plates for a single cell are sandwiched together being separated by wooden and rubbed separators. In order to protect the wood from the action of the acid the separators must be specially treated. They are also grooved in order to allow the escape of gases during charges.



Sectional view of Prest-O-Lite storage battery, showing interior construction

As already stated the voltage of a cell falls on discharge. The terminal voltage per cell directly after the battery comes off charge may be as high as 2.5 volts but this falls to 2. volts almost immediately when current is drawn from the battery. The terminal voltage should never be allowed to fall below 1.7 volts per cell as this is an indication that the battery is fully discharged. The more accurate guide as to the condition of a battery is a measure of the specific gravity of the cells by means of a hydrometer. The specific gravity of a cell when fully charged should be between 1.23 and 1.28 and should not be allowed to go below 1.15 as a discharge limit.

Exide lead-acid battery plate assembly, showing method by which plates are sandwiched together

When an excessive current is drawn from a battery there is danger of buckling the plates due to the rapid action in the plates. A short circuit will cause such violent action because of the evolution of gas, that there is danger of forcing out the active material where pasted plates are used in the construction of the cell.

When replacing electrolyte due to evaporation pure water only should be used. The sulphuric acid is not used up in the chemical action so that when the water is kept at such a height as to cover the plates a uniform strength of electrolyte is maintained.

Compare This With Your Projection Room

L. C. Martin, Orpheum theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., sends in a complete description of his room and accessories. He says:

AS I am quite a reader of your Projection Department News, I am sending you an outline of my booth and equipment. Am sending under separate cover a blueprint or drawing of same. It is of asbestos board, quarter-inch thick, half-inch floor, quarter-inch by 2½-2½ L. angle grove. Size of booth, 8 by 8 by 12 feet. Am using two Motiograph De Luxe Machines and a Kleigle Spotlight. Have a Transverter two phase 440 volts with a 50-50 split for the two lamps. Also have connected to the two lamps for emergency use a Mercury Rectifier 220 volts and a Compensarc Bells 110 volts. All three lines are on different transformers in the alley, so if there is any power in the city at all I will get it. And all I have to do to change currents is to throw a few switches as they are all so connected to the two lamps ready for use at any time in a minute's notice. I have three double throw two blade switches, four single throw two blade switches and one four blade switch single throw, and this amount of switches does the work perfect and you can't throw one juice into the other by this plan of switches. All wire is in conduit. I control all lights in front of the booth by three way switches. All lights can also be used on the stage switch box also as well as in the booth if so wished. I have a 16 inch exhaust fan which goes through the roof to open air, also an 8 inch vent pipe through the roof to open air over each lamp which you will note by the blue print. Hope this will or may be of service to some operator. On the Mercury Rectifier and Compensarc you have to steal from one lamp to the other. But on the transverter you can light up both lamps 50/50, and believe me it is a wonderful improvement over the motor generator set. Both machines are motor driven, also motor driven rewind. All port holes have asbestos slides and slots fuse link attachments, also fuse link and spring door if you wish to leave door open while running. In my next letter to you I will try and tell you a little about our projection. Thank you in advance for the good will of your paper by letting us operators express our opinion on a few things that would never get out if it were not for the Motion Picture News.

Reply:

The blue print of Mr. Martin's projection room not having come to light, we are publishing the letter without it. The blue print will be printed as soon as it is received.

It is evident from the description alone that Mr. Martin is well protected from all chance of loss of power supply. While his room is none too large for two machines and a spotlight it is well equipped otherwise. The ventilation is ample to take care of considerable of the heat from the arcs and the high 12-foot ceiling will make many another projectionist envious.

95% of the Machines used by the Studios and Laboratories of Los Angeles and vicinity are Power's Projectors

Gentlemen;-

We are using your projectors exclusively, ten in number, and they are giving us excellent results. Our work is very exacting, more so, in fact, than in any studio I know of. We must have perfect projection in order to judge photography and printing; poor projection would be worse than nothing. In addition, owing to the large number of companies at work, the machines are used constantly all day long, and a large part of the night---a severe strain that only mechanical perfection can meet.

The fact that we are using Power's Cameragraphs exclusively speaks for itself.

Yours very truly

World's Largest Projection Room

The projection room of the Fox Film Corporation is the largest in the world, devoted solely to motion picture machines, containing a battery of eight Power's projectors. The immense projection room which is part of the splendid new Fox Studios is nearly sixty feet long and about twelve feet wide.

The projection room, which is one of several in the Fox Studio, is used for showing films, but the full projection installation is not yet in operation. It is hoped that the laboratory projection equipment will be ready in the near future. Power's machines will be used exclusively and the projection is in charge of a corp of expert operators. Deon J. De Zittetr is in charge of Mr. Fox's private projection room and projection in other parts of the building is looked after by J. Lefante, Theo. Ridder and Fred Boehringer.

As the room is so narrow in proportion to its length that it is impossible to secure in the photograph the full effect of the "squad" of Powers lined up ready for action. The Fox projection room of course is equipped with all the modern ventilating and lighting devices which are a part of the carefully worked out plans for the entire Fox building.

Manager Boosts Projectionist

THERE has always been considerable talk about the non-concern of Managers regarding Projection. In a large percentage of cases this attitude of the Manager was correctly described. He cared no more for the projectionist's part in the box office returns than if the projectionist had been a soul-less automaton.

It is with pleasure, then, that there comes to our attention a real honest-to-gosh Manager who recognizes the immense value of good projection and the man who makes it possible. Not only does this Manager recognize these things, but he thinks so well of them himself that he calls them to the attention of his trade paper. Mr. E. B. Raifstanger, manager of the Mahaiwe Theatre at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, is the gentleman who has called our attention to the wonderfully fine work done by his projectionist (Mr. Raifstanger calls him "operator" but that makes no difference when the "operator" is better than many projectionists). The letter reads:

I have an operator here who is one of the most enthusiastic operators I have ever met and he puts his whole heart and soul into his work.

Every minute he is conscious of the fact that the audience knows he is running the show and he endeavors to give them the best that is in him every minute.

With the year ending today he has kept a record of the number of reels he has run and number of breaks and has given them to me.

We run one show in the afternoon and two in the evening and are not open Sundays.

During the year he has run 8,080 reels through his machines and has had just thirty breaks during the year, or rather, stops of any kind, whether it was a belt breaking, power being cut off or whatever it might have been—thirty was the number of stops for the whole year.

He has allowed 900 feet to the reel and this figures up to 5,454,000 feet, and with sixteen pictures on a foot he has run 87,264,000 separate pictures through his machines.

He has done such good work for us that I think such a thing should be encouraged and if you will publish this article it will help him to do better work by being encouraged and it will also give other operators something to think about.

He has kept a complete record, as follows:

Operator's Name—James Tracy, Mahaiwe Theatre, Great Barrington, Mass.

Been operating here for about two and one-half years.

Uses two 6 B motor drive Powers Machines and considers them the best thing that he can find or hopes to find.

M. H. Thoreau, of Victoria, Writes Interestingly on Several Projection Subjects

Has Something to Say About Examinations as Practised in Province of B. C.

Says Mr. Thoreau:

In answer to W. B. Allen of Edmonton in the Feb. 21 issue (rather late but I have been very busy working on several of my inventions pertaining to projection) I might say that I also believe that the censors do a lot of damage to films, since often when a subtitle has been removed (their favorite pastime up here) the splice will be an awful crude affair and make one h[illegible] of a noise in passing the intermittent sprocket. But why didn't the exchange or the Projectionist (?) who ran the picture before me, remove the offending splice? I get pictures from theatres where I am personally acquainted with the men in the projection room and how they can run a picture with some of the splices in them that they do is more than I can understand.

New pictures which as a whole are perfect except for one or two bad splices, yet they didn't have the ambition to cut them out. These men do not work in Victoria (as this house is a first run house here) but in near-by points.

I have visited their projection rooms and watched them work and wondered how they "got away with it."

Bro. Allen says "today I received the 'Lone Star Ranger,'" funny, that was because the day I received the "News" with his letter in it I also received the "Lone Star Ranger" to project. It would have been a good picture had it had a good over-hauling as it was far from worn-out but as it was it certainly was not fit for projection.

In blaming censors for some of the film damage I don't believe we can include the British Columbia board. They have a member of Local 348, Vancouver, B. C., projecting their pictures on two "Bairds" and a Simplex or two.

Mr. Oswald (the Ass't Censor and theatre inspector) is well versed on projection and I don't believe he would permit such outrages as Bro. Allen says are practiced in the eastern provinces.

I am sending the Feb. 21 issue to Mr. Oswald and possibly he will have something to add to what I have said. In the March 27 issue Bro. Allen says Mr. Hazza and their local City Electrician would probably think I was crazy if they read my examination article. Well, maybe I am crazy, but when the Vancouver local (of which I was then a member, and hope to transfer back to soon) first went after their present examination, they too had some interesting sessions with the City Electrician and most of the theatre managers.

Some of the managers became quite panicky but still the examination was held.

But today I believe that all the managers in Victoria and Vancouver realize that it was to their benefit that the examination was held. The men who were not able to pass were given ninety day permits to allow them to study up and try it again. Oh, boy, how some did study too! The result was that with the exception of three or four, they all passed and the managers received Better and More Economical Projection. Of course B. C. could certainly be improved upon, but still I believe the projectionists here average better than in any other Province or State.

Most of the B. C. projectionsts quit their studies as soon as they passed the examination, but the knowledge they gained in their studies will be a long time deserting them.

I would certainly like to hear what Bro. Allen has to say regarding the Alberts' Examination and should there be anything that he wouldn't like to publish—well my address is at the end of this letter. (Take the hint Bro. Allen?)

Some of these fine days, I hope to write my experience with examinations as I have been given four or five. Some bad, some good points, but most of them were a joke.

In the April 3 issue Myron E. York illustrates a shutter which I believe is useless. As you say the teeth are either wasting light or causing slight travel ghost, which possibly he can't see from a distance and causing a general loss of definition.

His statement that he can get as good results on A. C. as with D. C., answers itself when he says "although I have never used D. C."

York's take-up tension is causing that grinding noise at the lower sprocket the first five minutes of every reel, although a worn sprocket or improperly set idler would tend to increase the noise. I hope others won't take him too seriously when he says "it don't hurt the film any." Excessive take-up tension wears out many lower sprockets and lots of film in the course of a year.

Out-of-Focus Effect

D. J. B., Conn., writes:

I guess I will butt into the department and ask one little question which has been puzzling me for some time.

I am running two of the latest type of Simplex motor driven projectors with a throw of 70 feet. Both are on a perfect level with the screen. The right hand machine throws a perfect picture, but the other seems to be out of focus on the left of the picture, not very much, in fact, hardly noticeable, but it annoys me very much. When I get the left side in perfect focus the right side is out. Could you tell me the cause of this?

Reply: We believe that some element of your optical system is out of alignment. It may be the condenser, a sprung aperture plate or the objective. Line up the various elements and see if the out-of-focus effect does not disappear.

It might be a good idea before going to the foregoing trouble to exchange objectives if this has not already been done.

The Secret of Success

In a letter received from Walter W. Gilreath, chief of projection, Isis Theatre, Alice Theatre, Mr. Gilreath gives the formula for success in any profession when he says, "I like the work and take an interest in it." The absence of this feeling is the main reason why there are so many operators and so few projectionists. His letter reads:

I get the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and several other trade magazines. The Projection Department of the NEWS beats them all, according to my opinion. Although I seldom run up against a problem that I can't work out myself (that is with the help of a good handbook) I often pick up some good idea from my brother projectionists.

I am not such an old hand in the projection game, I guess about three years I have been in the game.

I like the work and take an interest in it, and have done quite a bit of studying the past three or four years.

Making Exchanges Behave

The following letter from J. H. Keough, of Williamsport, Pa., is on the old subject of "Who's to blame?" It is addressed to all projectionists—yes, and to operators—who have ever had to wrestle with misframes, thick splices and punch holes.

To The Projectionist:

Again I wish to thank you for my second letter appearing in your issue of April 17th, 1920.

Let us start the fight right. Subject: Why have we not perfect projection today?

Because we have so many operators that are bum ones—yes, everyone blames the poor operator and everyone knocks him to the boss until he is reduced to nothing. Well now let us see if we can't get rid of those bum operators and make projection better. Where will we start? That is what we want to know. If we are wrong give us your opinion, don't be afraid, you won't harm anyone. This country will not send you up because you try to do good. You have as much right, or I have as much right, to tell some exchange they do rotten work as it has to send you a piece of impossible projection and have your boss tell you that you know nothing. It would do just as much good for the boss to write the exchange a letter as send you that copy so I think its about time we operators or projectionists got together and rid ourselves of this reputation. Then, and not till them, will projection be perfect.

Can this be done? Yes, it can and a word of co-operation from every operator would make a big change in one week or a month.

Let us start telling the exchanges we want better work so we can give our boss the results and so he can't come back and say "You're not worth half what I pay you, your projection is so bad. The people all kick and tell me to fire you, you're no good." If you want to stand for it say nothing and 20 years from now you will have the same old story and the same old wage and the ushers will be getting more than you for working six hours and you will be in the coop for eleven hours.

Let us tell the exchanges we do not want those defects which we get today: out of focus, misframes in the picture which would mean the cutting out of a scene to eliminate the trouble; or those that shimmy all over the screen and make the people walk out wishing the operator good luck. Is this not enough to make the best operator in the business throw his hands up, and say to—— What's the use of good sharp lens, good steady machines and spending a thousand or so of your boss' money telling him of the wonderful projection you're going to have. The result is you go for an increase in your salary two or so months later. He looks at you and tells you, why man, you're not worth it, you don't know how to get a good focus on your picture, etc. Whose fault is that? Probably the exchange will say it was the camera man or some other guy, but that gets you nothing, does it now? What would the exchange say if you scratch or burned up some of their film. Your boss or you would have to pay for it. Why don't they do the same in this case in place of having the blame lodged on the poor operator by the people of his town.

This is why there are so many good operators driven to carelessness, who don't care what their projection is like or how they handle the film because the exchanges work against him.

We are far enough ahead in the booth. Let us stop and wait until the exchanges and film producers catch up with us. This is where the improvement is needed. It is only a waste of money to get this, that and the other thing and have one copy of such junk come in and spoil the name of your house after your hard work, sleep lost and time wasted fitting it up.

Listen to this. The other day I ran a picture called "The Tiger Girl." That picture knocked all the spirit out of me and made me feel like getting out. It's got fits like a rubber ball in it. I imagine if I owned it I would cut those parts out and make a new one if it cost all I had. This picture has got a man's name on it who has done a great deal for the picture game. I wonder if he knows it. If he does, I don't see why he would allow it to be sent to any house to knock down what he fought hard to build up—D. W. Griffith. As long as those people and the exchanges with the censors helping keep this up, the operator may as well lay down his tools. Some guy will say I should not have run it. I would if I were not a thousand miles from nowhere. You can't shut your boss' place up and break him. Let the film exchanges send good copy and get the good work started, then we operators will help them more, but while they work to kill us there never will be perfect projection. Give the operator a chance and after a short period there will be no bum ones. It's the bum stuff they get acts like bum drink on them.

Comment: Although there is nothing entirely new in this letter it presents conditions in such a way as to cause the reader to think about his work. Without doubt the exchange of today presents the most fertile field for the improvement in projection. There is talk, there always has been talk, on the subject of "Better and more Costly Projectors." The fact of the matter is, that projectors as now manufactured are good enough for the quality of film they are called upon to project. The costliest motor car in the world will do a poor job of moting on a poor grade of gas. The best projector that can be manufactured cannot rectify misframes, poor splices and punchholes. A picture can never be any better than the physical condition of the film although some managers seem to think otherwise. And as for exchanges, they seem to have the idea that the condition of the film has nothing to do with the quality of the picture thrown on the screen. When these things are considered it is easy to see that the first step in improving projection must start with the Exchange.

The Exchange in every case may not be the culprit who is doing the damage. It may be the Censors, as some correspondents think. It probably is the projectionist, careless, unthinking and heedless. But the Exchange is the place where the fault must be corrected as they know who used the film previous to their handling it last and if they know but do not act, it is proof enough that they care not one whit for the Manager's business.

If some of the others who happen to read these columns can add anything pro or con to this argument let the ideas come.

Motion Pictures in Natural Colors

Recent Development of French Process Soon to Be Demonstrated Here

By GEORGE M. RECLUS, Ingénieur des Arts et Manufactures

Illustrations by courtesy of L'Illustration, Paris

MOTION pictures in natural colors are today an accomplished fact. Mr. Léon Gaumont, director of the large French motion picture firm, is the inventor of this remarkable process. He gave the first demonstration in Paris on November 10, of last year, before the Académie des Sciences, and he received from this illustrous society the official recognition of his discovery.

A few days later the general public was invited to visit and judge the exposition. The first picture presented in natural colors showed the Victory Parade. The enthusiasm throughout France, which greeted the production of this historic film, bore witness to the great progress which the new development had brought to motion picture art. For here we saw the boys who marched behind Pershing through the Arc de Triomphe, no longer in black and white, but real boys in khaki with the real red-white-and-blue of Old Glory floating above their ranks.

Leon Gaumont, director of the large French motion picture firm and inventor of a remarkable process of color motion pictures

This new process, which reproduces colors and outlines perfectly, far surpasses the colored films which we have seen up to the present time, and which were, for the most part, only ordinary films colored by hand. As one will see from this article, the development and the perfecting of this discovery called for veritable inventive genius and a vast amount of patience. It called also for a highly scientific mind, guided by a thoroughly artistic spirit.

Mr. Léon Gaumont had begun his researches several years before the war. In 1913 he had given interesting, but as yet imperfect, demonstrations, both in France and in America. He was applying himself to the perfecting of his process when the war came and interrupted his researches. Immediately after the armistice, he returned to his work and several months later his efforts were crowned with success.

The principle of Mr. Gaumont's color motion pictures presents a certain analogy with the three-color process employed in the making of color engravings. It is well known that in the making of a color engraving three plates are applied to the paper—a blue, a yellow and a red plate. Suppose that instead of having three solid plates one had three identical, translucent ones—blue, yellow and red. If these three colors were simultaneously projected on a screen, one upon the other, with the greatest exactness, the result would be the same as that which is obtained on paper by the successive application of three plates. The problem to solve consisted, therefore, in obtaining these three single color photographs by direct impression, and then to accomplish their simultaneous projection upon the screen. In order to explain how this result was obtained, it may be well to recall, briefly, a few simple facts about light and colors.

The white light which we get from the sun is, in reality, composed of the entire scale of colors; this is proved by making a ray of sunlight pass through a prism of glass. We see the same colors in the rainbow, where the raindrops act on the sunlight just as does the glass prism. The things that surround us and that receive the light of the sun, absorb a part of the color rays contained in this light and reflect the others which our eyes see. That which we call the color of an object is the color of the rays of light which it reflects. Thus an object which absorbs all the rays of the sunlight, except the red rays, appears red to us. An object which does not absorb any of the color rays appears white, and that which absorbs all of them appears black. We must remember, too, that colored glass permits only light rays of its own color to filter through it. If one looks through a blue glass at a green object (a color composed of yellow and blue), the yellow rays will be stopped and the blue rays alone will pass. If, through the same blue glass, we look at a red object, no rays will pass through and the object will appear black.

Bearing in mind these elementary facts, we will see, by means of an example, how these qualities of light rays and of colored glass are utilized in the new Gaumont process.

Let us first consider simple photography and then the motion picture. For example, let us take a photograph, in natural colors, of an American flag, with a field of golden-rod as a background, and then transfer it to the screen. Let us begin by placing a red glass before the lens of the camera. The red rays alone will be able to pass through this glass and will make their impression on the plate. Consequently, when this picture is developed, we shall have an ordinary negative in black and white, upon which the red stripes of the flag will appear black. If we make a positive from this negative, by the ordinary process, we shall have a picture in black and white, in which the parts corresponding to the red stripes of the flag will be transparent, while the parts corresponding to the blue and yellow of the picture will be opaque.

Let us suppose now that without changing the position of our camera or of the flag we take a second photograph in which a blue glass is placed before the lens, and then a third, in which a yellow glass is placed there. Upon making a positive from each of these negatives we shall find that in the second photograph the blue part of the flag will appear transparent, and on the third, the yellow flowers of the golden-rod.

Electric Installation at Fox Studio Specially Designed for New Building

Eleven Foot Switchboard, Complete Fire Alarm System and New Light Control Methods Are Some of Features

THE advances in studio construction and equipment during the last year or so have been the best indications of the growth of the industry. So rapidly has studio technique gone forward that the studio pre-eminent today is probably superseded tomorrow by a new structure with far greater possibilities and with equipment of later types.

When the new Fox studio at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, New York City, was opened for inspection a few days ago, any man interested in the technical side of picture production was shown a lay-out that represented as advanced an accomplishment as can be found among such buildings anywhere.

From time to time as the various departments at the Fox Studio are completed separate articles will be carried in this publication. At present the electrical system has progressed to a point where it merits an extended treatment.

The huge studio building houses three separate sections divided into laboratory, studio and administration. To supply these establishments requires a number of direct current and alternating current supply lines. An indication of the immensity of the current demand may be gauged from the statement that when being employed at its maximum the studio itself may draw from 18,000 to 20,000 amperes.

The administrative offices are equipped throughout with duplexalites for general illumination. Projection rooms are supplied with both a. c. and d. c. for either arc or incandescent lamps. All parts of the building are in communication with each other by dictagraphs, while a 500-line P. B. X. exchange forms the connecting between the outside world and the offices within the studio walls. A complete fire alarm and central station watchman's system protects the entire building. On the studio floor a unique pilot system has been devised by the E-J Electric Co., who also laid out the entire electric layout throughout the studio. This pilot system makes it possible for watchmen to turn on pilot lights ahead of them and then to switch them off after passing the various corridors.

It is the studio floor itself that will prove to be of the greatest interest to studio technicians. At the Fox studio the floor is divided into 7 stages, 55 x 100 feet. Each stage has its complete electrical system for controlling all lighting within its area. The switchboard are each 11 feet long by 10 feet high, and for purposes of protection are enclosed in heavy mesh partitions.

On these switchboards are mounted the heavy duty, contactors which comprise the heart of the remote control system evolved at this studio. These contactors were developed by the Sundh Elec. Co., and were selected because of their ruggedness, ample rating and general satisfactory design. By means of a vacuum dash pot the noise usually accompanying contactors of this sort is practically eliminated.

The contactors are actuated either from push buttons at the switchboard or from small push button stations placed near the director. Mr. J. A. Mannheimer, of the E. J. Electric Co., in describing the equipment at the Fox Studio took special pride in the unique push button arrangement worked out for this installation. By its means any one or any number of lights on a "set" may be controlled at the will of the director by simply manipulating the "on" or "off" buttons.

In selecting, testing out and accepting much of the equipment and the new devices used in the electrical system of this studio, the word of Walter Quinlan, the chief studio electrician, had considerable weight. Mr. Quinlan has been in the technical end of the motion picture industry for a number of years, the last four with William Fox. So varied has been his experience that a large amount of the equipment at the Fox Studio was selected from his suggestions.

Devises Baby Arc

A "baby" arc light, designed to take the place of a tallow candle, to be used in fire-place scenes and also as a wall bracket or table lamp in place of the ordinary incandescent light, is the ingenious device perfected by Mr. Houck after more than five years' research and labor. The new light will be given its initial test in a forthcoming production at the Ince Studios.

The arc is of 1000 candle power and in cases where more than one light to a setting is necessary all can be illuminated through one switch, instead of by individual operation as heretofore. It is the smallest baby automatic arc ever used in studio lighting. The arc which takes the place of a match in the hands of an actor lighting a cigar is but seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and but four and one-half inches in length.

As an example of the arc's illuminating powers a test was recently made with a player lighting his cigar in a dark room. With the arc secreted in the palm of his hand and the connecting wire extended invisibly through his sleeve and down his trouser legs out of focus of the camera, the performer pressed a small button which brought the carbon together, providing a 1000 candle power light on his face.

Mr. Houck has been connected with studio electrical work for several years. Previous to studio connections he was in charge of the arc lighting system in El Paso, Texas, and for five years was connected with the Stone and Weber company of Boston.

Cooper-Hewitt Reports Good Business

Since control of the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company, Hoboken, N. J., was assumed last June by the General Electric Company, new business of the Company has more than doubled. The plant has been running to capacity and working overtime in effort to catch up with orders.

In order to meet the increased demand for industrial lighting outfits as well as motion picture apparatus, the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company has recently purchased some adjoining property. This will eventually give more than double the present floor space.

Rapid strides have been made in the improvement and development of the Cooper Hewitt lamp, chief among which is the standardization of the new 85% power factor outfit. Some radical improvements are under way which will materially increase the efficiency of this lamp.

The Engineering and Sales Departments have been materially increased by the acquisition of new men.

Abbot Invents Studio Appliances

Two inventions of paramount importance to the motion picture industry have been developed in the research laboratories of the National Film Corporation of America. Lenwood Abbott, superintendent of National's laboratory, has perfected an enlarging camera, which will make a clear-cut print from a motion picture negative. This machine will make it possible to reproduce pictures for publicity purposes without the use of a Graflex camera.

Music for Your Theatre

By Charles D. Isaacson

I CHOOSE to take the oldest stunt of the motion picture drama. The exciting chase. The plot has thickened and the cat is out of the bag. The villain is exposed for what he is, the heroine realizes all,—that she has been duped; that the hero was another man, and that she is in the clutches of an individual not entirely a gentleman. The hero is on the trail, with outraged parents of the heroine in his party. Various villagers are there, to assist in the capture of the villain, who has committed such nefarious deeds that the constable, the sheriff, the chief of police and the fire department are after him.

It is not a comedy, but a real old-fashioned melodrama.

Music? Where will we use music?

To make the entertainment more interesting. Yes! To make the audience feel the excitement more. Yes! To bring out the inner meanings of the plan. Yes! To give voice to the characters in the action. Yes!

You will remember the early days when a brilliant showman conceived the idea of using a pistol shot where a pistol was fired in the picture. It thrilled the audience, because it gave a feeling of realism. You didn't only see the shot—you heard it.

When you put music into the chase, you not only see it but you hear it. You not only hear it, but you feel it. Hearing the right kind of music is almost as exciting as being in the chase yourself. The rhythm of music has an effect on your system—your blood runs faster, your pulses beat quicker.

Where is the man whose foot doesn't start to tap when he hears a certain kind of music? Where is the man who doesn't want to march when he hears a military band? Where is the woman—and to man too—who doesn't want to get up and dance when a dreamy waltz is playing?

Do you think that it is only an idea which reacts in the intelligence when a band plays? No sir, it is a physical thing first of all. I mean that your body is acted on by some music, that the effect is unconscious, and nothing can stop it. If you hit a blow sharply on the knee, the leg jumps. Try it. The scientist tells you this is a natural phenomenon. If you rub your hands together, you generate some electricity—and if you then touch your finger to some thin paper, it sticks. If you play a note on a violin and hold it close to a piano, the note in the piano vibrates as if by a sympathetic response.

Music is all vibration. Watch the violin string and see how it vibrates. Watch the piano strings—the same thing happens. When the music is playing, the air is vibrated—that is how you hear—you understand voice, by the vibrations which hit your ear-drums.

Scientists are beginning to use vibrations to cure disease. I have personally brought musical concerts to convalescent soldiers, suffering from shell-shock, and it had a marked effect on them. Some kinds of music would drive them mad; some music had a sôftening, soothing effect, like a gentle massage. I have gone to insane asylums for the purpose of seeing how far a simple piece of music might go in its effect. Melancholy patients have smiled at some music; violent patients have been made calm by certain chords. I have put insomnia patients to sleep with certain kinds of calm, restful music; I have rested and relieved nervous patients with soft music; I have aroused dull, lethargic patients with exciting music.

(I fancy I can hear the busy motion picture executive saying: "What's the use of all this discussion? What has it to do with the box office?" But, my dear sir, let me assure you, that it has a great deal to do with the money you make; for when you get the right viewpoint on music's powers, you will then see how you can use it for your gain. Remember, last week we agreed that you must think further than the individual feature you're programming this week. You must be able to look ahead—a little bit away for the moment, from the pocketbook.)

The vibrations of music, then, you will agree, are able to affect your audience physically. You can excite them by using the proper effects. You can lash them into a fury as if you were whipping them, if you build up the correct and appropriate musical atmosphere.

On with that chase! Now hear that rushing, presto music. Notes pour over notes, racing onwards. There is a breathlessness in the style of the composition. You hear chord after chord piling on the ear. Oh, will the music cease? You can scarcely keep up with it. Almost you feel as if you are running too, after the villain. You can feel the speed of the horses; you had only seen them before, but now you are in the chase.

The beautiful heroine is distressed. What is she saying? Nothing. But what is she feeling? Ah, heart-breaking harmonies in the music show you that her spirit is crying out for pity. You are not concerned in the audience with how it is done, but you know that something has stolen into your heart and made you feel like that beautiful lass.

See the villain smiling. But do not think that he is all smiles. Listen! The jerky, guilty notes in the music give you an insight into his real self.

The hero is spied. Yes, he is brave. But how brave! Hear the bold, true, majestic strokes of the notes,—they inspire you with faith in the youth.

Now the chase grows wilder. The hero is almost upon the villain, almost within reach of his sweetheart. You, Mr. Exhibitor, must use this moment to get the maximum thrill in the audience. Are you going to let the moment go by tamely? Whip the auditors into a frenzy. Now, out with it, orchestra; now use your skill, pianist or organist; now, with all the art in you, Mr. Showman, take advantage of the pictures on the screen to make your audience wild with excitement. This is the art of showmanship. This is the moment when the right chord, the right composition, will turn the blood cold and pull the listeners to their feet. Realism comes through the voice of the screen.

The silent screen calls for a voice, and that voice is music.

Why, I could take you into a room, with only a piano for evidence, and without a picture, without a play-stage, I could make you feel the excitement of that chase. Just with the piano. . . . Just with the all-powerful compositions which have been written to excite listeners. There are bits of music which, staged with only amateur sense, would make you want to scream for fear! There are bits of music so realistic, that you would be afraid to look about you.

The chase in your picture—now, Mr. Exhibitor, do you begin to understand, or to see more clearly, how you can apply music to bring out the hidden meanings of the action, to accentuate and itensify the emotions? You are dealing with an audience of individuals, who are moved emotionally, physically, intellectually. And as we have just barely touched, there is a profit to be made in using every art to have your audiences get as much as possible in every way, out of your pictures.

We will come back again to the analysis of the musical language. But next week I want to show you the opportunity which is at your door, if you will capitalize the vast interest in good music.

(Mr. Isaacson will be glad to hear from exhibitors who have any questions or suggestions to present to him.

ASK ISAACSON WHAT TO DO

These articles tell a continuous story of music which can be turned into money in motion picture theatres.

If you are ahead of the story—if you have some specific music problem, if you have a special music query—ask Mr. Isaacson. He will answer you personally.

Information about instruments, kinds of music, musicians, scores, operas, symphonies, orchestras, travelling companies, etc., will be gladly supplied as part of the NEWS Music Service.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Edgar's Jonah Day"

(Booth Tarkington Comedy—Goldwyn—Two Reels)

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S series of "Edgar" comedies have created quite a stir in the film world because of their natural plots and characterizations, not forgetting the human touches of the author, who is in a class by himself as a painter of young boyhood. The latest entitled "Edgar's Jonah Day" is quite up to the standard of the two previous essays. While it doesn't carry the same amount of mirth-provoking incident its wealth of human values are just as strong—if not stronger. The result is it invites favorable comparison with what has gone before.

It is going to bring back memories to a good many people, for it depicts the boy being called upon by his mother to execute a disagreeable errand and his bluff at sleeping. Another incident of a peculiarly homely touch is that of the younger brother who causes trouble to the irrepressible Edgar. Do you remember the junk dealer who offered you the ridiculously small price for your old iron? Well he has his inning here. The studies are perfect samples of young boyhood and will be valued by the spectator because of their humanities. Johnny Jones as Edgar is the typical Tarkington youngster. E. Mason Hopper's direction is in harmony with the spirit of the author. Barbara Kent is the scenarist in this case. The offering is a worthy filler and would be a credit to any exhibitor's program.—LAURENCE REID.

"Worries and Wobbles"

(Vitagraph Comedy—One Reel)

ONE of the oldest ideas which ever found its way to slapstick expression is presented in the Vitagraph comedy, "Worries and Wobbles." Featuring Jimmy Aubrew, the comedian with the parted moustache, it goes back ten years and offers the drunken husband who comes home late and causes his wife all sorts of trouble. The antique treatment is even resorted to in the direction. One sees the trick work of things going around in a circle—of the street and buildings dancing up and down, so that the idea of intoxication may be conveyed to the spectator. It doesn't produce laughter but much dizziness.

When hubby gets into the house the illusive touch is still practised. Shoes travel about the floor—coins disappear and what not. Finally Jimmy tumbles into bed and the next shot shows wifey reading a book concerning the upbringing of a husband. She learns that kindness is the best treatment. But a second story man enters and Jimmy, knocking him unconscious, exchanges clothes with him. And so he escapes. Wifey is duly surprised to find a stranger in the bed. And the police are baffled in the typical slapstick way. Finally the drunken spouse is caught. The picture hasn't one mirth-provoking incident and the Rivoli audience accepted it in silence. Drunken buffoons and trick photography have lost their novelty.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Bromley Case"

(Produced by Steiner—Released by Arrow—Five Reels)

THIS is the fifth picture of the "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries" series. It follows much along the lines of its precessors. There is the usual murder and the usual mystery enshrouding it. Only in this case there are about five suspects and some audiences may get a little confused. Tex, the detective, played by Glen White, solves the mystery in the end, clears the innocent party under the shadow of suspicion, and quietly smokes his pipe to await another murder and mystery.

Ethel Russell appears as the girl, and Joseph Striker plays opposite. The love interest is well maintained despite the fact that the picture is essentially one of mystery, and this helps a lot to keep it from becoming too strained and overtense. Production is satisfactory and the entire cast is up to the average. It may not quite equal "The Trail of a Cigarette," falling a little behind it in gripping interest, but it is better than the earlier picture of this series, and can be served to any audience unless they are on a purely "love story" diet.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Dangerous Hero"

(Five-Reel Feature Starring Owen Moore—Selznick)

THIS picture won't create any unusual comment, being what might be termed an average feature. It will interest and please, however, and give entertainment to those who witness it.

The story is of the comedy variety and although it runs along smoothly and has its bright moments, it never sparkles. Still, it could have, had the characters and situations been stretched a little.

The story runs for about a couple of reels before the author reveals that it is to be a comedy and when the idea suddenly dawns upon us we feel that we have been misled and have to re-set our minds to fit the scenes that follow.

Owen Moore plays his opening scenes in a convincing manner, but when he strikes the comedy situation, he is entirely too timid.

If he had gone right into them with comedy uppermost in his mind, he would have had his audience with him and caused many laughs. Instead, he seemed to drag through the important scenes while you were expecting and waiting all the time for something funny to develop.

But he is not entirely to blame for this, for the director should have known the tempo of the scenes and should have suggested "business" for him to do.

Moor is seen as a young man in a penniless condition, who is loved by a wealthy young lady. He is still possessed of a second-hand car, which he raffles off at a picnic in the hope of gaining a few extra dollars to pay his debts. He gains the few extras, and is in a happy state of mind, when he is informed by a friend that his tailor is becoming impatient for the money owed him.

He hands over the money, owed to the impatient one, and begins to feel a bit relieved when he discovers that his former car has been set on fire and is useless.

In order to make good the loss to the one possessing the winning ticket, Moor promises to work two weeks for nothing and to do anything he is told.

An enemy of his secures the ticket, whereupon he takes our hero home with him and proceeds to make the unfortunate one the family drudge.

In this he is unsuccessful, for Moor takes no interest in the work allotted to him and in the end is ordered from the house. But not before a callous rival has tried to concoct a scheme by which to gain the heroine's love.

He, too, is unsuccessful, and after many exciting and farcical scenes in which the two "villuns," the young ladies' father, a "vamp," and hero and heroine are concerned, the final closeup shows the lovers in each other's arms.

The cast is a good one and includes Gloria Hope, Emmett King, Henry Miller, Jr., Virginia Cadwell, Charles Arling and Nell Craig.

"Monkey Business"

(Sunshine Comedy-Fox—Two Reels)

DESPITE the title, the Fox monkey does not monopolize the picture, although he and the dog get in some effective work. The plot is simply that of a husband who frequents cabarets and a shrewish wife who pursues him, leaving a very pretty baby to get into trouble while she is away. There is not so much slapstick in the two reels as there is real good gags, some of them novel, and all of them good for a big laugh.

Almost all of the regular Sunshine troupe appear, not forgetting the score or so [illegible] who romp and dance to their hearts' content in the cabaret scenes. The setting is quite elaborate and is the center of considerable of the action. The second reel is the better of the two containing some unique and side-splitting [illegible] action on the beach, when the composer [illegible] is stranded on a rock some distance from shore. The player who dives in ankle deep water should get a big laugh.—M. [illegible]

"SCRATCH MY BACK"
(Eminent Authors-Goldwyn)

Scintillating Comedy Is a Sure-Fire Hit

FOR a feature which scintillates from inception to conclusion—which sparkles with genuine flashes of wit in subtitles and situations—which travels along breezily and occasionally kidding itself—which doesn't carry a single dull moment which presents a new and refreshing type of comedian, "Scratch My Back," a picturization of Rupert Hughes' humorous story, is entitled to be called "the comedy hit of the season." In the first place it contains a genuinely farcical idea which is treated in an ideal manner. In fact it is a model of its kind because there is no attempt to embellish it with serious touches. Most farce-comedies fail on the screen because the directors think that the action must be reinforced with bits of melodramatic incident.

"Scratch My Back" doesn't resort to any foreign element. It simply relies upon its original idea which is elaborate enough to furnish sixty minutes of solid entertainment. But taking into consideration the humorous situations and the spirited acting of T. Roy Barnes and his assistants, it is the subtitles which bring out the values of the offering. No finer sample of wit and satire has ever been flashed on the screen. Each caption is a gem. One in particular brought forth a salvo of applause at the Capitol. Which is an unheard of incident at a picture theatre. It expressed the idea that "in the history of the Drama and Movia, this is the first time that a girl refused to go unaccompanied to a man's room." Perhaps Rupert Hughes wrote them. Why not? He is versatile enough.

Mr. Barnes comes to the screen with a long stage experience and introduces a breezy and refreshing manner. His style is rather unique. The role he assumes—that of a young man "who always did what he wanted to" is cut exactly for his personality. He is kidding and being kidded throughout the action. The gist of the story is his courage to scratch a woman's back at a theatre. Seated behind her he comes to the rescue with his soothing fingers, and from this novel situation arises a friendship which carries a deal of humorous complications. He is not exactly the hero since she is married to another. But he has his reward when the conclusion shows her scratching his back. The picture is well directed by Sidney Olcott—every scene and situation having its place. And the backgrounds are delightful. Helene Chadwick as the heroine, Lloyd Whitlock as the husband, and Cesare Gravine in a character study, lend admirable assistance. The offering should be a knockout with any audience.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

T. Roy Barnes, one of the foremost comedians on the stage, is making his debut in motion pictures as Val Romney in the scintillating farce-comedy "Scratch My Back," written by Rupert Hughes and directed by Sidney Olcott. This is one of the merriest and brightest pieces ever presented on the screen and Barnes scores a ten-strike as "the man who always did what he wanted to." The comedy is based upon the events that grow out of embarrassments caused by the itchy backs of Val and Madeline. In the first part of the offering Madeline is shown as a runaway convent girl who becomes a professional dancer. But she gives up this profession when her dancing partner insists on bestowing his affections upon her. She goes home and shortly after marries the American consul, Loton.

What of Romney? Well, he comes into her life when visiting the theatre. Seated immediately behind her he notices that she is having trouble in keeping quiet due to the itching of her back. Val, living up to his theory, scratches it for her. And she admires his tact and courage. Complications develop which make her husband suspicious but in the end she reciprocates Romney's sympathy by scratching his back when it itches. There is a sparkle to this piece which is spontaneous throughout. The titles are perfect gems of satire and wit. And the players assisting Mr. Barnes have caught the spirit of the comedy in splendid fashion. "Scratch My Back" doesn't carry a dull moment. It is screen comedy at its best.

PROGRAM READER

What is considered by impartial critics the breeziest and brightest farce-comedy of the year will come to the ———— theatre next ———— under the title of "Scratch My Back." This Goldwyn offering is written by Rupert Hughes and directed by Sidney Olcott and features the screen debut of T. Roy Barnes, one of the most successful comedians of the American stage. It would not do to outline this scintillating story. It must be seen to be appreciated. But rest assured that one of the most pleasurable hours of the picture theatre awaits you when you see "Scratch My Back." The subtitles are as rich as the comedy situations. And Mr. Barnes and his excellent company take full advantage of the humorous possibilities.

SUGGESTIONS

Don't fail to go after the crowds with this one. Bill it as the brightest and funniest farce comedy of the year. Tell that it introduces T. Roy Barnes to the screen. He makes his debut after a long service on the stage. Bring out that the piece is written by Rupert Hughes, one of the cleverest authors of the day. Take advantage of the title and exploit it in every way possible. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion and use catch lines, stills, and posters. Use a teaser campaign, advising your patrons that the chance is theirs to have the laugh of the season. Emphasize particularly that you stake your reputation as an exhibitor on this picture. Mention that Sidney Olcott directed and that Helene Chadwick

Bosworth's Acting and Graphic Incidents Make Entertaining Picture

THE vivid personality of Hobart Bosworth his ability to dominate his scenes through sheer dramatic power call for stories of strong ingredients. His sponsors have not erred with "Below the Surface," an original contribution by Luther Reed. And they need look no further than material based upon plots of the briny deep. He can represent the stern, resolute sea-farer better than any other actor of the screen. But instead of depicting him sailing before the mast, this picture offers him the role of a deep-sea diver. It may be called a character study, because every element of dramatic conflict is established to bring out his dominant personality.

The plot here is rather weak and won't carry truth in several instances, and much of the action is of an arbitrary kind. But there is no denying that it holds the attention. The picture starts with a punch, loses its vitality in the middle, but finishes with a powerful climax. Romance is subordinated in a Bosworth offering and its introduction here only capitalizes some theatrical melodrama. The conflict is presented in the attempt of get-rich-quick promoters to engage the diver and his son in a fraudulent enterprise. Their scheme is to use the two men as divers in locating the buried treasure of a ship. The father hesitates, but the son wilfully entertains the project. A woman is introduced whose object is to intrigue the young man into matrimony. This incident is too hurriedly executed to ring true.

The boy becomes delirious when she leaves him and the father goes to an underworld dive to bring her back. But the boat is sunk during a collision with a derelict and the promoters perish. A graphic scene. The boy refuses to believe his father's story that the woman is worthless, until he puts on his diving suit and locates her watery grave. And thus he sees her locked in the embrace of her lover. The picture is rich in the submarine shots—scene after scene presenting the divers carrying on their work in a lifelike manner. The illusion is well conveyed and Irvin Willat, the director, deserves full credit in making this part of the action vivid. Bosworth's emotion and restrain are so compelling that the spectator is always held at attention despite any story weakness of his pictures. The action, the novel incident and suspense give "Below the Surface" an adequate punch.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The sea again furnishes the background for a strongly dramatic story in Hobart Bosworth's latest photoplay, "Below the Surface," which will be seen at the ———— theatre the week of ———— the ————. The scene is a fishing village on the rocky coast of Maine and the star has the role of a stern old New England deep-sea diver. His partner is his son, Luther. The two are approached with a fraudulent enterprise to extract treasure from a sunken wreck. The old diver declines, but Luther, attracted by the pretty girl who accompanies the promotor, accepts the proposition, marrying the young woman at the same time.

Dramatic events follow, including the wrecking of a steamer, in which Luther's wife and the promoter are drowned. This scene is realistic to a degree and it carries a full quota of suspense. "Below the Surface" is a story of exciting interest. It is a vigorous document—one entirely suited to the virile personality of the star. It is filled with tremendous punches which thrill, while the heart appeal is sufficient to give it balance. Luther Reed, who wrote the story has given it all the value of his wide experience, and Irvin V. Willat, the director has endowed it with the necessary action. The star and his assistants have provided excellent performances.

PROGRAM READER

When "Below the Surface" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— you will see Hobart Bosworth, than whom there is no better actor on the screen, in a vivid love story of the sea. You will look upon underwater scenes and underworld "sharks." You will be fascinated with a father's love for a wayward son, a boy's love for an unworthy woman, a girl's love that waits and wins when the storm of passions ends. It is a picture of tremendous action. Some of its startling scenes disclose a fog, a wreck and rescue. And to give it heart interest small town charm is exploited. The most exciting sub-sea events are declared to be the most vivid and picturesque ever presented in a photoplay. Don't fail to see this pulsating drama.

CATCH LINES

They were dying down there like rats in a flood! No man could reach that depth until—See Hobart Bosworth in "Below the Surface," the most thrilling photoplay ever written.

"ALIAS MISS DODD"
(Universal)

Little Entertainment Value in This Slight Story

THERE is a semblance of a story within a story here which sort of compensates for the slight idea upon which it is founded and the mass of extraneous detail which composes the action. "Alias Miss Dodd" is episodic and brittle in plot and construction and carries very little story interest, the chief point of attraction being the presence of the personable Edith Roberts in the tile role. There can be neither rhyme nor reason in the idea of a timid old bachelor expressing romance through the employment of his imagination. He takes his diary to a bindery and the heroine, an employee, taking note of its stirring pages, seizes the opportunity to find adventure in them. So she palms herself off as the daughter.

The succeeding action is so obviously padded that it all becomes quite confusing. Even the fact that it is based upon a satirical promise doesn't save it from being preposterous. It strikes us that when she offers her relationship to the household that the younger bachelor should have registered surprise. Yet he swallows her story, "hook, line and sinker." This character is arbitrarily introduced for no other purpose than to capitalize the romance. And after a series of mild complications in which heroine is constantly threatening someone with a revolver, and a villainous brother is attempting to get his share of the estate, the old fellow states that his diary was conceived for no other purpose than to give him courage to propose matrimony to a certain middle-aged woman.

The reason is explained in his accepting the heroine as his daughter because she was too appealing to be sent about her business. A weak effort is made to instill some melodramatic fireworks with villainous brother attempting to intimidate the girl. But it carries no sting whatsoever. The only point of suspense visible is whether the author will have the heroine related to some member of the household through employing fictional license. But she is revealed in the end as only a strong imaginative girl of decided romantic tendencies. A good deal of the action has to do with dish-washing. There is very little humor and its absence emphasizes the weakness of the idea. A tiny thread of a story which threatens to snap at any moment. It doesn't carry sufficient color for Edith Roberts' vital personality.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Harry Franklin

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Edith Roberts, the piquant Universal star, who made such a good impression as Lasca in the picture of the same name, will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her newest feature entitled "Alias Miss Dodd," written by Edgar Franklin and directed by Harry Franklin. In this offering the star plays the role of an adventurous, romantic girl who is employed in a book-bindery. Upon glancing through the pages of a diary which is brought to the shop by Thomas Dodd, she decides to give up her work and bring order out of chaos in the author's life. Little does she know that the diary is a work of the old man's imagination.

A timid specimen of masculinity, he took upon himself the task of incorporating on paper what he would have liked to accomplish in real life. So it happens that the factory girl enters his domicile and palms herself off as his daughter. After a series of complications in which she is led to believe that the old man and his nephew are a couple of rogues, the truth is established and the girl is happy because of her newly found romance with Kent, the nephew. The picture may be called a satire on sentiment and it offers the star plentiful opportunities to score her delightful touches. Harry Franklin's direction is entirely capable and the other members of the cast contribute good performances.

PROGRAM READER

She picked up the rough manuscript of a diary and what she read made her blood run cold. What was the reason of the author's trouble? She would go and investigate. She would put his house in order. And so she became Alias Miss Dodd. What happens in this delightful story cannot be told here but suffice to state that it presents a novel entertainment. The picure is rich in romance and sentiment and the spirit of make-believe is well emphasized. Edith Roberts, who scored such a decided hit in "Lasca," plays her part of the adventurous, romantic girl with plenty of color and dash. She has one of the most fragrant personalities on the screen. "Alias Miss Dodd" will come to the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

There is nothing outstanding in the situation or climax which you can exploit in bringing out the values of this feature. Simply announce that it stars Edith Roberts. Make the most of the fact that she created a sensation as Lasca in the picture of that title. Use stills of her and tell that she is one of the prettiest actresses on the screen. The title might come in for some exploitation. Treat your copy in a mysterious fashion so that the patrons won't know what to expect. For newspaper copy you might print a fac-simile of a diary with certain melodramatic phrases. This will excite curiosity. Tell that it is a charming story of romance and intrigue. Use the names of the author and director.

CATCH LINES

She came to his house a total stranger and told him that she was his daughter. What happened? See Edith Roberts in "Alias Miss Dodd."

She was an adventurous girl and adventure waited for her in the pages of a diary. See Edith Roberts, the charming Universal star, in "Alias Miss Dodd."

"Remodeling Her Husband"
(New Art-Paramount)

Moth-Eaten Story Lifted by Dorothy Gish's Inimitable Humor

ONLY the presence of Dorothy Gish, with her undeniable charm and inimitable comedy, saves this piece from becoming a tiresome entertainment. We can think of no other actress who can endow the tried and true role of the young bride, whose object is to tame her husband, with so much color and personality. Whatever appeal this picture has is found in her performance, although it must be said that her leading man, James Rennie, a newcomer to the screen, gives a distinctive bit of acting. He catches the spirit of the part with true comedy insight—never for a moment losing his balance and overstepping the mark.

The idea is indexed in the pigeon-holes of producers' desks, who cater to farce-comedies, as Number 1. It is lugged out repeatedly, although there is never any attempt to refurbish it or dress it up with novel headlights. In this case "Remodeling Her Husband" runs true to form. The pattern is complete in every particular. You have the young bride who simply adores her husband and is happy to settle down in marital bliss; you have the equally young groom who is determined to indulge in just one more fling. His flirtatious disposition carries out the conflict which is mostly a series of scenes capitalizing his ability to alibi himself and his spouse's efforts to bring him to account.

There is a goodly amount of comedy business established in this mild but pleasant action due to the star's sure-fire touches, coupled with appropriate dialogue. Finally she is provoked into leaving him when he simply can't make his eyes behave. He is a trifle ashamed of her because she hasn't the dash and style of the w. k. flapper. Well, the upshot of it is she goes into business and after being separated hubby realizes what a wonderful girl she is and becomes repentant. And thus to the final clinch. There are moments when the action drags, but for the most part Dorothy Gish is there sending out shafts of her quaint humor. The idea is hardly big enough for feature expression, but the continuity is so even, the direction so spontaneous, the acting so spirited, that the lapses aren't unduly noticeable. Lillian Gish shows her versatility as the director and her ability to make the most of the story is a creditable achievement. —Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Gish, the vivacious Paramount star, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest screen comedy entitled "Remodeling Her Husband." This is a story by Dorothy Elizabeth Carter and which is directed by Lillian Gish and it presents the star in the role of a vivacious young girl who marries a man with the idea of reforming him. But her husband won't stay reformed. His weakness for a pretty face gets him into repeated difficulties, until finally Janie leaves him tearfully and proceeds to become a power in the business world. Later, however, she decides that hubby is worth while reforming and by a clever scheme, transforms him into a most submissive and repentant husband.

The piece is a jolly comedy of domestic life and the action is laughable and rapid. Scene follows scene in which Miss Gish scores her points with the certainty which made her "Little Disturber" famous. James Rennie, a prominent leading man on the stage, makes his debut in pictures here and he gives a good account of himself. In fact he proves an excellent foil for the star's quaint touches. Lillian Gish, who is also a star, has shown some prowess as a director. The offering is said to be on a par with "Boot," "Out of Luck," and similar Gish vehicles which have made the picture public laugh and which have brought the star a worthy following.

PROGRAM READER

Would you marry a good looking flirt on the chance of reforming him? Girls—isn't it a risk to marry any man to reform him of certain habits? If you have any doubts on the question go and see Dorothy Gish in her latest screen comedy, "Remodeling Her Husband," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is a bright and merry picture directed by Lillian Gish, who will surprise you in her ability to handle her players and the plot of the story. How the young wife succeeded in her task is told in five reels of delightful humor. "Remodeling Her Husband" is declared to be one of the liveliest and most entertaining of the recent Gish features. James Rennie, a newcomer to the screen is her leading man. His ability and personality will bring him a large following.

SUGGESTIONS

A Dorothy Gish picture should be exploited on the personality of the star. Make much of the fact that she is popularly called the Little Disturber. And as of her recent features have been based upon some idea which emphasizes the kid part she had in "Hearts of the World." Tell that the star has an ideal vehicle for her piquant personality and her vivacious humor. Explain that the picture is a worthy successor to "Boots," and "Out of Luck." Report that she is in a sprightly farce-comedy which exploits the idea of a young bride reforming her flirtatious husband. Treat your copy in a humorous manner. Tell something of James Rennie, the leading man. He was an aviator during the war. Make mention that Dorothy Gish's sister, Lillian, is the director. And emphasize the fact that the picture is femininely unanimous. It is written, directed and featured by women.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to February 7, 1920.

"THE NOTORIOUS MRS. SANDS"

(Robertson-Cole)

Trite Story with Interesting and Dramatic Moments

AN average feature which is mildly entertaining. It is of the society-drama variety, with a theme which has been used many times—the sacrifice of a young society girl by her mother to a wealthy man whose money is used as an aid to pay off old debts.

The picture, however, has its interesting and dramatic moments and contains enough suspense to excite the emotions. But its weaknesses lie in the fact that the story has no new twist.

The heroine is seen falling in love with a young man who has lost his fortune and who goes west in the employ of his rival to retrieve it. Meanwhile the latter marries the girl, but is unable to hold her because of his jealous conduct. The big scene between the two shows the husband choking and then roughly throwing the wife to the floor—a rather strong and exciting moment.

Scenes in the courtroom follow, the husband accusing his rival of robbing his safe.

The wife's testimony clears the accused and after a separation, in which hero goes to South America and heroine becomes a school teacher, they are brought together again in the final scenes.

Bessie Barriscale is convincing in the title role, wearing many beautiful gowns to set off the character. She is supported by an excellent cast.

Careful direction both in the planning of sets, the selection of exteriors and detail in action is a notable feature of the picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Mary Ware ..... Bessie Barriscale
Ronald Cliffe ..... Forrest Stanley
Dulcie Charteris ..... Dorothy Cumming
Grey Sands ..... Harry Meyers
Child ..... Ben Alexander

Story by M. B. Havey.
Directed by Wm. Christy Cabanne.
Cameraman Eugene Gaudio.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale, in her latest Robertson-Cole success, "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," will appear at this theatre on ———— of ———— week.

In this society-drama, Miss Barriscale has a role that should please her many followers and give them interesting and exciting entertainment.

As Mary Ware, a society girl, she falls in love with Ronald Cliffe, a young man who has squandered his fortune.

Her mother, however, is desirous of her marriage to Grey Sands, a wealthy man, whose fortune would help to pay off some of the old debts. Ronald secures a position in the employ of his rival, goes west and is succeeding in his new job, when news is brought to him of Sands marriage to Mary.

But the marriage did not turn out as Sands had hoped to have it. For Mary did not love him. In a jealous rage he attempts to choke her and finding this has no effect, accuses Ronald of robbing his safe and has him arrested.

Our heroine, however, comes to the latter's rescue and proves his innocence. After a separation in which heroine becomes a school teacher and hero goes to South America they are brought together for a beautiful finish.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— announces that "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," a Robertson-Cole feature starring Bessie Barriscale, will be the attraction at this house on ———— of ———— week.

In this picture Miss Barriscale will be seen in a new and entirely different role from anyone she has ever portrayed before. It is a society drama containing thrills, dramatic moments and plenty of suspense.

She was a society girl in love with a young man who had squandered his fortune. But her mother was anxious that she marry a wealthy man whose fortune could be used as an aid to pay off some old debts.

The mother attained her object, but lived to regret it, for our heroine did not love the man she married.

And he, in his jealous rage, attempted to choke her into submission. Seeing that this had not the desired effect, he accused the young man of robbing his safe and had him brought into court.

All to no avail, as the husband soon found out. For the young wife's testimony cleared the accused and secured his acquittal.

Heroine now becomes a school teacher and hero goes to South America, after which they are brought together in a beautiful finish.

SUGGESTIONS

This is just an average feature and should not be played up too strongly with the idea of misleading your patrons into the belief that it is excellent entertainment.

In houses where they are given to society-dramas, it will of course go much better than in the others.

Bessie Barriscale is your best bet in exploitation. Tell them that she will be seen in a new and different role and one in which she wears many beautiful gowns.

You might play up the big scene between husband and wife, in which the husband does the choking act, and use catch lines asking why he did this, etc.

Also mention the cast, which is a good one, well known and excellent as to types and acting ability.

CATCH LINES

She loved him and yet she did not marry him. Why? See Bessie Barriscale in "The Notorious Mrs. Sands."

What was her mother's object in forcing her to marry the wealthy man? See "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," it will tell you.

What was the reason that caused husband and wife to separate? See "The Notorious Mrs. Sands."

He loved her and yet could not marry her? Why? See "The Notorious Mrs. Sands."

Was her mother right in wishing her to marry a wealthy man? See "The Notorious Mrs. Sands."

"WHITE LIES"

(Fox)

Story of France in Wartimes Is Strong in Plot

NO one can say that "White Lies" is lacking in plot material. The complications are numerous and emotional almost to the point of being tragic. The interest is held by the many tense situations, and with the pleasing sprinkling of French uniforms it should make an attractive drama for the fans that like the heavy stuff. Gladys Brockwell is the star. The character is sympathetic and Miss Brockwell gets past the emotional spots without being over emotional or mawkish. She does better work in this than in her past few pictures.

There is nothing psychological about the picture. Character development is not emphasized and is subordinated to the weighty plot. The overheard prayer, and the mistaken-for-dead ideas are worked in, and the innocent-girl-shouldering-the-blame also pops up. A French baroness has two daughters who try to keep from her the knowledge that the family is almost destitute. But the new owner of the chateau is most chivalrous and in order that the baroness may keep her home without humiliation, offers to marry the star. The girl, believing her lover a traitor to France, consents. But, of course, the lover turns up and proves that he is not a traitor, so when her husband is reported lost at sea, the two are married. Thereupon the first husband returns to prove that he was not lost at sea. A younger sister claims the baby and her own romance is shattered. Everything seems a terrible mess in the fifth reel until the chivalrous husband number one straightens things out.

The romance of the two sisters provide plenty of love interest, and when inexorable and somewhat coincidental fate shatters them both there are good climaxtic scenes. There are no war scenes, and not a German appears in the picture. Neither are there any mutilated soldiers or weeping widows, and therefore the setting should have no deleterious effect. Rather it creates a romantic and piquant interest. Support, direction and detail hit one hundred per cent.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Josephine ..... Gladys Brockwell
Lieut. Camille Du Jordin ..... William Scott
Baroness De Beaurepaire ..... Josephine Crowell
Edouard Riviere ..... Evans Kirk
Rose ..... Violet Schram
Colonel Jean Raynal ..... Charles K. French
Monsieur Perrin ..... Howard Scott
Jacintha ..... Lule Warrenton

From the novel of Charles Reade.
Scenario by Charles Wilson.
Direction by Edward J. LeSaint.
Photography by Harry Harris.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

On ———— "White Lies," a picturization of the novel by Charles Reade, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre. Gladys Brockwell, who already has a large and enthusiastic following of picture fans in ————, is the star of this drama, which is laid in France during and after the Great War. It shows no gruesome battle scenes, however, and deals chiefly with the trials and patience of the women who stayed at home during the struggle.

A picturesque and beautiful castle was found to be the scene of the chateau in Southern France where Baroness De Beaurepaire and her two daughters strive to keep up appearances on their limited income. To Madame the chateau is the dearest thing in life, so her two daughters, Josephine, played by Gladys Brockwell, and Rose, resort to harmless, white lies, to keep her from knowing that their old home has been sold and that a new owner is to take possession.

The plot develops rapidly and the picturesqueness of quaint and rustic France has been faithfully represented on the screen. Besides the star there are a host of old favorites in the cast, many of whom will be recognized by all picture lovers. William Scott plays opposite Miss Brockwell, and Josephine Crowell and Charles K. French help to make the picture one of the most interesting of the year. Charles Reade, from whose novel the picture is adapted, is the author of "The Cloister and the Hearth," which proved one of the best sellers when it was first published.

PROGRAM READER

Once in a blue moon they make a picture so filled with strong dramatic interest, and real gripping plot situations as "White Lies," the photoplay which will be shown at this theatre on ———— Gladys Brockwell, well known throughout filmdom as one of the leading emotional actresses of today, is the star and she is supported by a cast who see that none of the drama of this unique story is lost in the picturization. Although the story is laid in France during the Great War, you need not fear that you will witness a succession of gruesome and unreal battle scenes, for there is nothing in the picture but absorbingly dramatic scenes. It is filled with the tale of love and sacrifice, and the chivalry of the noble manhood of France. Charles Reade wrote the story, which is adapted from his recently published novel. Love, pathos, the inexorable crash of circumstances, and the deep, sincere respect for womanhood by a self-sacrificing soldier of France are all revealed before your eyes in a series of gripping and elaborately produced incidents.

SUGGESTIONS

Do not give your patrons the impression that they are going to see a bloody war picture. Tell them the setting, for it is a good one, and let them know that it is a story of old-world aristocrats. Boost Gladys Brockwell in your advertising, and determine the extent of this boosting from the popularity of her previous pictures. Show such stills as have the uniform of France prominent in them. They should appeal. Make the question of "White Lies" personal in your catch lines.

Eight Ready for Reelcraft

Short Subjects Are Delivered to General Office in New York City

EIGHT more pictures have been completed for the exclusive short subject program of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, and delivered to the general office in New York.

Alice Howell has completed "Rubes and Romance" at the Chicago studio of Reelcraft, produced under the directorship of Frederick J. Ireland and Dick Smith, who also plays a prominent part in the picture.

The Hollywood studio has forwarded to the general office four single reel comedies of the Billy Franey series, all directed by George Jeske, titled, "The Hasher," "Hard Cider," "The Glutton" and "Hook, Line and Sinker."

Texas Guinan has completed her twelfth two-reel Western drama under the direction of Jay Hunt, titled, "The Girl of the Rancho." With the completion of this picture Miss Guinan left on the Overland Limited for a vacation at her home in New York.

Milburn Moranti has finished another two-reel farce comedy which he has titled "Barber Shop Gossip," making a total of nine pictures ready in advance of release date which has been set for June 20. The Matty Roubert producing unit has completed the sample print of "Circus Day" which is in the general office for screening for exhibitors.

All of the above mentioned pictures are released by the thirty-six Reelcraft and allied exchanges throughout the United States, covering every principal city and territory.

Showing Arouses Interest

Many to See "Madonnas and Men" at Its Screening in New York

MUCH interest is being shown in the forthcoming trade presentation of "Madonnas and Men," which takes place at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre in New York on Sunday evening, June 13.

The showing is being given to allow those connected with the motion picture industry to see just what sort of a photodrama "Madonnas and Men" really is. That interest is at a high pitch is evidenced by the fact that requests for seats have come into the Jans offices not only from local men but from exchange men, exhibitors and others from out of town; several planning to attend the showing who will come to New York from cities miles away.

It is said that in the elaborate series of scenes, which carry one from the days of the Coliseum at Rome to the days of the Broadway cabarets, are without an equal in photodramatic production. As an instance of what may be expected it might be mentioned that a Roman ampitheatre was especially erected for the background for some of the action while such scenes as chariot races, a slave market, lion's dens, the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, a Broadway cabaret in full blast and many other astounding views are shown in the picture.

France Likes Our Pictures

So Says Leon Madieu, of Pathe Cinema, on Visit to United States

THAT American films are predominant in the picture market of France, and that the French public seems to take pleasure in attributing to them technical qualities of the highest kind, is the keynote of a statement made by Leon Madieu, chairman of the Board of Directors of Pathe Cinema, Paris, who lately arrived on a visit to this country, and immediately plunged into an exhaustive inspection of American methods of picture production.

Mr. Madieu, who is also treasurer of Pathe Exchange, Inc., of the United States, of which Paul Brunet is vice-president and general manager, is personally conducting his researches into both the art and commercial sides of the film industry here.

"Aside from the excellent qualities," said Mr. Madieu, "observed in American direction and acting so highly esteemed in France, the mentality of the French masses in general would require stronger and better constructed scenarios. It is my belief, moreover, that, in the very near future, the American public itself will make the same demands.

"In France, great efforts have been made in the detailed production of artistic emotional photoplay. One of the latest works that Pathe Exchange Inc. has chosen is the fascinating drama by Abel Grance, entitled 'J'Accuse.'

"I have also been asked how the Italian product is received in France. A considerable number of reels have crossed the frontier, but very few of them have met with success."

"The Evil Eye" Proves Popular in Music

A new song publication, "The Evil Eye," designed to exploit the Hallmark serial of the same title, which features Benny Leonard, is now going the round of the vaudeville houses and cabarets.

Clermont Opens Offic in New York City

Hannibal N. Clermont, president of the Clermont Photoplays Corporation of Los Angeles has been in New York for the past several weeks. Mr. Clermont is opening Eastern offices. The new Clermont studios at Gower and Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, have just been completed. The studios are fully equipped and will accommodate three companies.

The other officers of the Clermont Photoplays Corporation include: Edson D. Clarage, first vice president; W. D. Ball, second vice president; Charles R. Hadley, third vice-president, and C. Beebach, secretary and treasurer. John T. Carlton is production manager and Charles Blyth, assistant.

Mr. Clermont has just purchased "Beyond the Cross Roads" by Bradley King, as a vehicle for the second Clermont production.

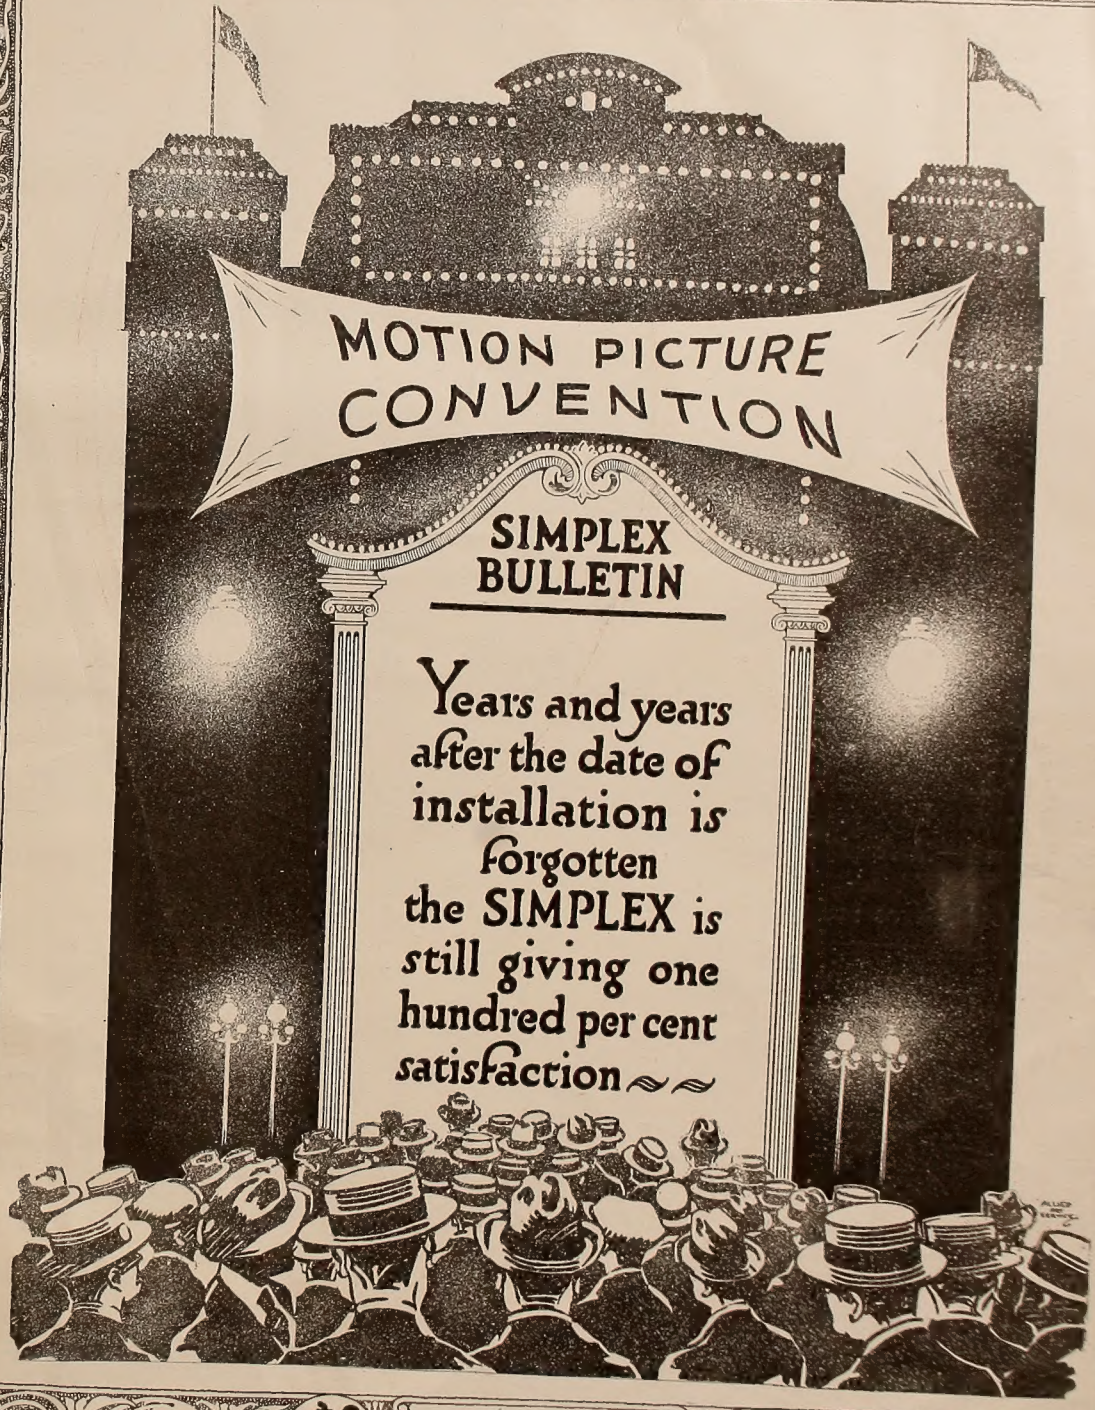
Southern Rights Sold on Fine Arts Pictures

Fine Art Pictures, Inc., announces that they have disposed of the rights to their six-reel supercomedy "Up In Mary's Attic" for the six southern states, consisting of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee to the E. & H. Film Distributing Co. of Atlanta, Ga.

As a part of the campaign of this release, a song has been written, entitled "Up In Mary's Attic" which will be linked up to the presentation of the picture in all sections of the country.

Charles F. Schwerin, treasurer and general sales manager of the company, attended the convention of exhibitors in Cleveland, O., where he disposed of further territory.

Hallroom Comedies Are Entirely Sold



With the entire foreign rights for the Hallroom Boys Comedies disposed of for 1920 and two succeeding years to the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and the complete domestic distribution of these well known two-reelers already under contract, Jack and Harry Cohn, the producers, are now concentrating their efforts on production and exploitation of the series.

A campaign to aid exhibitors in the exploitation of the series is now about to be launched, which, it is believed, will greatly enhance the box-office values of the comedies for exhibitors.

Community to Release Big Superfeature

"To-morrow," a superfeature made by the Community Productions, Inc., is about to be released. The picture was produced under Director Ashley Miller, and the story by C. S. Clancy, is said to be one of the most engrossing type, built upon a theme that has gripped the minds of men since the world began. The length taken to produce this feature as well as the reticence on the producers regarding it, make it especially noteworthy.
